CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 6, 1886.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress convened this day.

The Senators assembled in the Senate Chamber in the Capitol at Washington city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. JOHN SHERMAN, a Senator from the State of Ohio) took the chair and called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Thou Giver of all good, inspire our hearts with true devotion that we may worship Thee acceptably. We adore Thee, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Amid these emblems of mourning teach us the right meaning of life. We thank Thee for the good hope through grace of the life that shall never end.

In Thy kind providence, O Lord, Thou hast brought us again together, preserved during these months of separation, and we pray Thee now fill these Thy servants with Thy spirit as they enter upon the trying and responsible duties that lie before them. Bless them in their persons, in their families, in their social relations, and amid the duties of every day so fill them with Thy good spirit that their souls may be preserved in peace, that the best interests of the country may be advanced, and that God's glory may be promoted.

Bless our Government, we pray Thee, in all its departments. Forget not the President. Endue him with wisdom, and grant so to guide all the departments of this Government in its legislative, judicial, and executive branches that God's glory may be enhanced, and that the interests of the people may everywhere be promoted.

Bless us as a nation, saving us from the evils that environ us. Prosper us in all our industries, put Thy fear in the hearts of all the people, and make us a God-fearing nation, a law-abiding people, exalting us among the nations of the earth, and giving unto us that righteousness which will secure the divine blessing.

Preserve to us our freedom, our institutions of religion, Thy Word, Thy day, Thy house, and all that tends to promote the welfare of this great nation.

God of our Fathers, hear us, forgive us, enter not into judgment with us, and grant unto us Thy peace, the peace of God that passeth all understanding. We ask it in the name of Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. EDMUNDS and SAULSBURY were appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a full and complete statement of all property in his possession belonging to the United States December 6, 1886, and of the amounts received from the sale of waste paper; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter of the Supervising Architect, recommending an increase of appropriation for the custom-house, &c., at Galveston; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives at the last session were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 191) providing for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, Cal.; and

A bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Ohio Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of 203 ministers and representing 49,759 members, and a petition of the East Ohio Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of 250 ministers and representing 48,000 members, praying for the passage of laws to suppress persecution of the Chinese, and especially for the passage of the so-called indemnity bill; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of Edward C. Fiedler, of New York, praying the Government of the United States to constrain the Government of Brazil to make compensation for the charter of the steamship Circassian; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of Marble Creek Grange, No. 2077, of Iron County, Missouri, in favor of the passage of the bill to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with colleges in the States; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CALL. I present several petitions purporting to be signed by a thousand citizens of Polk County, in the State of Florida, praying for the forfeiture of the Florida Railroad land grant made in 1856, and for such immediate action by Congress as will protect actual settlers and finally settle the title to the land. I ask the immediate and favorable consideration of this petition by the Committee on Public Lands. The interests of the people of Florida demand the final settlement of this question and the opening of this land to occupation and ownership by the people of the United States in small bodies.

These petitions state truly that the land has become very valuable by the construction of other lines of railroad since the time fixed in the act making the grant for its expiration and its reversion to the United States.

These petitions state that if this grant is to be held good, the land, which belongs to the people and was bought and paid for with the public money, will be held at speculative values, and beyond the reach of the great body of the people and for the benefit of a small body of citizens, to enable them to force the laboring men and women to pay them out of their labor such prices as they may demand from them as the sole condition of their having homes on the public domain. I respectfully ask an early consideration of these important statements. The public opinion of the country, in my opinion, imperatively and justly demands such action by Congress as will promote and favor the ownership, occupation, and cultivation of the soil by the people in small bodies. I shall take occasion at an early day to urge these considerations on the Senate.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of Maj. Gen. Schuyler Hamilton, praying for the enactment of certain legislation for his relief; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2892) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company," approved May 17, 1862, and acts amendatory thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAULSBURY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2893) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company," approved March 3, 1875; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2894) for the construction of a canal from St. Augustine, Fla., to Indian River; also, connecting with the St. John's River; and for deepening Indian River to Jupiter Inlet; and for the payment of the work already done upon said canal by a company incorporated under the laws of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (S. 2895) for the relief of Minerva Brando, mother of William B. Brando, late private of Company D, One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment New York State Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2900) granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Thomas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, what is the order of business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last order was bills and joint resolutions. The introduction of concurrent or other resolutions is now in order.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I offer a resolution, and ask for its present consideration. It merely calls for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, as we cannot hear a word of what is being read, I ask the Senator from Oregon to consent that the resolution may go over and be printed so that we can see it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will go over under the rule and be printed.

Mr. BECK. I would not object to its being read if we could hear it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I appreciate the objection. I could not hear it myself. I desire, however, to have the whole of it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be printed in the RECORD and also be printed in resolution form.

Mr. BECK. Let it be printed in the RECORD so that we can see it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed as suggested.

The resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, is as follows:

Whereas the Congress adjourned its last session on the 5th day of August last; and by the provisions of the bill commonly known as the River and Harbor bill, which became a law on that day, large appropriations were made, and were on that day immediately available, for the continuation of certain improvements of rivers and harbors in the State of Oregon and Washington Territory; including $187,500 for the further prosecution of the work of constructing a canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River; $187,500 for the continuation of improvements at the mouth of the Columbia River; $75,000 for the continuation of the improvement at the entrance to Yaquina Bay, Oregon; and $33,750 for the continuation of work on the improvement of Coos Bay, Oregon; and

Whereas it is alleged that no work whatever was done toward utilizing said appropriation for work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia until about the 10th day of October last, over two months after said appropriation was available, and thus losing, as it is alleged by those most interested in the early completion of said work, the great advantage of low water, good weather, and long days; and during which time, it is alleged, said work could have been carried on at much less expense and to much greater advantage; and

Whereas it is further alleged the expenditure of the other appropriations above referred to has been postponed by the War Department or its engineers, until next spring; and

Whereas the boards of trade at Portland, Oreg., and The Dalles, Oreg., representing those sections and communities largely interested in the speedy completion of the works for which such appropriations were made, including also the Columbia Water-Way Convention recently in session at Vancouver, Wash., have all deprecated the delays in the prosecution of such works, and have some of them also adopted strong resolutions of regret that Maj. W. A. Jones, a major of United States engineers, and it is alleged for about two years last past in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, should, as it is alleged he was, after he had submitted his project for the expenditure of said appropriation for the continuation of work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, be relieved by his superiors and displaced by the assignment to said work of Capt. Charles F. Powell, a captain of United States engineers, thus occasioning further delay necessarily incident to any change at such a time; and

Whereas the Senators and Representative from the State of Oregon have by such representative bodies, or some of them, been requested to inquire as to the cause of such delays in the utilization of said appropriations: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to advise the Senate at his earliest practicable convenience as to what change or changes, if any, have been made in the United States engineers in charge of the construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River since the 5th day of August last; and in charge of any of the river or harbor improvements in Oregon and Washington Territory since said date; and the date and character of any such change or changes; the names of the engineers relieved, changed, or transferred, and in what respect changed or transferred, and their rank respectively, and the reasons for such change or changes; also, in case any such change has been made, whether the engineer relieved had prior to such change or transfer submitted to the Chief of Engineers his project or plan for the expenditure of such appropriations; and whether or not the same had been approved or rejected by the Chief of Engineers or Acting Chief of Engineers or War Department prior to such change or transfer of engineers in charge; also what change, if any, has been made in the plan of work or the manner of proposed expenditure of such appropriation since the date of such change of engineers; also, if such change of engineers was made, what works were in charge of such engineers, respectively, for the two years prior to such change; and, further, what river or harbor works or improvements have such engineers been in charge of since the date of such change.

Also that the Secretary of War be further directed to report to the Senate further, at his earliest practicable convenience, whether it is true, as alleged, or otherwise, that the work at the mouth of the Columbia, at the entrance to Yaquina Bay, and at Coos Bay, Oregon, has been postponed until next spring, and the reasons in detail for such postponement.

And, further, that he transmit to the Senate with such reports, and as a part thereof, full copies of all correspondence, whether by letter or telegram, occurring between the War Department or any of its officers, and any officer, board of trade, chamber of commerce, water-way convention, or person whomsoever, since August 5, 1886, relative to the expenditure of the appropriations above referred to, and each of them; or relative to any change of engineers in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River; or relative to the change of engineers in charge of any of the works or improvements above specified.

OBSTRUCTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions the Calendar under the eighth rule is now in order. The Secretary will report the first case on the Calendar.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 299, a bill (S. 64) to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters, and to protect public works against trespass or injury.

Mr. MILLER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule. The attention of Senators is requested to the fact that the Calendar is now being proceeded with under objection under the eighth rule.

Mr. MILLER. I do not desire to take this bill out of its order and put it under the ninth rule, but as the Senator who has it in charge is not here I ask that it be passed by informally, holding its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed over informally.

CINNABAR AND CLARK'S FORK RAILROAD.

The bill (S. 980) granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. There is an adverse report or a minority report on that bill.

RECESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think it is usual to wait for the organization of the other House and a communication with the President before the ordinary business of the Senate goes on. I suggest, therefore, that business be suspended, or we take a short recess until the other House can inform us of their organization, before going on with the business.

Mr. HARRIS. It is impossible for us to hear a word that the Senator from Vermont has uttered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not my fault.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not suppose it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the fault of the galleries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please come to order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was saying that I thought it was not usual to proceed with the ordinary business of the Senate until we should have communicated with the House of Representatives, and ordinarily have received a communication from the President of the United States. I hope, therefore, in the confusion, &c., that we may suspend business until the ordinary formalities shall have been gone through with, and I move that the Senate take a recess for ten minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now take a recess for ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate re-assembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr., the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I have been directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

I am further directed to inform the Senate that the House has passed a resolution that a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

I am also directed to announce that the House has appointed Mr. REAGAN of Texas, Mr. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, and Mr. REED of Maine, the committee on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock, which will give time to communicate with the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at 2 o'clock p. m. the Senate reassembled.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. SAULSBURY, the committee appointed in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared below the bar, and

Mr. EDMUNDS said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate and House of Representatives to wait on the President of the United States and inform him of the meeting and organization of the two Houses and their readiness to receive any message he might have to communicate, has performed that duty, and the President asks us to say to the two Houses, as we now do to the Senate, that he congratulates them upon their safe return to the Capitol, their speedy organization and readiness to proceed, and that he will communicate with them in writing immediately.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

At 2 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m., Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the Secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary of the Senate (Mr. ANSON G. MCCOOK) read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

In discharge of a constitutional duty, and following a well-established precedent in the Executive office, I herewith transmit to the Congress at its reassembling, certain information concerning the state of the Union, together with such recommendations for legislative consideration, as appear necessary and expedient.

Our Government has consistently maintained its relations of friendship toward all other powers, and of neighborly interest toward those whose possessions are contiguous to our own. Few questions have arisen during the past year with other governments, and none of those are beyond the reach of settlement in friendly counsel.

We are as yet without provision for the settlement of claims of citizens of the United States against Chile for injuries during the late war with Peru and Bolivia. The mixed commissions, organized under claims conventions, concluded by the Chilean government with certain European states, have developed an amount of friction which we trust can be avoided in the convention which our representative at Santiago is authorized to negotiate.

The cruel treatment of inoffensive Chinese has, I regret to say, been repeated in some of the far western States and Territories, and acts of violence against those people, beyond the power of the local constituted authorities to prevent, and difficult to punish, are reported even in distant Alaska. Much of this violence can be traced to race prejudice and competition of labor, which cannot, however, justify the oppression of strangers whose safety is guaranteed by our treaty with China equally with the most favored nations.

In opening our vast domain to alien elements, the purpose of our law-givers was to invite assimilation, and not to provide an arena for endless antagonisms. The paramount duty of maintaining public order and defending the interests of our own people, may require the adoption of measures of restriction, but they should not tolerate the oppression of individuals of a special race. I am not without assurance that the government of China, whose friendly disposition towards us I am most happy to recognize, will meet us half way in devising a comprehensive remedy, by which an effective limitation of Chinese emigration, joined to protection of those Chinese subjects who remain in this country, may be secured.

Legislation is needed to execute the provisions of our Chinese convention of 1880 touching the opium traffic.

While the good will of the Colombian government toward our country is manifest, the situation of American interests on the Isthmus of Panama has at times excited concern, and invited friendly action looking to the performance of the engagements of the two nations concerning the territory embraced in the interoceanic transit. With the subsidence of the Isthmian disturbances, and the erection of the State of Panama into a federal district under the direct government of the constitutional administration of Bogotá, a new order of things has been inaugurated which, although as yet somewhat experimental and affording scope for arbitrary exercise of power by the delegates of the national authority, promises much improvement.

The sympathy between the people of the United States and France, born during our colonial struggle for independence and continuing today, has received a fresh impulse in the successful completion and dedication of the colossal statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World" in New York harbor—the gift of Frenchmen to Americans.

A convention between the United States and certain other powers for the protection of submarine cables was signed at Paris on March 14, 1884, and has been duly ratified and proclaimed by this Government. By agreement between the high contracting parties this convention is to go into effect on the 1st of January next, but the legislation required for its execution in the United States has not yet been adopted. I earnestly recommend its enactment.

Cases have continued to occur in Germany giving rise to much correspondence in relation to the privilege of sojourn of our naturalized citizens of German origin revisiting the land of their birth, yet I am happy to state that our relations with that country have lost none of their accustomed cordiality.

The claims for interest upon the amount of tonnage dues illegally exacted from certain German steamship lines were favorably reported in both Houses of Congress at the last session, and I trust will receive final and favorable action at an early day.

The recommendations contained in my last annual message in relation to a mode of settlement of the fishery rights in the waters of British North America—so long a subject of anxious difference between the United States and Great Britain—was met by an adverse vote of the Senate on April 13th last; and thereupon negotiations were instituted to obtain an agreement with Her Britannic Majesty's Government for the promulgation of such joint interpretation and definition of the article of the Convention of 1818, relating to the territorial waters and inshore fisheries of the British provinces, as should secure the Canadian rights from encroachment by United States fishermen, and, at the same time, insure the enjoyment by the latter of the privileges guaranteed to them by such convention.

The questions involved are of long standing, of grave consequence, and from time to time for nearly three-quarters of a century, have given rise to earnest international discussions, not unaccompanied by irritation.

Temporary arrangements by treaties have served to allay friction—which, however, has revived as each treaty was terminated. The last arrangement, under the treaty of 1871, was abrogated after due notice by the United States on June 30, 1885, but I was enabled to obtain for our fishermen for the remainder of that season enjoyment of the full privileges accorded by the terminated treaty.

The Joint High Commission by whom the treaty had been negotiated—although invested with plenary power to make a permanent settlement—were content with a temporary arrangement, after the termination of which the question was relegated to the stipulations of the treaty of 1818, as to the first article of which no construction satisfactory to both countries has ever been agreed upon.

The progress of civilization and growth of population in the British provinces to which the fisheries in question are contiguous, and the expansion of commercial intercourse between them and the United States, present to-day a condition of affairs scarcely realizable at the date of the negotiations of 1818.

New and vast interests have been brought into existence; modes of intercourse between the respective countries have been invented and multiplied; the methods of conducting the fisheries have been wholly changed; and all this is necessarily entitled to candid and careful consideration in the adjustment of the terms and conditions of intercourse and commerce between the United States and their neighbors along a frontier of over 3,500 miles.

This propinquity, community of language and occupation, and similarity of political and social institutions indicate the practicability and obvious wisdom of maintaining mutually beneficial and friendly relations.

Whilst I am unfeignedly desirous that such relations should exist between us and the inhabitants of Canada, yet the action of their officials during the past season towards our fishermen has been such as to seriously threaten their continuance.

Although disappointed in my efforts to secure a satisfactory settlement of the fishery question, negotiations are still pending, with reasonable hope that before the close of the present session of Congress announcement may be made that an acceptable conclusion has been reached.

As at an early day there may be laid before Congress the correspondence of the Department of State in relation to this important subject, so that the history of the past fishing season may be fully disclosed and the action and the attitude of the Administration clearly comprehended, a more extended reference is not deemed necessary in this communication.

The recommendation, submitted last year, that provision be made for a preliminary reconnoissance of the conventional boundary line between Alaska and British Columbia is renewed.

I express my unhesitating conviction that the intimacy of our relations with Hawaii should be emphasized. As a result of the reciprocity treaty of 1875, those islands, on the highway of Oriental and Australasian traffic, are virtually an outpost of American commerce and a stepping-stone to the growing trade of the Pacific. The Polynesian island groups have been so absorbed by other and more powerful governments, that the Hawaiian Islands are left almost alone in the enjoyment of their autonomy, which it is important for us should be preserved. Our treaty is now terminable on one year's notice, but propositions to abrogate it would be, in my judgment, most ill-advised. The paramount influence we have there acquired, once relinquished, could only with difficulty be regained, and a valuable ground of vantage for ourselves might be converted into a stronghold for our commercial competitors. I earnestly recommend that the existing treaty stipulations be extended for a further term of seven years. A recently signed treaty to this end is now before the Senate.

The importance of telegraphic communication between those islands and the United States should not be overlooked.

The question of a general revision of the treaties of Japan is again under discussion at Tokio. As the first to open relations with that empire, and as the nation in most direct commercial relation with Japan, the United States have lost no opportunity to testify their consistent friendship by supporting the just claims of Japan to autonomy and independence among nations.

A treaty of extradition between the United States and Japan, the first concluded by that empire, has been lately proclaimed.

The weakness of Liberia and the difficulty of maintaining effective sovereignty over its outlying districts, have exposed that republic to encroachment. It can not be forgotten that this distant community is an offshoot of our own system, owing its origin to the associated benevolence of American citizens, whose praiseworthy efforts to create a nucleus of civilization in the dark continent have commanded respect and sympathy everywhere, especially in this country. Although a formal protectorate over Liberia is contrary to our traditional policy, the moral right and duty of the United States to assist in all proper ways in the maintenance of its integrity is obvious, and has been consistently announced during nearly half a century. I recommend that, in the reorganization of our Navy, a small vessel, no longer found adequate to our needs, be presented to Liberia, to be employed by it in the protection of its coastwise revenues.

The encouraging development of beneficial and intimate relations between the United States and Mexico, which has been so marked within the past few years, is at once the occasion of congratulation and of friendly solicitude. I urgently renew my former representation of the need of speedy legislation by Congress to carry into effect the Reciprocity Commercial Convention of January 20, 1883.

Our commercial treaty of 1831 with Mexico was terminated, according to its provisions, in 1881, upon notification given by Mexico in pursuance of her announced policy of recasting all her commercial treaties. Mexico has since concluded with several foreign governments new treaties of commerce and navigation, defining alien rights of trade, property, and residence, treatment of shipping, consular privileges, and the like. Our yet unexecuted Reciprocity Convention of 1883 covers none of these points, the settlement of which is so necessary to good relationship. I propose to initiate with Mexico negotiations for a new and enlarged treaty of commerce and navigation.

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, I communicated to that body on August 2 last, and also to the House of Representatives, the correspondence in the case of A. K. Cutting, an American citizen, then imprisoned in Mexico, charged with the commission of a penal offense in Texas, of which a Mexican citizen was the object.

After demand had been made for his release the charge against him was amended so as to include a violation of Mexican law within Mexican territory.

This joinder of alleged offenses, one within and the other exterior to Mexico, induced me to order a special investigation of the case—pending which Mr. Cutting was released.

The incident has, however, disclosed a claim of jurisdiction by Mexico, novel in our history, whereby any offense, committed anywhere by a foreigner, penal in the place of its commission, and of which a Mexican is the object, may, if the offender be found in Mexico, be there tried and punished in conformity with Mexican laws.

This jurisdiction was sustained by the courts of Mexico in the Cutting case, and approved by the executive branch of that government, upon the authority of a Mexican statute. The appellate court, in releasing Mr. Cutting, decided that the abandonment of the complaint by the Mexican citizen aggrieved by the alleged crime (a libelous publication), removed the basis of further prosecution, and also declared justice to have been satisfied by the enforcement of a small part of the original sentence.

The admission of such a pretension would be attended with serious results, invasive of the jurisdiction of this Government, and highly dangerous to our citizens in foreign lands; therefore I have denied it, and protested against its attempted exercise, as unwarranted by the principles of law and international usages.

A sovereign has jurisdiction of offenses which take effect within his territory, although concocted or commenced outside of it; but the right is denied of any foreign sovereign to punish a citizen of the United States for an offense consummated on our soil in violation of our laws, even though the offense be against a subject or citizen of such sovereign. The Mexican statute in question makes the claim broadly, and the principle, if conceded, would create a dual responsibility in the citizen, and lead to inextricable confusion, destructive of that certainty in the law which is an essential of liberty.

When citizens of the United States voluntarily go into a foreign country they must abide by the laws there in force, and will not be protected by their own Government from the consequences of an offense against those laws committed in such foreign country; but watchful care and interest of this Government over its citizens are not relinquished because they have gone abroad; and if charged with crime committed in the foreign land, a fair and open trial, conducted with decent regard for justice and humanity, will be demanded for them. With less than that this Government will not be content when the life or liberty of its citizens is at stake.

Whatever the degree to which extra territorial criminal jurisdiction may have been formerly allowed by consent and reciprocal agreement among certain of the European states, no such doctrine or practice was ever known to the laws of this country, or of that from which our institutions have mainly been derived.

In the case of Mexico there are reasons especially strong for perfect harmony in the mutual exercise of jurisdiction. Nature has made us irrevocably neighbors, and wisdom and kind feeling should make us friends.

The overflow of capital and enterprise from the United States is a potent factor in assisting the development of the resources of Mexico, and in building up the prosperity of both countries.

To assist this good work all grounds of apprehension for the security of person and property should be removed; and I trust that in the interests of good neighborhood the statute referred to will be so modified as to eliminate the present possibilities of danger to the peace of the two countries.

The Government of the Netherlands has exhibited concern in relation to certain features of our tariff laws, which are supposed by them to be aimed at a class of tobacco produced in the Dutch East Indies. Comment would seem unnecessary upon the unwisdom of legislation appearing to have a special national discrimination for its object, which, although unintentional, may give rise to injurious retaliation.

The establishment, less than four years ago, of a legation at Teheran is bearing fruit in the interest exhibited by the Shah's Government in the industrial activity of the United States and the opportunities of beneficial interchanges.

Stable government is now happily restored in Peru by the election of a constitutional President, and a period of rehabilitation is entered upon. But the recovery is necessarily slow from the exhaustion caused by the late war, and civil disturbances. A convention to adjust, by arbitration, claims of our citizens has been proposed, and is under consideration.

The naval officer who bore to Siberia the testimonials bestowed by Congress in recognition of the aid given to the Jeannette survivors, has successfully accomplished his mission. His interesting report will be submitted. It is pleasant to know that this mark of appreciation has been welcomed by the Russian government and people as befits the traditional friendship of the two countries.

Civil perturbations in the Samoan Islands have during the past few years been a source of considerable embarrassment to the three governments, Germany, Great Britain, and the United States, whose relations and extraterritorial rights in that important group are guaranteed by treaties. The weakness of the native administration and the conflict of opposing interests in the Islands have led King Malietoa to seek alliance or protection in some one quarter, regardless of the distinct engagements whereby no one of the three treaty powers may acquire any paramount or exclusive interest. In May last Malietoa offered to place Samoa under the protection of the United States, and the late consul, without authority, assumed to grant it. The proceeding was promptly disavowed, and the overzealous official recalled. Special agents of the three governments have been deputed to examine the situation in the Islands. With a change in the representation of all three powers, and a harmonious understanding between them, the peace, prosperity, autonomous administration, and neutrality of Samoa can hardly fail to be secured.

It appearing that the government of Spain did not extend to the flag of the United States in the Antilles the full measure of reciprocity requisite under our statute for the continuance of the suspension of discriminations against the Spanish flag in our ports, I was constrained in October last to rescind my predecessor's proclamation of February 14, 1884, permitting such suspension. An arrangement was, however, speedily reached, and upon notification from the government of Spain that all differential treatment of our vessels and their cargoes, from the United States or from any foreign country, had been completely and absolutely relinquished, I availed myself of the discretion conferred by law, and issued on the 27th of October my proclamation, declaring reciprocal suspension in the United States. It is most gratifying to bear testimony to the earnest spirit in which the government of the Queen Regent has met our efforts to avert the initiation of commercial discriminations and reprisals, which are ever disastrous to the material interests and the political good will of the countries they may affect.

The profitable development of the large commercial exchanges between the United States and the Spanish Antilles is naturally an object of solicitude. Lying close at our doors, and finding here their main markets of supply and demand, the welfare of Cuba and Porto Rico and their production and trade, are scarcely less important to us than to Spain. Their commercial and financial movements are so naturally a part of our system that no obstacle to fuller and freer intercourse should be permitted to exist. The standing instructions of our representatives at Madrid and Havana have for years been to leave no effort unessayed to further these ends; and at no time has the equal good desire of Spain been more hopefully manifested than now.

The government of Spain, by removing the consular tonnage fees on cargoes shipped to the Antilles, and by reducing passport fees, has shown its recognition of the needs of less trammeled intercourse.

An effort has been made during the past year to remove the hinderances to the proclamation of the treaty of naturalization with the Sublime Porte, signed in 1874, which has remained inoperative owing to a disagreement of interpretation of the clauses relative to the effects of the return to and sojourn of a naturalized citizen in the land of origin. I trust soon to be able to announce a favorable settlement of the differences as to this interpretation.

It has been highly satisfactory to note the improved treatment of American missionaries in Turkey, as has been attested by their acknowledgments to our late minister to that government of his successful exertions in their behalf.

The exchange of ratifications of the convention of December 5, 1885, with Venezuela, for the reopening of the awards of the Caracas Commission under the Claims Convention of 1866, has not yet been effected owing to the delay of the Executive of that republic in ratifying the measure. I trust that this postponement will be brief; but should it much longer continue, the delay may well be regarded as a rescission of the compact and a failure on the part of Venezuela to complete an arrangement so persistently sought by her during many years and assented to by this Government in a spirit of international fairness, although to the detriment of holders of bona fide awards of the impugned commission.

I renew the recommendation of my last annual message, that existing legislation concerning citizenship and naturalization be revised. We have treaties with many states providing for the renunciation of citizenship by naturalized aliens, but no statute is found to give effect to such engagements, nor any which provides a needed central bureau for the registration of naturalized citizens.

Experience suggests that our statutes regulating extradition might be advantageously amended by a provision for the transit across our territory, now a convenient thoroughfare of travel from one foreign country to another, of fugitives surrendered by a foreign government to a third state. Such provisions are not unusual in the legislation of other countries, and tend to prevent the miscarriage of justice. It is also desirable, in order to remove present uncertainties, that authority should be conferred on the Secretary of State to issue a certificate in case of an arrest for the purpose of extradition, to the officer before whom the proceeding is pending, showing that a requisition for the surrender of the person charged has been duly made. Such a certificate, if required to be received before the prisoner's examination, would prevent a long and expensive judicial inquiry into a charge which the foreign government might not desire to press. I also recommend that express provision be made for the immediate discharge from custody of persons committed for extradition where the President is of opinion that surrender should not be made.

The drift of sentiment in civilized communities towards full recognition of the rights of property in the creations of the human intellect has brought about the adoption, by many important nations, of an International Copyright Convention, which was signed at Berne on the 18th of September, 1885.

Inasmuch as the Constitution gives to Congress the power "to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries," this Government did not feel warranted in becoming a signatory pending the action of Congress upon measures of international copyright now before it, but the right of adhesion to the Berne Convention hereafter, has been reserved. I trust the subject will receive at your hands the attention it deserves, and that the just claims of authors, so urgently pressed, will be duly heeded.

Representations continue to be made to me of the injurious effect upon American artists studying abroad and having free access to the art collections of foreign countries, of maintaining a discriminating duty against the introduction of the works of their brother artists of other countries; and I am induced to repeat my recommendation for the abolition of that tax.

Pursuant to a provision of the diplomatic and consular appropriation act, approved July 1, 1886, the estimates submitted by the Secretary of State for the maintenance of the consular service have been recast, on the basis of salaries for all officers to whom such allowance is deemed advisable. Advantage has been taken of this to redistribute the salaries of the offices now appropriated for, in accordance with the work performed, the importance of the representative duties of the incumbent, and the cost of living at each post. The last consideration has been too often lost sight of in the allowances heretofore made. The compensation which may suffice for the decent maintenance of a worthy and capable officer in a position of onerous and representative trust at a post readily accessible, and where the necessaries of life are abundant and cheap, may prove an inadequate pittance in distant lands, where the better part of a year's pay is consumed in reaching the post of duty, and where the comforts of ordinary civilized existence can only be obtained with difficulty and at exorbitant cost. I trust that, in considering the submitted schedules, no mistaken theory of economy will perpetuate a system which in the past has virtually closed to deserving talent many offices where capacity and attainments of a high order are indispensable, and in not a few instances has brought discredit on our national character and entailed embarrassment and even suffering on those deputed to uphold our dignity and interests abroad.

In connection with this subject I earnestly reiterate the practical necessity of supplying some mode of trustworthy inspection and report, of the manner in which the consulates are conducted. In the absence of such reliable information, efficiency can scarcely be rewarded, or its opposite corrected.

Increasing competition in trade has directed attention to the value of the consular reports printed by the Department of State, and the efforts of the Government to extend the practical usefulness of these reports have created a wider demand for them at home and a spirit of emulation abroad. Constituting a record of the changes occurring in trade and of the progress of the arts and invention in foreign countries, they are much sought for by all interested in the subjects which they embrace.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury exhibits in detail the condition of the public finances and of the several branches of the Government related to his Department. I especially direct the attention of the Congress to the recommendations contained in this and the last preceding report of the Secretary, touching the simplification and amendment of the laws relating to the collection of our revenues; and in the interest of economy and justice to the Government, I hope they may be adopted by appropriate legislation.

The ordinary receipts of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, were $336,439,727.06. Of this amount $192,905,023.41 was received from customs and $116,805,936.48 from internal revenue. The total receipts, as here stated, were $13,749,020.68 greater than for the previous year, but the increase from customs was $11,434,084.10, and from internal revenue $4,407,210.94, making a gain in these items for the last year of $15,841,295.04—a falling off in other resources reducing the total increase to the smaller amount mentioned.

The expense at the different custom-houses, of collecting this increased customs revenue was less than the expense attending the collection of such revenue for the preceding year by $490,608; and the increased receipts of internal revenue were collected at a cost to the Internal Revenue Bureau $155,944.99 less than the expense of such collection for the previous year.

The total ordinary expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, were $242,483,138.50, being less by $17,788,797 than such expenditures for the year preceding, and leaving a surplus in the Treasury at the close of the last fiscal year of $93,956,588.56 as against $63,463,771.27 at the close of the previous year, being an increase in such surplus of $30,492,817.29.

The expenditures are compared with those of the preceding fiscal year and classified as follows:

	Year ending June 30, 1886.	Year ending June 30, 1885.
For civil expenses	$21,955,604 04	$23,826,942 11
For foreign intercourse	1,332,320 88	5,439,609 11
For Indians	6,099,158 17	6,552,494 63
For pensions	63,404,864 03	56,102,267 49
For the military, including river and harbor improvements and arsenals	34,324,152 74	42,670,578 47
For the Navy, including vessels, machinery, and improvement of navy-yards	13,907,887 74	16,021,079 69
For interest on public debt	50,580,145 97	51,386,256 47
For the District of Columbia	2,892,321 89	3,499,630 95
Miscellaneous expenditures, including public buildings, light-houses, and collecting the revenue	47,986,683 04	54,728,056 21

For the current year to end June 30, 1887, the ascertained receipts up to October 1, 1886, with such receipts estimated for the remainder of the year, amount to $356,000,000.

The expenditures ascertained and estimated for the same period are $266,000,000, indicating an anticipated surplus at the close of the year of $90,000,000.

The total value of the exports from the United States to foreign countries during the fiscal year is stated and compared with the preceding year as follows:

	For the year ending June 30, 1886.	For the year ending June 30, 1885.
Domestic merchandise	$665,964,529 00	$726,682,946 00
Foreign merchandise	13,560,301 00	15,506,809 00
Gold	42,952,191 00	8,477,892 00
Silver	29,511,219 00	33,753,633 00

The value of some of our leading exports during the last fiscal year, as compared with the value of the same for the year immediately preceding, is here given, and furnishes information both interesting and suggestive:

	For the year ending June 30, 1886.	For the year ending June 30, 1885.
Cotton and cotton manufactures	$219,045,576 00	$213,799,049 00
Tobacco and its manufactures	30,424,908 00	24,767,305 00
Breadstuffs	125,846,558 00	160,370,821 00
Provisions	90,625,216 00	107,332,456 00

Our imports during the last fiscal year, as compared with the previous year, were as follows:

	1886.	1885.
Merchandise	$635,436,136 00	$579,580,053 80
Gold	20,743,349 00	26,691,696 00
Silver	17,850,307 00	16,550,627 00

In my last annual message to the Congress attention was directed to the fact that the revenues of the Government exceeded its actual needs; and it was suggested that legislative action should be taken to relieve the people from the unnecessary burden of taxation thus made apparent.

In view of the pressing importance of the subject I deem it my duty to again urge its consideration.

The income of the Government, by its increased volume and through economies in its collection, is now more than ever in excess of public necessities. The application of the surplus to the payment of such portion of the public debt as is now at our option subject to extinguishment, if continued at the rate which has lately prevailed, would retire that class of indebtedness within less than one year from this date. Thus a continuation of our present revenue system would soon result in the receipt of an annual income much greater than necessary to meet Government expenses, with no indebtedness upon which it could be applied. We should then be confronted with a vast quantity of money, the circulating medium of the people, hoarded in the Treasury when it should be in their hands, or we should be drawn into wasteful public extravagance with all the corrupting national demoralization which follows in its train.

But it is not the simple existence of this surplus and its threatened attendant evils, which furnish the strongest argument against our present scale of Federal taxation. Its worst phase is the exaction of such a surplus through a perversion of the relations between the people and their Government, and a dangerous departure from the rules which limit the right of Federal taxation.

Good government, and especially the government of which every American citizen boasts, has for its objects, the protection of every person within its care in the greatest liberty consistent with the good order of society, and his perfect security in the enjoyment of his earnings, with the least possible diminution for public needs. When more of the people's substance is exacted through the form of taxation than is necessary to meet the just obligations of the Government and the expense of its economical administration, such exaction becomes ruthless extortion and a violation of the fundamental principles of a free Government.

The indirect manner in which these exactions are made, has a tendency to conceal their true character and their extent. But we have arrived at a stage of superfluous revenue which has aroused the people to a realization of the fact, that the amount raised professedly for the support of the Government, is paid by them as absolutely, if added to the price of the things which supply their daily wants, as if it was paid at fixed periods into the hand of the tax-gatherer.

Those who toil for daily wages are beginning to understand that capital, though sometimes vaunting its importance and clamoring for the protection and favor of the Government, is dull and sluggish, till, touched by the magical hand of labor, it springs into activity, furnishing an occasion for Federal taxation and gaining the value which enables it to bear its burden. And the laboring man is thoughtfully inquiring whether in these circumstances, and considering the tribute he constantly pays into the public Treasury as he supplies his daily wants, he receives his fair share of advantages.

There is also a suspicion abroad that the surplus of our revenues indicates abnormal and exceptional business profits, which, under the system which produces such surplus, increase without corresponding benefit to the people at large, the vast accumulations of a few among our citizens whose fortunes, rivaling the wealth of the most favored in antidemocratic nations, are not the natural growth of a steady, plain and industrious republic.

Our farmers too, and those engaged directly and indirectly in supplying the products of agriculture, see that day by day, and as often as the daily wants of their households recur, they are forced to pay excessive and needless taxation, while their products struggle in foreign markets with the competition of nations, which by allowing a freer exchange of productions than we permit, enable their people to sell for prices which distress the American farmer.

As every patriotic citizen rejoices in the constantly increasing pride of our people in American citizenship and in the glory of our national achievements and progress, a sentiment prevails that the leading-strings useful to a nation in its infancy, may well be to a great extent discarded in the present stage of American ingenuity, courage and fearless self-reliance. And for the privilege of indulging this sentiment with true American enthusiasm, our citizens are quite willing to forego an idle surplus in the public Treasury.

And all the people know that the average rate of Federal taxation upon imports is to-day, in time of peace, but little less, while upon some articles of necessary consumption it is actually more, than was imposed by the grievous burden willingly borne, at a time when the Government needed millions to maintain by war the safety and integrity of the Union.

It has been the policy of the Government to collect the principal part of its revenues by a tax upon imports; and no change in this policy is desirable. But the present condition of affairs constrains our people to demand, that by a revision of our revenue laws, the receipts of the Government shall be reduced to the necessary expense of its economical administration; and this demand should be recognized and obeyed by the people's representatives in the legislative branch of the Government.

In readjusting the burdens of Federal taxation, a sound public policy requires that such of our citizens as have built up large and important industries under present conditions, should not be suddenly and to their injury, deprived of advantages to which they have adapted their business; but if the public good requires it, they should be content with such consideration as shall deal fairly and cautiously with their interests, while the just demand of the people for relief from needless taxation is honestly answered.

A reasonable and timely submission to such a demand should certainly be possible without disastrous shock to any interest; and a cheerful concession sometimes averts abrupt and heedless action, often the outgrowth of impatience and delayed justice.

Due regard should be also accorded in any proposed readjustment, to the interests of American labor so far as they are involved. We congratulate ourselves that there is among us no laboring class fixed within unyielding bounds and doomed under all conditions to the inexorable fate of daily toil. We recognize in labor a chief factor in the wealth of the republic, and we treat those who have it in their keeping as citizens entitled to the most careful regard and thoughtful attention. This regard and attention should be awarded them, not only because labor is the capital of our workingmen, justly entitled to its share of Government favor, but for the further and not less important reason, that the laboring man surrounded by his family in his humble home, as a consumer is vitally interested in all that cheapens the cost of living and enables him to bring within his domestic circle, additional comforts and advantages.

This relation of the workingman to the revenue laws of the country, and the manner in which it palpably influences the question of wages, should not be forgotten in the justifiable prominence given to the proper maintenance of the supply and protection of well-paid labor. And these considerations suggest such an arrangement of Government revenues as shall reduce the expense of living, while it does not curtail the opportunity for work nor reduce the compensation of American labor, and injuriously affect its condition and the dignified place it holds in the estimation of our people.

But our farmers and agriculturists—those who from the soil produce the things consumed by all—are perhaps more directly and plainly concerned than any other of our citizens, in a just and careful system of Federal taxation. Those actually engaged in and more remotely connected with this kind of work, number nearly one-half of our population. None labor harder or more continuously than they. No enactments limit their hours of toil, and no interposition of the Government enhances to any great extent the value of their products. And yet for many of the necessaries and comforts of life, which the most scrupulous economy enables them to bring into their homes, and for their implements of husbandry, they are obliged to pay a price largely increased by an unnatural profit which, by the action of the Government, is given to the more favored manufacturer.

I recommend that, keeping in view all these considerations, the increasing and unnecessary surplus of national income annually accumulating, be released to the people, by an amendment to our revenue laws which shall cheapen the price of the necessaries of life and give freer entrance to such imported materials as by American labor may be manufactured into marketable commodities.

Nothing can be accomplished, however, in the direction of this much-needed reform, unless the subject is approached in a patriotic spirit of devotion to the interests of the entire country and with a willingness to yield something for the public good.

The sum paid upon the public debt during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, was $44,551,043.36.

During the twelve months ended October 31, 1886, three per cent. bonds were called for redemption amounting to $127,283,100, of which $80,643,200 was so called to answer the requirements of the law relating to the sinking fund and $46,639,900 for the purpose of reducing the public debt by application of a part of the surplus in the Treasury to that object. Of the bonds thus called $102,269,450 became subject under such calls to redemption prior to November 1, 1886. The remainder, amounting to $25,013,650, matured under the calls after that date.

In addition to the amount subject to payment and cancellation prior to November 1st, there were also paid before that day certain of these bonds, with the interest thereon, amounting to $5,072,350, which were anticipated as to their maturity, of which $2,664,850 had not been called. Thus $107,341,800 had been actually applied prior to the 1st of November, 1886, to the extinguishment of our bonded and interest-bearing debt, leaving on that day still outstanding the sum of $1,153,443,112. Of this amount $86,848,700 were still represented by three per cent. bonds. They, however, have been since November 1st, or will at once be, further reduced by $22,606,150, being bonds which have been called, as already stated, but not redeemed and canceled before the latter date.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, there were coined under the compulsory silver-coinage act of 1878, 29,838,905 silver dollars, and the cost of the silver used in such coinage was $23,448,960.01. There had been coined up to the close of the previous fiscal year under the provisions of the law, 203,882,554 silver dollars, and on the 1st day of December, 1886, the total amount of such coinage was $247,131,549.

The Director of the Mint reports that at the time of the passage of the law of 1878 directing this coinage, the intrinsic value of the dollars thus coined was ninety-four and one-fourth cents each, and that on the 31st day of July, 1886, the price of silver reached the lowest stage ever known, so that the intrinsic or bullion price of our standard silver dollar at that date was less than seventy-two cents. The price of silver on the 30th day of November last was such as to make these dollars intrinsically worth seventy-eight cents each.

These differences in value of the coins represent the fluctuations in the price of silver, and they certainly do not indicate that compulsory coinage by the Government enhances the price of that commodity or secures uniformity in its value.

Every fair and legal effort has been made by the Treasury Department to distribute this currency among the people. The withdrawal of United States Treasury notes of small denominations, and the issuing of small silver certificates have been resorted to in the endeavor to accomplish this result, in obedience to the will and sentiments of the representatives of the people in the Congress. On the 27th day of November, 1886, the people held of these coins, or certificates representing them, the nominal sum of $166,873,041, and we still had $79,464,345 in the Treasury—as against about $142,894,055 so in the hands of the people, and $72,865,376 remaining in the Treasury one year ago.

The Director of the Mint again urges the necessity of more vault room for the purpose of storing these silver dollars which are not needed for circulation by the people.

I have seen no reason to change the views expressed in my last annual message on the subject of this compulsory coinage; and I again urge its suspension on the grounds contained in my former recommendation, reinforced by the significant increase of our gold exportations during the last year, as appears by the comparative statement herewith presented, and for the further reasons that the more this currency is distributed among the people the greater becomes our duty to protect it from disaster; that we now have abundance for all our needs; and that there seems but little propriety in building vaults to store such currency when the only pretense for its coinage is the necessity of its use by the people as a circulating medium.

The great number of suits now pending in the United States courts for the southern district of New York, growing out of the collection of customs revenue at the port of New York, and the number of such suits that are almost daily instituted, are certainly worthy the attention of the Congress. These legal controversies based upon conflicting views by importers and the collector as to the interpretation of our present complex and indefinite revenue laws, might be largely obviated by an amendment of those laws.

But pending such amendment the present condition of this litigation should be relieved. There are now pending about twenty-five hundred of these suits. More than eleven hundred have been commenced within the past eighteen months, and many of the others have been at issue for more than twenty-five years. These delays subject the Government to loss of evidence and prevent the preparation necessary to defeat unjust and fictitious claims, while constantly accruing interest threatens to double the demands involved.

In the present condition of the dockets of the courts, well filled with private suits, and of the force allowed the district attorney, no greater than is necessary for the ordinary and current business of his office, these revenue litigations can not be considered.

In default of the adoption by the Congress of a plan for the general reorganization of the Federal courts as has been heretofore recommended, I urge the propriety of passing a law permitting the appointment of an additional Federal judge in the district where these Government suits have accumulated, so that by continuous sessions of the courts devoted to the trial of these cases, they may be determined.

It is entirely plain that a great saving to the Government would be accomplished by such a remedy, and the suitors who have honest claims would not be denied justice through delay.

The report of the Secretary of War gives a detailed account of the administration of his Department, and contains sundry recommendations for the improvement of the service which I fully approve.

The Army consisted at the date of the last consolidated return, of 2,103 officers, and 24,946 enlisted men.

The expenses of the Department for the last fiscal year were $36,990,903.38, including $6,294,305.43 for public works and river and harbor improvements.

I especially direct the attention of the Congress to the recommendation that officers be required to submit to an examination as a preliminary to their promotion. I see no objection, but many advantages, in adopting this feature, which has operated so beneficially in our Navy Department, as well as in some branches of the Army.

The subject of coast defenses and fortifications has been fully and carefully treated by the Board on Fortifications, whose report was submitted at the last session of Congress; but no construction work of the kind recommended by the Board has been possible during the last year, from the lack of appropriations for such purpose.

The defenseless condition of our seacoast and lake frontier is perfectly palpable; the examinations made must convince us all that certain of our cities named in the report of the Board should be fortified, and that work on the most important of these fortifications should be commenced at once; the work has been thoroughly considered and laid out, the Secretary of War reports, but all is delayed in default of Congressional action.

The absolute necessity, judged by all standards of prudence and foresight, of our preparation for an effectual resistance against the armored ships and steel guns and mortars of modern construction which may threaten the cities on our coasts, is so apparent that I hope effective steps will be taken in that direction immediately.

The valuable and suggestive treatment of this question by the Secretary of War is earnestly commended to the consideration of the Congress.

In September and October last the hostile Apaches who, under the leadership of Geronimo, had for eighteen months been on the war-path, and during that time had committed many murders and been the cause of constant terror to the settlers of Arizona, surrendered to General Miles, the military commander who succeeded General Crook in the management and direction of their pursuit.

Under the terms of their surrender as then reported, and in view of the understanding which these murderous savages seemed to entertain of the assurances given them, it was considered best to imprison them in such manner as to prevent their ever engaging in such outrages again, instead of trying them for murder. Fort Pickens having been selected as a safe place of confinement, all the adult males were sent thither and will be closely guarded as prisoners. In the mean time the residue of the band, who though still remaining upon the reservation were regarded as unsafe, and suspected of furnishing aid to those on the war-path, had been removed to Fort Marion. The women and larger children of the hostiles were also taken there, and arrangements have been made for putting the children of proper age in Indian schools.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy contains a detailed exhibit of the condition of his Department with such a statement of the action needed to improve the same as should challenge the earnest attention of the Congress.

The present Navy of the United States, aside from the ships in course of construction, consists of—

First, fourteen single-turreted monitors, none of which are in commission, nor at the present time serviceable. The batteries of these ships are obsolete, and they can only be relied upon as auxiliary ships in harbor defense, and then after such an expenditure upon them as might not be deemed justifiable.

Second, five fourth-rate vessels of small tonnage, only one of which was designed as a war vessel, and all of which are auxiliary, merely.

Third, twenty-seven cruising ships, three of which are built of iron, of small tonnage, and twenty-four of wood. Of these wooden vessels it is estimated by the Chief Constructor of the Navy that only three will be serviceable beyond a period of six years, at which time it may be said that of the present naval force nothing worthy the name will remain.

All the vessels heretofore authorized are under contract or in course of construction, except the armored ships, the torpedo and dynamite boats, and one cruiser. As to the last of these, the bids were in excess of the limit fixed by Congress. The production in the United States of armor and gun-steel is a question which it seems necessary to settle at an early day, if the armored war vessels are to be completed with those materials of home manufacture. This has been the subject of investigation by two Boards, and by two Special Committees of Congress within the last three years. The report of the Gun Foundry Board in 1884, of the Board on Fortifications made in January last, and the reports of the Select Committees of the two Houses made at the last session of Congress, have entirely exhausted the subject, so far as preliminary investigation is involved, and in their recommendations they are substantially agreed.

In the event that the present invitation of the Department for bids to furnish such of this material as is now authorized, shall fail to induce domestic manufacturers to undertake the large expenditures required to prepare for this new manufacture, and no other steps are taken by Congress at its coming session, the Secretary contemplates with dissatisfaction the necessity of obtaining abroad the armor and the gun-steel for the authorized ships. It would seem desirable that the wants of the Army and the Navy in this regard should be reasonably met, and that by uniting their contracts, such inducement might be offered as would result in securing the domestication of these important interests.

The affairs of the postal service show marked and gratifying improvement during the past year. A particular account of its transactions and condition is given in the report of the Postmaster-General which will be laid before you.

The reduction of the rate of letter-postage in 1883, rendering the postal revenues inadequate to sustain the expenditures, and business depression also contributing, resulted in an excess of cost for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, of eight and one-third millions of dollars. An additional check upon receipts by doubling the measure of weight in rating sealed correspondence and diminishing one-half of the charge for newspaper carriage, was imposed by legislation which took effect with the beginning of the past fiscal year; while the constant demand of our territorial development and growing population, for the extension and increase of mail facilities and machinery, necessitates steady annual advance in outlay; and the careful estimate of a year ago upon the rates of expenditure then existing, contemplated the unavoidable augmentation of the deficiency in the last fiscal year by nearly two millions of dollars. The anticipated revenue for the last year failed of realization by about $64,000; but proper measures of economy have so satisfactorily limited the growth of expenditure, that the total deficiency, in fact, fell below that of 1885; and at this time the increase of revenue is in a gaining ratio over the increase of cost, demonstrating the sufficiency of the present rates of postage ultimately to sustain the service. This is the more pleasing because our people enjoy now both cheaper postage, proportionably to distances, and a vaster and more costly service, than any other upon the globe.

Retrenchment has been effected in the cost of supplies, some expenditures unwarranted by law have ceased, and the outlays for mail carriage have been subjected to beneficial scrutiny. At the close of the last fiscal year the expense of transportation on star routes stood at an annual rate of cost less by over $560,000 than at the close of the previous year; and steamboat and mail-messenger service at nearly $200,000 less.

The service has been in the mean time enlarged and extended by the establishment of new offices, increase of routes of carriage, expansion of carrier-delivery conveniences, and additions to the railway-mail facilities, in accordance with the growing exigencies of the country and the long-established policy of the Government.

The Postmaster-General calls attention to the existing law for compensating railroads, and expresses the opinion that a method may be devised which will prove more just to the carriers and beneficial to the Government; and the subject appears worthy of your early consideration.

The differences which arose during the year with certain of the ocean steamship companies, have terminated by the acquiescence of all in the policy of the Government approved by the Congress in the postal appropriation at its last session; and the Department now enjoys the utmost service afforded by all vessels which sail from our ports upon either ocean—a service generally adequate to the needs of our intercourse. Petitions have however been presented to the Department by numerous merchants and manufacturers for the establishment of a direct service to the Argentine Republic and for semi-monthly dispatches to the Empire of Brazil; and the subject is commended to your consideration. It is an obvious duty to provide the means of postal communication which our commerce requires, and with prudent forecast of results, the wise extension of it may lead to stimulating intercourse and become the harbinger of a profitable traffic, which will open new avenues for the disposition of the products of our industry. The circumstances of the countries at the far south of our continent, are such as to invite our enterprise and afford the promise of sufficient advantages to justify an unusual effort to bring about the closer relations which greater freedom of communication would tend to establish.

I suggest that as distinguished from a grant or subsidy for the mere benefit of any line of trade or travel, whatever outlay may be required to secure additional postal service, necessary and proper and not otherwise attainable, should be regarded as within the limit of legitimate compensation for such service.

The extension of the free-delivery service as suggested by the Postmaster-General has heretofore received my sanction, and it is to be hoped a suitable enactment may soon be agreed upon.

The request for an appropriation sufficient to enable the general inspection of fourth-class offices has my approbation.

I renew my approval of the recommendation of the Postmaster-General that another assistant be provided for the Post-Office Department; and I invite your attention to the several other recommendations in his report.

The conduct of the Department of Justice for the last fiscal year is fully detailed in the report of the Attorney-General, and I invite the earnest attention of the Congress to the same, and due consideration of the recommendations therein contained.

In the report submitted by this officer to the last session of the Congress he strongly recommended the erection of a penitentiary for the confinement of prisoners convicted and sentenced in the United States courts; and he repeats the recommendation in his report for the last year.

This is a matter of very great importance and should at once receive Congressional action. United States prisoners are now confined in more than thirty different State prisons and penitentiaries scattered in every part of the country. They are subjected to nearly as many different modes of treatment and discipline and are far too much removed from the control and regulation of the Government. So far as they are entitled to humane treatment and an opportunity for improvement and reformation, the Government is responsible to them and society that these things are forthcoming. But this duty can scarcely be discharged without more absolute control and direction than is possible under the present system.

Many of our good citizens have interested themselves, with the most beneficial results, in the question of prison reform. The General Government should be in a situation, since there must be United States prisoners, to furnish important aid in this movement, and should be able to illustrate what may be practically done in the direction of this reform and to present an example in the treatment and improvement of its prisoners worthy of imitation.

With prisons under its own control, the Government could deal with the somewhat vexed question of convict labor, so far as its convicts were concerned, according to a plan of its own adoption, and with due regard to the rights and interests of our laboring citizens, instead of sometimes aiding in the operation of a system which causes among them irritation and discontent.

Upon consideration of this subject it might be thought wise to erect more than one of these institutions, located in such places as would best subserve the purposes of convenience and economy in transportation. The considerable cost of maintaining these convicts as at present, in State institutions, would be saved by the adoption of the plan proposed; and by employing them in the manufacture of such articles as were needed for use by the Government, quite a large pecuniary benefit would be realized in partial return for our outlay.

I again urge a change in the Federal judicial system to meet the wants of the people and obviate the delays necessarily attending the present condition of affairs in our courts. All are agreed that something should be done, and much favor is shown by those well able to advise, to the plan suggested by the Attorney-General at the last session of Congress and recommended in my last annual message. This recommendation is here renewed, together with another made at the same time, touching a change in the manner of compensating district attorneys and marshals; and the latter subject is commended to the Congress for its action, in the interest of economy to the Government, and humanity, fairness, and justice to our people.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior presents a comprehensive summary of the work of the various branches of the public service connected with his Department; and the suggestions and recommendations which it contains for the improvement of the service should receive your careful consideration.

The exhibit made of the condition of our Indian population and the progress of the work for their enlightenment, notwithstanding the many embarrassments which hinder the better administration of this important branch of the service, is a gratifying and hopeful one.

The funds appropriated for the Indian service for the fiscal year just passed, with the available income from Indian land and trust moneys, amounting in all to $7,850,775.12, were ample for the service under the conditions and restrictions of laws regulating their expenditure. There remained a balance on hand on June 30, 1886, of $1,660,023.30, of which $1,337,768.21 are permanent funds for fulfillment of treaties, and other like purposes, and the remainder, $322,255.09, is subject to be carried to the surplus fund as required by law.

The estimates presented for appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year amount to $5,608,873.64, or $442,386.20 less than those laid before the Congress last year.

The present system of agencies, while absolutely necessary and well adapted for the management of our Indian affairs and for the ends in view, when it was adopted, is at the present stage of Indian management inadequate, standing alone, for the accomplishment of an object which has become pressing in its importance—the more rapid transition from tribal organizations to citizenship, of such portions of the Indians as are capable of civilized life.

When the existing system was adopted the Indian race was outside of the limits of organized States and Territories, and beyond the immediate reach and operation of civilization; and all efforts were mainly directed to the maintenance of friendly relations and the preservation of peace and quiet on the frontier. All this is now changed. There is no such thing as the Indian frontier. Civilization, with the busy hum of industry and the influences of Christianity, surrounds these people at every point. None of the tribes are outside of the bounds of organized government and society, except that the territorial system has not been extended over that portion of the country known as the Indian Territory. As a race the Indians are no longer hostile but may be considered as submissive to the control of the Government; few of them only are troublesome. Except the fragments of several bands all are now gathered upon reservations.

It is no longer possible for them to subsist by the chase and the spontaneous productions of the earth.

With an abundance of land, if furnished with the means and implements for profitable husbandry, their life of entire dependence upon Government rations from day to day is no longer defensible. Their inclination, long fostered by a defective system of control, is to cling to the habits and customs of their ancestors and struggle with persistence against the change of life which their altered circumstances press upon them. But barbarism and civilization can not live together. It is impossible that such incongruous conditions should coexist on the same soil.

They are a portion of our people, are under the authority of our Government, and have a peculiar claim upon and are entitled to the fostering care and protection of the nation. The Government can not relieve itself of this responsibility until they are so far trained and civilized as to be able wholly to manage and care for themselves. The paths in which they should walk must be clearly marked out for them and they must be led or guided until they are familiar with the way and competent to assume the duties and responsibilities of our citizenship.

Progress in this great work will continue only at the present slow pace and at great expense, unless the system and methods of management are improved to meet the changed conditions and urgent demands of the service.

The agents having general charge and supervision in many cases of more than five thousand Indians, scattered over large reservations, and burdened with the details of accountability for funds and supplies, have time to look after the industrial training and improvement of a few Indians only; the many are neglected and remain idle and dependent—conditions not favorable for progress in civilization.

The compensation allowed these agents and the conditions of the service, are not calculated to secure for the work men who are fitted by ability and skill to properly plan and intelligently direct the methods best adapted to produce the most speedy results and permanent benefits.

Hence the necessity for a supplemental agency or system, directed to the end of promoting the general and more rapid transition of the tribes from habits and customs of barbarism to the ways of civilization.

With an anxious desire to devise some plan of operation by which to secure the welfare of the Indians, and to relieve the Treasury as far as possible from the support of an idle and dependent population, I recommended in my previous annual message the passage of a law authorizing the appointment of a commission as an instrumentality auxiliary to those already established, for the care of the Indians. It was designed that this commission should be composed of six intelligent and capable persons—three to be detailed from the Army—having practical ideas upon the subject of the treatment of Indians, and interested in their welfare; and that it should be charged, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, with the management of such matters of detail as can not with the present organization be properly and successfully conducted, and which present different phases, as the Indians themselves differ, in their progress, needs, disposition, and capacity for improvement or immediate self-support.

By the aid of such a commission much unwise and useless expenditure of money, waste of materials, and unavailing efforts might be avoided; and it is hoped that this or some measure which the wisdom of Congress may better devise, to supply the deficiency of the present system, may receive your consideration, and the appropriate legislation be provided.

The time is ripe for the work of such an agency.

There is less opposition to the education and training of the Indian youth, as shown by the increased attendance upon the schools, and there is a yielding tendency for the individual holding of lands. Development and advancement in these directions are essential, and should have every encouragement. As the rising generation are taught the language of civilization and trained in habits of industry, they should assume the duties, privileges, and responsibilities of citizenship.

No obstacle should hinder the location and settlement of any Indian willing to take land in severalty; on the contrary, the inclination to do so should be stimulated at all times when proper and expedient. But there is no authority of law for making allotments on some of the reservations, and on others the allotments provided for are so small, that the Indians, though ready and desiring to settle down, are not willing to accept such small areas, when their reservations contain ample lands to afford them homesteads of sufficient size to meet their present and future needs.

These inequalities of existing special laws and treaties, should be corrected and some general legislation on the subject should be provided, so that the more progressive members of the different tribes may be settled upon homesteads, and by their example lead others to follow, breaking away from tribal customs and substituting therefor the love of home, the interest of the family, and the rule of the state.

The Indian character and nature are such that they are not easily led while brooding over unadjusted wrongs. This is especially so regarding their lands. Matters arising from the construction and operation of railroads across some of the reservations, and claims of title and right of occupancy set up by white persons to some of the best land within other reservations, require legislation for their final adjustment.

The settlement of these matters will remove many embarrassments to progress in the work of leading the Indians to the adoption of our institutions and bringing them under the operation, the influence, and the protection of the universal laws of our country.

The recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office looking to the better protection of public lands and of the public surveys, the preservation of national forests, the adjudication of grants to States and corporations and of private land claims, and the increased efficiency of the public land service, are commended to the attention of Congress. To secure the widest distribution of public lands in limited quantities among settlers for residence and cultivation and thus make the greatest number of individual homes, was the primary object of the public land legislation in the early days of the republic. This system was a simple one. It commenced with an admirable scheme of public surveys, by which the humblest citizen could identify the tract upon which he wished to establish his home. The price of lands was placed within the reach of all the enterprising, industrious, and honest pioneer citizens of the country. It was soon, however, found that the object of the laws was perverted under the system of cash sales, from a distribution of land among the people to an accumulation of land capital by wealthy and speculative persons. To check this tendency a preference right of purchase was given to settlers on the land, a plan which culminated in the general pre-emption act of 1841. The foundation of this system was actual residence and cultivation. Twenty years later the homestead law was devised to more surely place actual homes in the possession of actual cultivators of the soil. The land was given without price, the sole conditions being residence, improvement, and cultivation. Other laws have followed, each designed to encourage the acquirement and use of land in limited individual quantities. But in later years these laws, through vicious administrative methods and under changed conditions of communication and transportation, have been so evaded and violated that their beneficent purpose is threatened with entire defeat. The methods of such evasions and violations are set forth in detail in the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office. The rapid appropriation of our public lands without bona fide settlements or cultivation, and not only without intention of residence, but for the purpose of their aggregation in large holdings, in many cases in the hands of foreigners, invites the serious and immediate attention of the Congress.

The energies of the land department have been devoted during the present administration to remedy defects and correct abuses in the public land service. The results of these efforts are so largely in the nature of reforms in the processes and methods of our land system as to prevent adequate estimate; but it appears by a compilation from the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the immediate effect in leading cases which have come to a final termination has been the restoration to the mass of public lands of two million seven hundred and fifty thousand acres; that two million three hundred and seventy thousand acres are embraced in investigations now pending before the Department or the courts, and that the action of Congress has been asked to effect the restoration of two million seven hundred and ninety thousand acres additional; besides which four million acres have been withheld from reservation, and the rights of entry thereon maintained.

I recommend the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture acts, and that the homestead laws be so amended as to better secure compliance with their requirements of residence, improvement, and cultivation for the period of five years from date of entry, without commutation or provision for speculative relinquishment. I also recommend the repeal of the desert-land laws unless it shall be the pleasure of the Congress to so amend these laws as to render them less liable to abuses. As the chief motive for an evasion of the laws, and the principal cause of their result in land accumulation instead of land distribution, is the facility with which transfers are made of the right intended to be secured to settlers, it may be deemed advisable to provide by legislation some guards and checks upon the alienation of homestead rights and lands covered thereby until patents issue.

Last year an executive proclamation was issued directing the removal of fences which inclosed the public domain. Many of these have been removed in obedience to such order; but much of the public land still remains within the lines of these unlawful fences. The ingenious methods resorted to in order to continue these trespasses and the hardihood of the pretenses by which in some cases such inclosures are justified, are fully detailed in the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

The removal of the fences still remaining which inclose public lands, will be enforced with all the authority and means with which the executive branch of the Government is or shall be invested by the Congress for that purpose.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions contains a detailed and most satisfactory exhibit of the operations of the Pension Bureau during the last fiscal year. The amount of work done was the largest in any year since the organization of the bureau; and it has been done at less cost than during the previous year in every division.

On the thirtieth day of June, 1886, there were 365,783 pensioners on the rolls of the bureau.

Since 1861 there have been 1,018,735 applications for pensions filed, of which 78,834 were based upon service in the war of 1812. There were 621,754 of these applications allowed, including 60,178 to the soldiers of 1812 and their widows.

The total amount paid for pensions since 1861 is $808,624,811.57.

The number of new pensions allowed during the year ended June 30, 1886, is 40,857—a larger number than has been allowed in any year save one since 1861; the names of 2,229 pensioners which had been previously dropped from the rolls, were restored during the year, and after deducting those dropped within the same time for various causes, a net increase remains for the year of 20,658 names.

From January 1, 1861, to December 1, 1885, 1,967 private pension acts had been passed. Since the last-mentioned date, and during the last session of the Congress, 644 such acts became laws.

It seems to me that no one can examine our pension establishment and its operations, without being convinced that through its instrumentality justice can be very nearly done to all who are entitled under present laws to the pension bounty of the Government.

But it is undeniable that cases exist, well entitled to relief, in which the Pension Bureau is powerless to aid. The really worthy cases of this class are such as only lack by misfortune the kind or quantity of proof which the law and regulations of the Bureau require, or which, though their merit is apparent, for some other reason cannot be justly dealt with through general laws. These conditions fully justify application to the Congress and special enactments. But resort to the Congress for a special pension act to overrule the deliberate and careful determination of the Pension Bureau on the merits or to secure favorable action when it could not be expected under the most liberal execution of general laws, it must be admitted, opens the door to the allowance of questionable claims and presents to the legislative and executive branches of the Government applications concededly not within the law and plainly devoid of merit, but so surrounded by sentiment and patriotic feeling that they are hard to resist. I suppose it will not be denied that many claims for pension are made without merit and that many have been allowed upon fraudulent representations. This has been declared from the Pension Bureau, not only in this, but in prior administrations.

The usefulness and the justice of any system for the distribution of pensions depend upon the equality and uniformity of its operation.

It will be seen from the report of the Commissioner that there are now paid by the Government one hundred and thirty-one different rates of pension.

He estimates from the best information he can obtain that nine thousand of those who have served in the Army and Navy of the United States are now supported, in whole or in part, from public funds or by organized charities, exclusive of those in soldiers' homes under the direction and control of the Government. Only 13 per cent. of these are pensioners, while of the entire number of men furnished for the late war something like 20 per cent., including their widows and relatives, have been or now are in the receipt of pensions.

The American people, with a patriotic and grateful regard for our ex-soldiers—too broad and too sacred to be monopolized by any special advocates—are not only willing but anxious that equal and exact justice should be done to all honest claimants for pensions. In their sight the friendless and destitute soldier, dependent on public charity, if otherwise entitled, has precisely the same right to share in the provision made for those who fought their country's battles as those better able, through friends and influence, to push their claims. Every pension that is granted under our present plan upon any other grounds than actual service and injury or disease incurred in such service, and every instance of the many in which pensions are increased on other grounds than the merits of the claim, work an injustice to the brave and crippled, but poor and friendless soldier, who is entirely neglected or who must be content with the smallest sum allowed under general laws.

There are far too many neighborhoods in which are found glaring cases of inequality of treatment in the matter of pensions; and they are largely due to a yielding in the Pension Bureau to importunity on the part of those, other than the pensioner, who are especially interested, or they arise from special acts passed for the benefit of individuals.

The men who fought side by side should stand side by side when they participate in a grateful nation's kind remembrance.

Every consideration of fairness and justice to our ex-soldiers, and the protection of the patriotic instinct of our citizens from perversion and violation, point to the adoption of a pension system broad and comprehensive enough to cover every contingency, and which shall make unnecessary an objectionable volume of special legislation.

As long as we adhere to the principle of granting pensions for service, and disability as the result of the service, the allowance of pensions should be restricted to cases presenting these features.

Every patriotic heart responds to a tender consideration for those who, having served their country long and well, are reduced to destitution and dependence, not as an incident of their service, but with advancing age or through sickness or misfortune. We are all tempted by the contemplation of such a condition to supply relief, and are often impatient of the limitations of public duty. Yielding to no one in the desire to indulge this feeling of consideration, I can not rid myself of the conviction that if these ex-soldiers are to be relieved, they and their cause are entitled to the benefit of an enactment, under which relief may be claimed as a right, and that such relief should be granted under the sanction of law, not in evasion of it; nor should such worthy objects of care, all equally entitled, be remitted to the unequal operation of sympathy, or the tender mercies of social and political influence with their unjust discriminations.

The discharged soldiers and sailors of the country are our fellow-citizens, and interested with us in the passage and faithful execution of wholesome laws. They can not be swerved from their duty of citizenship by artful appeals to their spirit of brotherhood born of common peril and suffering, nor will they exact as a test of devotion to their welfare a willingness to neglect public duty in their behalf.

On the 4th of March, 1885, the current business of the Patent Office was, on an average, five and a half months in arrears, and, in several divisions, more than twelve months behind. At the close of the last fiscal year such current work was but three months in arrears, and it is asserted and believed that in the next few months the delay in obtaining an examination of an application for a patent will be but nominal.

The number of applications for patents during the last fiscal year, including reissues, designs, trade-marks, and labels, equals 40,678, which is considerably in excess of the number received during any preceding year.

The receipts of the Patent Office during the year aggregate $1,205,167.80, enabling the office to turn into the Treasury a surplus revenue, over and above all expenditures, of about $163,710.30.

The number of patents granted during the last fiscal year, including reissues, trade-marks, designs, and labels, was 25,619—a number also quite largely in excess of that of any preceding year.

The report of the Commissioner shows the office to be in a prosperous condition and constantly increasing in its business. No increase of force is asked for.

The amount estimated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, was $890,760. The amount estimated for the year ending June 30, 1887, was $853,960. The amount estimated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, is $778,770.

The Secretary of the Interior suggests a change in the plan for the payment of the indebtedness of the Pacific subsidized roads to the Government. His suggestion has the unanimous indorsement of the persons selected by the Government to act as directors of these roads and protect the interests of the United States in the board of direction. In considering the plan proposed the sole matters which should be taken into account, in my opinion, are the situation of the Government as a creditor, and the surest way to secure the payment of the principal and interest of its debt.

By a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States it has been adjudged that the laws of the several States are inoperative to regulate rates of transportation upon railroads, if such regulation interferes with the rate of carriage from one State into another. This important field of control and regulation having been thus left entirely unoccupied, the expediency of Federal action upon the subject is worthy of consideration.

The relations of labor to capital and of laboring men to their employers are of the utmost concern to every patriotic citizen. When these are strained and distorted, unjustifiable claims are apt to be insisted upon by both interests, and in the controversy which results, the welfare of all and the prosperity of the country are jeopardized. Any intervention of the General Government, within the limits of its constitutional authority, to avert such a condition, should be willingly accorded.

In a special message transmitted to the Congress at its last session I suggested the enlargement of our present Labor Bureau and adding to its present functions the power of arbitration in cases where differences arise between employer and employed. When these differences reach such a stage as to result in the interruption of commerce between the States, the application of this remedy by the General Government might be regarded as entirely within its constitutional powers. And I think we might reasonably hope that such arbitrators, if carefully selected and if entitled to the confidence of the parties to be affected, would be voluntarily called to the settlement of controversies of less extent and not necessarily within the domain of Federal regulation.

I am of the opinion that this suggestion is worthy the attention of the Congress.

But after all has been done by the passage of laws either Federal or State to relieve a situation full of solicitude, much more remains to be accomplished by the reinstatement and cultivation of a true American sentiment which recognizes the equality of American citizenship. This, in the light of our traditions and in loyalty to the spirit of our institutions, would teach that a hearty co-operation on the part of all interests is the surest path to national greatness and the happiness of all our people, that capital should, in recognition of the brotherhood of our citizenship and in a spirit of American fairness, generously accord to labor its just compensation and consideration, and that contented labor is capital's best protection and faithful ally. It would teach, too, that the diverse situations of our people are inseparable from our civilization, that every citizen should, in his sphere, be a contributor to the general good, that capital does not necessarily tend to the oppression of labor, and that violent disturbances and disorders alienate from their promoters true American sympathy and kindly feeling.

The Department of Agriculture, representing the oldest and largest of our national industries, is subserving well the purposes of its organization. By the introduction of new subjects of farming enterprise, and by opening new sources of agricultural wealth and the dissemination of early information concerning production and prices, it has contributed largely to the country's prosperity. Through this agency, advanced thought and investigation touching the subjects it has in charge, should, among other things, be practically applied to the home production at a low cost of articles of food which are now imported from abroad. Such an innovation will necessarily of course in the beginning be within the domain of intelligent experiment; and the subject in every stage should receive all possible encouragement from the Government.

The interests of millions of our citizens engaged in agriculture are involved in an enlargement and improvement of the results of their labor; and a zealous regard for their welfare should be willing tribute to those whose productive returns are a main source of our progress and power.

The existence of pleuro-pneumonia among the cattle of various States has led to burdensome and in some cases disastrous restrictions in an important branch of our commerce, threatening to affect the quantity and quality of our food supply. This is a matter of such importance and of such far-reaching consequences, that I hope it will engage the serious attention of the Congress, to the end that such a remedy may be applied as the limits of a constitutional delegation of power to the General Government will permit.

I commend to the consideration of the Congress the report of the Commissioner, and his suggestions concerning the interest intrusted to his care.

The continued operation of the law relating to our Civil Service has added the most convincing proofs of its necessity and usefulness. It is a fact worthy of note that every public officer who has a just idea of his duty to the people, testifies to the value of this reform. Its staunchest friends are found among those who understand it best, and its warmest supporters are those who are restrained and protected by its requirements.

The meaning of such restraint and protection is not appreciated by those who want places under the Government, regardless of merit and efficiency, nor by those who insist that the selection for such places should rest upon a proper credential showing active partisan work. They mean to public officers, if not their lives, the only opportunity afforded them to attend to public business, and they mean to the good people of the country the better performance of the work of their Government.

It is exceedingly strange that the scope and nature of this reform are so little understood, and that so many things not included within its plan are called by its name. When cavil yields more fully to examination the system will have large additions to the number of its friends.

Our Civil-Service reform may be imperfect in some of its details; it may be misunderstood and opposed; it may not always be faithfully applied; its designs may sometimes miscarry through mistake or willful intent; it may sometimes tremble under the assaults of its enemies or languish under the misguided zeal of impracticable friends; but if the people of this country ever submit to the banishment of its underlying principle from the operation of their Government, they will abandon the surest guarantee of the safety and success of American institutions.

I invoke for this reform the cheerful and ungrudging support of the Congress. I renew my recommendation made last year that the salaries of the Commissioners be made equal to other officers of the Government having like duties and responsibilities, and I hope that such reasonable appropriations may be made as will enable them to increase the usefulness of the cause they have in charge.

I desire to call the attention of the Congress to a plain duty which the Government owes to the depositors in the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

This company was chartered by the Congress for the benefit of the most illiterate and humble of our people, and with the intention of encouraging in them industry and thrift. Most of its branches were presided over by officers holding the commissions and clothed in the uniform of the United States. These and other circumstances reasonably, I think, led these simple people to suppose that the invitation to deposit their hard-earned savings in this institution implied an undertaking on the part of their Government that their money should be safely kept for them.

When this company failed it was liable in the sum of $2,939,925.22 to 61,131 depositors. Dividends amounting in the aggregate to sixty-two per cent. have been declared, and the sum called for and paid of such dividends seems to be $1,648,181.72. This sum deducted from the entire amount of deposits leaves $1,291,744.50 still unpaid. Past experience has shown that quite a large part of this sum will not be called for. There are assets still on hand amounting to the estimated sum of $16,000.

I think the remaining thirty-eight per cent. of such of these deposits as have claimants should be paid by the Government, upon principles of equity and fairness.

The report of the Commissioner, soon to be laid before Congress, will give more satisfactory details on this subject.

The control of the affairs of the District of Columbia having been placed in the hands of purely executive officers, while the Congress still retains all legislative authority relating to its government, it becomes my duty to make known the most pressing needs of the District and recommend their consideration.

The laws of the District appear to be in an uncertain and unsatisfactory condition, and their codification or revision is much needed.

During the past year one of the bridges leading from the District to the State of Virginia became unfit for use, and travel upon it was forbidden. This leads me to suggest that the improvement of all the bridges crossing the Potomac and its branches, from the city of Washington, is worthy of the attention of Congress.

The Commissioners of the District represent that the laws regulating the sale of liquor and granting licenses therefor should be at once amended, and that legislation is needed to consolidate, define and enlarge the scope and powers of charitable and penal institutions within the District.

I suggest that the Commissioners be clothed with the power to make, within fixed limitations, police regulations. I believe this power granted and carefully guarded, would tend to subserve the good order of the municipality.

It seems that trouble still exists growing out of the occupation of the streets and avenues by certain railroads having their termini in the city. It is very important that such laws should be enacted upon this subject as will secure to the railroads all the facilities they require for the transaction of their business, and at the same time protect citizens from injury to their persons or property.

The Commissioners again complain that the accommodations afforded them for the necessary offices for District business, and for the safe keeping of valuable books and papers, are entirely insufficient. I recommend that this condition of affairs be remedied by the Congress, and that suitable quarters be furnished for the needs of the District government.

In conclusion, I earnestly invoke such wise action on the part of the people's legislators, as will subserve the public good and demonstrate during the remaining days of the Congress as at present organized, its ability and inclination to so meet the people's needs that it shall be gratefully remembered by an expectant constituency.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

WASHINGTON, December 6, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be printed, with the accompanying documents, and laid upon the table unless otherwise ordered.

TWELFTH MICHIGAN VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. CONGER. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill 6983, that I may withdraw a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1613, being House bill 6983, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6983) for the relief of certain soldiers of the Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry dishonorably discharged under special orders 92, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated March 1, 1866.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. Just before the close of the last session I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill passed the Senate. I now wish to withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the motion to reconsider is withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill stands passed.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. BLAIR obtained the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I should like leave to give a notice, which I think it will be convenient to the Senate to have given at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLAIR. I do.

Mr. HOAR. At the last session the Pacific railroads funding bill, so called, was put down as a special order for to-morrow. I shall ask that the consideration of that bill be deferred for a week or two from to-morrow, and not ask the Senate to take it up at that time, the reason being that it is hoped the other House may in the mean time have taken some action which will relieve the Senate of a good deal of trouble in regard to the bill.

DEATH OF SENATOR PIKE.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, although it is already a well-known fact, I feel that it will touch the Senate with a sense of deep grief when in the discharge of a painful duty I announce the death of Hon. AUSTIN F. PIKE, late a member of this body from New Hampshire.

It will be remembered that shortly before the close of the last session, worn out by the struggle with what finally proved to be a fatal disease, he sought health and strength among the hills of his nativity. He thought and his friends thought that he had quite recovered his health, and he and they were looking forward with hope to the prolongation of his useful life, when, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, he was and he was not, for God took him.

At an appropriate time I shall ask of the Senate that a fitting tribute be paid to the life, the character, and the public services of our deceased associate and friend.

As a mark of respect to his memory, I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 7, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 6, 1886.

This being the day designated by the Constitution, the members of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress assembled in their hall for their second session.

At 12 o'clock noon the Speaker, Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative of the State of Kentucky, called the House to order.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, offered the following:

O Lord God of Hosts, receive our hearty thanksgiving that so many of the officers and members of this House have been preserved during the recess, and are permitted once more to come to their places for the performance of their duties; nor would we forget those families that have been made desolate by the vacant seats in this hall. Remember the widows and orphans. Comfort them in their distress, and be unto them a husband and father.

Grant Thy blessing upon Thy servant, the President of the United States, and all the members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives. May Thy servant, the Speaker, be comforted and cheered in the performance of his duty, and all the officers of the House be guided and sustained; and may the members of the body remember that God holds them to a solemn account, as well as the nation, for the faithful performance of their duties. And may peace and quietness, good temper, urbanity, courtesy, and long suffering characterize the deliberations of the session.

Preserve us in health, we beseech Thee, O God, and prosper the deliberations of the House, so that the nation shall find prosperity and peace; and that God's glory be promoted in the happiness of the land we ask reverently and humbly, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The SPEAKER. It appears from the call of the roll at two hundred and fifty-seven members are present, being more than a quorum, and the House will come to order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that a quorum of that body was assembled and ready to proceed to business; also, that a committee, consisting of two members, had been appointed to join such committee as should be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of each House was assembled, and that Congress was ready to receive any communication he may desire to make.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. MORRISON submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. REAGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

The SPEAKER appointed as such committee, on the part of the House, Mr. REAGAN, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, and Mr. REED of Maine.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS-ELECT.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to present to the House, to be sworn in, Mr. Samuel S. Cox, elected a representative from the ninth Congressional district of the State of New York, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. Joseph Pulitzer.

I wish to say in this connection that the formal certificate of the secretary of state has not been received, but a letter has been received from him stating the formal canvass will be concluded to-day. But, in the meantime, the official canvass of the city of New York has been concluded; and, if there is no objection, I desire to present, at this stage of the proceedings, my colleague to be sworn in.

The letter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
November 29, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 27th instant is received.

In reference to the meeting of the board of State canvassers and the issue of certificates of election to the two Representatives-elect from this State to the Forty-ninth Congress to fill vacancies, I have to say:

That at a recent meeting of another board, of which most of the members of the board of State canvassers are also members and were in attendance, I presented the question of time for meeting of canvassers, and the engagements of members forming the board of State canvassers were such that it was determined that no quorum could be secured until Monday, December 6, at 4 p. m., when I expect to call such meeting.

In this connection I may add that the election code fixes the time for meeting of State canvassers before December 15 in each year.

The same code, however, gives no authority for securing the election statements prior to December 1.

One of the county clerks in a northern county of this State has failed to send such returns, and the secretary of state is not authorized to send for the same until December 1.

I will without delay mail your certificate of election to Washington city or elsewhere, as you may direct, as soon as the State canvassers meet and canvass the votes cast in your Congressional district.

I understand that it has been usual in former years on the part of the House of Representatives to admit new Representatives chosen to fill vacancies to their seats, upon motion, without production of certificate of election.

I may add here, in case you should desire to show this letter to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, that the official returns show your election as a Representative in Forty-ninth Congress from the ninth Congressional district of this State, in place of Hon. Joseph Pulitzer, resigned, and that the certificate of election will issue as soon as the State canvassers meet to formally declare the result.

Yours, truly,

FREDERICK COOK,
Secretary of State.

Hon. SAMUEL S. COX,
New York City.

There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL S. COX then appeared at the bar of the House, escorted by his colleague [Mr. HEWITT], and was greeted with general applause on the floor and in the galleries. He was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. COMPTON. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COMPTON. I present at this time the certificate of the election of Mr. Rusk to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. Mr. COLE, of the State of Maryland, and I ask that the credentials be read, and that he be sworn in.

The credentials were read, as follows:

THE STATE OF MARYLAND, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

I, Henry Lloyd, governor of Maryland, do hereby certify that it appears from the official returns now on file in this department, of an election held in this State on Tuesday, the 2d day of November, instant, for a Representative from the third Congressional district of Maryland in the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States for the unexpired term of Dr. WILLIAM H. COLE, deceased, that Hon. Harry Welles Rusk was regularly and duly elected in accordance with the laws of this State as the Representative from the third Congressional district of Maryland in the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States for the unexpired term of Dr. WILLIAM H. COLE, late the Representative from the said district to the said Congress, but who is now deceased.

Witness my hand and the great seal of Maryland, at the city of Annapolis, on the 13th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six.

HENRY LLOYD.

[SEAL.]
By the governor:

E. W. LE COMPTE,
Secretary of State.

Mr. RUSK appeared at the bar of the House, and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present Mr. Henry Bacon to be sworn in as a Representative-elect from the fifteenth Congressional district of the State of New York, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. LEWIS BEACH. The circumstances in Mr. Bacon's case are precisely the same as those in the case of Mr. COX. The letter of the secretary of state is in my hands, but the official certificate has not yet been received. I ask, if there be no objection, that Mr. Bacon be now sworn in.

There was no objection; and Mr. BACON appeared at the bar of the House and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HAMMOND, until Wednesday next.

To Mr. HOUK, indefinitely.

To Mr. BENNETT, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. O'DONNELL, for four days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. KELLEY, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HENLEY, indefinitely, on account of business.

To Mr. WARD, of Illinois, for the balance of this week, on account of sickness in his family.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit for present consideration the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until the further order of the House the daily hour of meeting of the House be 12 o'clock noon.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take a recess for thirty minutes to enable the committee appointed to wait upon the President to perform that duty and make its report.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess for thirty minutes.

The recess having expired, the House (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a further recess until 2 o'clock. I understand the Senate has taken a recess to that hour, and that the committee to wait upon the President will not earlier be ready to report.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) took a further recess until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House (at 2 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed under resolution of the House to wait upon the President and inform him a quorum was present and ready to receive any communications he may be prepared to make, have performed that duty; and the President has requested us to extend his congratulations to the House on account of the safe return of its members, and to say that he will shortly communicate to the House in writing.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

A message in writing from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, was received; which was laid before the House and read in full.

[It will be found in Senate proceedings.]

Mr. MORRISON submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the message of the President be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying documents, printed.

Mr. MORRISON also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed —— thousand copies of the President's last annual message for the use of the House.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the year ended June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the annual report of the Attorney-General for the year ended June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

INVENTORY OF PUBLIC PROPERTY, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting an inventory of public property in his possession on December 6, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House, transmitting his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

DEATH OF HON. LEWIS BEACH, AND HON. JOHN ARNOT, JR.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce to the House that since its adjournment in August last, two members of the New York delegation have died, Hon. LEWIS BEACH, who represented in this House the fifteenth Congressional district, and Hon. JOHN ARNOT, Jr., who represented the twenty-eighth Congressional district.

I do not propose at this time to do more than make this sad announcement, knowing that the House will hereafter take such action as will be appropriate under the circumstances. But I send to the desk resolutions which I ask to have read by the Clerk; and then I respectfully request that the resolution for adjournment be deferred until the gentleman from Wisconsin, who has a similar announcement to make, can be heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with sincere regret the announcement of the death during the late recess of Hon. LEWIS BEACH and Hon. JOHN ARNOT, Jr., late Representatives from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolution to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representatives the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first on agreeing to the first and second resolutions.

The first and second resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. WILLIAM T. PRICE.

Mr. CASWELL. It is my melancholy duty to announce to this House the death of my friend and colleague, Hon. WILLIAM T. PRICE, late a Representative of the eighth district of the State of Wisconsin, which occurred this morning at 5 o'clock, at his residence in that State. I shall, on some future day, ask the House to fix a time when fitting and proper words may be spoken in reference to his life and character. For the present I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk. And if a committee should be appointed to attend his funeral, I ask that I may be excused from service on the same, as it is quite impossible for me to attend.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has learned with deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM T. PRICE, a Representative of the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a special committee of seven members of the House of Representatives and three members of the Senate be appointed to take order for attending his funeral at his residence in the State of Wisconsin, and the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. In order that the Chair may have the opportunity to announce the committee the question will be put, first, on the adoption of the first three resolutions.

The first three resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following as the committee on the part of the House: Mr. GUENTHER, of Wisconsin; Mr. MORRILL, of Kansas; Mr. FREDERICK, of Iowa; Mr. TAULBEE, of Kentucky; Mr. OSBORNE, of Pennsylvania; Mr. HUDD, of Wisconsin; Mr. LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin.

The final resolution of each series was then agreed to; and, in accordance therewith, the House (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKSDALE: Petition of J. W. Farish and others, citizens of Jackson, Miss.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BLAND: Petition of H. C. Ewing, administrator of the estate of M. L. and R. R. Jefferson, deceased, of Jefferson County; of Harvey Drennan, of Phelps County; and of E. W. Bishop, of Rolla, Mo., asking that their claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BOUTELLE: Petition of the trustees and officers of the Maine State College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts, for the enactment of House bill 2933, known as the Hatch experiment-station bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. P. C. Cheney, appointed by the governor of the State of New Hampshire a Senator from that State to fill until the next meeting of the Legislature thereof the vacancy in the Senate occasioned by the death of Senator PIKE. I ask that the credentials be read, and placed on file, and that the oath of office be administered to the Senator appointed.

The credentials were read by the Chief Clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator appointed from New Hampshire will please advance to the desk, and the oath of office will be administered to him.

Mr. CHENEY, escorted by Mr. BLAIR, advanced to the desk of the President pro tempore, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of A. M. Wright, president of the Chicago Board of Trade, Swift & Co., Hon. C. B. Farwell, Fleming & Boyden, and 93 other members of the Chicago Board of Trade, praying for legislation authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and associates for the improvement of Harlem River, in New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUTLER presented an extract from the presentment of the grand jury of the United States district court for the western district of South Carolina, recommending the erection of a public building at Greenville, S. C., for the accommodation of the United States court, post-office, and other public offices; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of the Columbia (Oregon) Water-Way Convention, praying for increased appropriations for the prosecution of works for the improvement of the Columbia River, already in progress, and for an appropriation for the further improvement of the channels of Columbia and Snake Rivers, wherever it may be necessary for their practical navigation; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of C. W. Moore and other citizens of Boylston, Mass., praying for the passage of what is known as the Hatch experiment station bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GIBSON presented a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Louisiana, in favor of improving Bayou Lafourche; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Concurrent resolution asking for an appropriation by Congress for the purpose of dredging and removing islands, sand-banks, and other obstructions, of whatever nature they may be, from the mouth of Bayou Lafourche where it empties into the Gulf of Mexico, in the parish of Lafourche, to Raceland Station on Bayou Lafourche, in Lafourche Parish, State of Louisiana.

Whereas there are numerous islands, sand-banks, and other obstructions in the Bayou Lafourche from its mouth up to Raceland Station;

Whereas the general navigation of said bayou is greatly impeded thereby;

Whereas the removal of said islands, sand-banks, and other obstructions, the dredging and deepening of the channel of said bayou would greatly facilitate the transportation of various and extensive products of said section of country, and give speedy and sure communication with the markets of the world:

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to urge upon Congress the passage of an act making an appropriation of a sufficient sum of money for the dredging and deepening of the channel of said bayou, and also for the removal of the islands and other obstructions from said channel, from the mouth of said bayou where it empties into the Gulf of Mexico, in the parish of Lafourche, to Raceland Station on Bayou Lafourche, in Lafourche Parish, State of Louisiana, and requiring the Federal Government, through the proper department, to take measures for the removal of said obstructions and for the dredging and deepening of the channel of Bayou Lafourche between said points, so as to improve the navigation thereof, and give speedy, direct, and safe means of transportation and communication to the inhabitants of said section of country.

Be it further resolved, That the governor be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. MORRILL presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Vermont; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Joint resolution relating to the protection of American industries, the extension of the American commerce in foreign markets, and the restoration of the American-built merchant marine and our flag upon the ocean.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That with the many thousands of skilled laborers in this country seeking and not finding employment; that with the enormous accumulation of our manufactured products piled up in our warehouses, awaiting a market; that with the eager watchfulness of the great manufacturing and commercial nations for opportunity to crowd their surplus products into our already overstocked markets, while they jealously exclude us from trade with the non-producing nations, by reason of their control of the merchant fleets that bear the world's commerce, our present protective tariff remains of vital importance to the welfare and prosperity of the whole people, employer and employé, in equal degree, and the restoration of our once-proud supremacy on the high seas, carrying American goods in American-built ships to all the markets of the world, is an immediate necessity.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to prepare and forward copies of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and they are respectfully requested to use their best efforts to promote the interests herein specified.

JOSIAH GROUT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
LEVI K. FULLER,
President of the Senate.

STATE OF VERMONT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I hereby certify that the foregoing joint resolution, adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Vermont, at its sessson of 1886, is a true copy of the original, as appears from the files and records of this office.

Witness my signature and official seal at Montpelier, this 30th day of November, A. D. 1886.

CHARLES W. PORTER,
Secretary of State.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the joint resolution (S. R. 72) to print 10,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show held in Philadelphia in September, 1880, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, the matter having been acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2901) to provide for the erection of a public building at Eastport, Me.; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say, in calling the attention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to this bill, that it is a case where the custom-house was destroyed by a very destructive fire, one of the worst that ever afflicted the State, almost destroying the town. It is a very important custom-house, being upon the border of the British possessions, and it is very important that action should be taken at once. I should like to ask the indulgence of the Senate to consider the bill now, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected upon the site now vested in the United States a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States custom-house and post-office at Eastport, in the State of Maine. The building when completed, upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $100,000.

Mr. VEST. Has that bill been to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been referred.

Mr. HALE. I have just stated, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, that this is a case where fire destroyed almost the entire town, including the custom-house, and that it is a very important building. It is not a question of purchasing any site. There is no question that there should be a proper building erected, and the sooner the bill goes to the other House the better. That is why I ask the indulgence of the Senate to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. VEST. I do not see the chairman of that committee present.

Mr. HALE. The chairman is not here, and I could not confer with him.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I do not think its passage now will hasten the progress of the bill through the other House; and I do not think there will be any unreasonable delay by having it referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HALE. If any Senator objects, under these circumstances, of course the bill must go to the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I only suggest to the Senator that it would be better for the bill to have it referred to the committee.

Mr. HALE. Then let the bill go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator from Vermont (a member of that committee) to give it his special attention, and report it speedily.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2902) for the relief of Commodore W. T. Truxton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2903) to provide for the retirement of United States legal-tender and national-bank notes of small denominations, and the issue of coin certificates, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 2909) for the relief of Isidore Daigle and Rose Daigle Woodruff, lawful heirs of Isidore Daigle, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2910) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2911) defining the time for the commencement of pensions granted by special acts of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2912) to increase the rate of pension for the loss of an eye, or the sight thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a bill (S. 2913) to exempt from duty imported sugar and molasses, and all imported boards, lumber, and timber; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2914) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Allgower; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2915) granting a pension to Harrison Wagner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2916) for the construction of a deep-water channel in Tampa Bay up to the town of Tampa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2917) to pension E. A. Tucker, a soldier in the Seminole Indian war in Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2918) for continuing the work on the bar at the mouth of the Saint John's River, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2919) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

TARIFF REVISION.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the promise of making any revision of the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests, not to injure any domestic industries, but to promote their healthy growth, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital involved and without depriving American labor of ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country, appears so obviously hopeless and impracticable that any further attempts at revision by the present Congress, in contravention to the foregoing cardinal declarations, are to be regarded as inexpedient and detrimental to the revival of the trade and industry of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire that the resolution shall lie upon the table, and give notice that day after to-morrow, if it shall suit the convenience of the Senate, I shall submit some remarks upon a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

REDUCTION OF CUSTOMS DUTIES AND INTERNAL TAXES.

Mr. DAWES. I submit a resolution, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed, and at some future day I shall call it up for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed; as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire and report as soon as practicable what specific reduction can be made in customs duties and internal taxes which will, in their judgment, reduce the receipts to the necessary and economical expenditures of the Government, without impairing the prosperity and development of home industries or the compensation of home labor.

SELECT COMMITTEES.

Mr. FRYE. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the select committees of the Senate in existence August 5, 1886, be revived and continued during the present session, with all the powers and authorities heretofore given by the Senate to each of the select committees on the respective subjects to which they relate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FRYE. The resolution which was passed at the opening of the Forty-ninth Congress: "Resolved, That the following constitute the select committees of the Senate of the United States for the Forty-ninth Congress," does not cover some three or four select committees that were subsequently to that time appointed. Therefore I thought it better to put in this resolution, which, while it will do no harm of course, will reaffirm the appointment of the former select committees covered by the resolution, and will include the four or five that were subsequently appointed.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator explain the resolution so that we may know what committees are included?

Mr. FRYE. This resolution covers the Interstate Commerce Committee, the committees on the subject of the reduction of employés, on Indian traders, and on ordnance and war-ships.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all?

Mr. FRYE. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1200, known as the Pacific railroads funding bill, which stands as the first special order for to-day, may be postponed until Tuesday, December 21, at 2 o'clock, to be then the special order with the same rights which it has now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up for the purpose stated a bill, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1200) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the bill be postponed to and made a special order on the same conditions for Tuesday, December 21, at 2 o'clock. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD FORFEITURE.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, on the 6th day of July last Congress declared a forfeiture of the grant to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, and directed the restoration of the lands to private entry. That tract comprises about 6,000,000 acres, being the alternate sections in a region 200 miles long and 20 miles wide, extending from the junction of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroads to the northern line of the State of Texas. Some of this land is worthless, but the larger part is valuable for agriculture, mining, and pasturage.

It was my understanding, and I suppose the understanding of those who voted for the bill, that the restoration of these lands to the public domain was to be immediate. A great many of the citizens of New Mexico, of Texas, and the surrounding country, being aware of the forfeiture and the order of restoration, have endeavored to make entry upon those lands, but have been informed at the local land offices that no action had been taken by the Interior Department for their restoration to private entry.

An eminent citizen of New Mexico, in sympathy politically with the Administration, but not in official place, moved by many inquiries, addressed the Commissioner of the General Land Office, after a considerable interval, to ascertain when these lands were to be restored to the public domain. It is evident that the Commissioner of the General Land Office understood that the restoration of these lands, in the intention of Congress at least, was to be immediate, for he replies, under date of September 30, that—

These lands will be restored to entry as soon as the diagram showing such lands is completed, which will be within a few days.

Nearly a month elapsed, and on the 17th day of October this citizen, supposing that the period defined by the Commissioner had been reached, addressed another letter to him, asking when the intention of Congress was to be complied with concerning these lands. On the 22d day of October the Commissioner, acknowledging the receipt of the letter, stated that—

The maps showing the forfeiture have just been completed, and notice of the restoration will probably be issued in a few days. The exact date can not be given. The former office letter gives all information possible under the circumstances.

My correspondent writes me that on the 27th day of November, the period described by the Commissioner twice as "a few days" having already been exceeded, the order has not yet been issued for the restoration of these lands to private entry, although the maps and diagrams have, for a long period of time, been on file in the land offices in Santa Fé and at Las Cruces, in New Mexico.

The people there are naturally impatient. Many of them have made long journeys for the purpose of being near the place where these lands are to be disposed of under the public laws of the United States, and they have addressed me asking me to ascertain if possible by the intervention of the Senate the cause of this procrastination, and why it is that the Commissioner, having twice promised in compliance with his evident understanding of the purpose of Congress that these lands should be restored in "a few days," has permitted the 27th of November to pass without taking the action contemplated by the statute of forfeiture.

Whether it results from the impression that appears to prevail in the mind of the Commissioner that he is the only honest man in the United States of America, and that every citizen who attempts to establish a claim by homestead entry or otherwise upon the public domain is a kleptomaniac, bent upon pillage, loot, and plunder, does not appear in the correspondence that has been presented.

I hope, therefore, that the Senate will consider this matter of sufficient importance to allow me to offer, and to adopt, the resolution that I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether the lands within the grant to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad declared forfeited by the act of July 6, 1886, have been restored to entry as provided by said act; and if not so restored, the occasion of the delay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE RELATING TO FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that so much of the message of the President sent to the Senate yesterday as relates to foreign affairs be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS AND PURCHASERS OF LANDS IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to give notice that I shall, to-morrow, move the consideration of Order of Business 1565 on the Calendar, being the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

MILITARY SITE ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of "concurrent or other resolutions" is still in order, but if the Senator does not wish to offer a resolution it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate a resolution which came over from yesterday under objection. The Chair will hear what the Senator from Illinois desires.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire that Order of Business 1876, being the joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill., be set down for a hearing on Monday morning next. It was set down for a hearing this morning, but I do not wish to interpose with reference to other business. It will take but a few minutes to act upon it when it is taken up; but I desire to have it postponed to allow friends on the other side to get some papers, if the Senate will consent to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion, being of the nature of a resolution, is now in order.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the joint resolution be postponed until next Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the joint resolution indicated by him be postponed to and made a special order for next Monday. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire, however, that it shall occupy the same place then that it does now. It is a special order on the Calendar for to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is a special order for to-day, it will occupy the same position on Monday next.

Mr. LOGAN. It is a special order already.

OREGON RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which came over from yesterday. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, as follows:

Whereas the Congress adjourned its last session on the 5th day of August last, and by the provisions of the bill commonly known as the River and Harbor bill, which became a law on that day, large appropriations were made, and were on that day immediately available, for the continuation of certain improvements of rivers and harbors in the State of Oregon and Washington Territory, including $187,500 for the further prosecution of the work of constructing a canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, $187,500 for the continuation of improvements at the mouth of the Columbia River, $75,000 for the continuation of the improvement at the entrance to Yaquina Bay, Oregon and $33,750 for the continuation of work on the improvement of Coos Bay, Oregon; and

Whereas it is alleged that no work whatever was done toward utilizing said appropriation for work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia until about the 10th day of October last, over two months after said appropriation was available, and thus losing, as it is alleged by those most interested in the early completion of said work, the great advantage of low water, good weather, and long days, and during which time it is alleged said work could have been carried on at much less expense and to greater advantage; and

Whereas it is further alleged the expenditure of the other appropriations above referred to has been postponed by the War Department or its engineers until next spring; and

Whereas the boards of trade at Portland, Oreg., and The Dalles, Oreg., representing those sections and communities largely interested in the speedy completion of the works for which such appropriations were made, including also the Columbia Water-Way Convention recently in session at Vancouver, Wash., have all deprecated the delays in the prosecution of such works, and have some of them also adopted strong resolutions of regret that Maj. W. A. Jones, a major of United States Engineers, and, it is alleged, for about two years last past in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, should, as it is alleged he was, after he had submitted his project for the expenditure of said appropriation for the continuation of work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, be relieved by his superiors and displaced by the assignment to said work of Capt. Charles F. Powell, a captain of United States Engineers, thus occasioning further delay, necessarily incident to any change at such a time; and

Whereas the Senators and Representative from the State of Oregon have, by such representative bodies, or some of them, been requested to inquire as to the cause of such delays in the utilization of said appropriations: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to advise the Senate, at his earliest practicable convenience, as to what change or changes, if any, have been made in the United States engineers in charge of the construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River since the 5th day of August last, and in charge of any of the river or harbor improvements in Oregon and Washington Territory since said date, and the date and character of any such change or changes, the names of the engineers relieved, changed, or transferred, and in what respect changed or transferred, and their rank respectively, and the reasons for such change or changes; also, in case any such change has been made, whether the engineer relieved had, prior to such change or transfer, submitted to the Chief of Engineers his project or plan for the expenditure of such appropriations, and whether or not the same had been approved or rejected by the Chief of Engineers, or Acting Chief of Engineers, or War Department, prior to such change or transfer of engineers in charge; also what change, if any, has been made in the plan of work or the manner of proposed expenditure of such appropriation since the date of such change of engineers; also, if such change of engineers was made, what works were in charge of such engineers respectively for the two years prior to such change; and, further, what river or harbor works or improvements have such engineers been in charge of since the date of such change.

Also, that the Secretary of War be further directed to report to the Senate further, at his earliest practicable convenience, whether it is true, as alleged, or otherwise, that the work at the mouth of the Columbia, at the entrance to Yaquina Bay, and at Coos Bay, Oregon, has been postponed until next spring, and the reasons in detail for such postponement.

And, further, that he transmit to the Senate with such reports, and as a part thereof, full copies of all correspondence, whether by letter or telegram, occurring between the War Department, or any of its officers, and any officer, board of trade, chamber of commerce, water-way convention, or person whomsoever, since August 5, 1886, relative to the expenditure of the appropriations above referred to, and each of them, or relative to any change of engineers in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, or relative to the change of engineers in charge of any of the works or improvements above specified.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the resolution; and I desire to state that the resolution of itself involves no attack on anybody. I shall assume, and I do assume in the resolution itself, that the Department will be able to make such report (at least I trust sincerely that will be the case) in answer to the resolution as will be entirely satisfactory not only to the representatives from the State of Oregon, but to the people who are so deeply interested in the early completion of the works referred to in the resolution. I am bound to assume that much in the introduction of the resolution. I am bound to assume that that is so until the Department and its engineers, more particularly, are heard.

It is sufficient to say that there has been for some reason, either good or bad (and that is to be held in abeyance for the moment), what seems to be, to the people of the State of Oregon interested in the early completion of these works, an unnecessary delay in utilizing the appropriations made by Congress at its last session for the carrying on of these important works on the Columbia River and on the Oregon coast.

There is a deep-seated feeling, I may say, among the people, and I think that is known perhaps to other members of the Senate who have visited Oregon during this fall, in reference to this matter. There is no disposition up to the present time to attach blame to any particular person or any particular officer, but they do desire, and earnestly desire, and insist that the Department shall be called upon to state what reasons exist, if any, that the works under these several appropriations have been delayed.

The resolution also refers to the fact that it is alleged in certain quarters, by certain important representative bodies, by the boards of trade of Portland, Oreg., and of The Dalles, Oreg., that a change of engineers was made in reference to the work at the canal and locks on the Cascades of the Columbia at a time which seemed to them necessarily to involve still further delay in the commencement of the work. It seemed to them, if a change were important, that such change should have been made earlier. Any change at the time this was made, it seems to them, involved unnecessary delay, and threw the commencement of the work from the long days, and good weather, and low water, into the fall of the year, when the days were short, and the water had risen, and the rains had come; when the work necessarily would be carried on at a much greater expense than if commenced at the time when the people generally out there think it ought to have been commenced. That is about the state of the case.

The resolution simply gives the Department an opportunity to present its side of the case to the Senate; that is all. There is no attack, as I have said in the first place, by the resolution on any department, or on any person, and none is intended.

In stating as much as I have, however, I desire to state further that I reserve the right, of course, to either approve or criticise to the fullest extent the answer which may come from the Department, in case the resolution should be adopted and the information called for furnished.

I hope, therefore, that no objection will be made to the resolution, in view of its character as it simply calls for information, and in view of the construction which I have given to the resolution so far as I am individually concerned.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the resolution is preceded by a preamble which I am not prepared to vote for. It makes a statement of facts which may or may not be true, and by passing the resolution in its present form the Senate is committed to that statement of facts. It seems to me it would be much more regular and much more orderly to have the resolution go to some committee; and therefore I move that the resolution, with the preamble, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I objected yesterday to the resolution, and I am glad that the motion is now made by the Senator from South Carolina to refer it to the Committee on Commerce, because I think the Senate will observe that there are many things in it which it does not care to know anything about, and there are things in it which it is very doubtful whether the Senate has any right to inquire into.

The idea that the work was delayed, I think is almost negatived on the face of the resolution itself. The River and Harbor act passed on the 5th day of August appropriating fourteen and a half million dollars for perhaps five hundred different objects, which were to be considered by the War Department and arranged by the Engineer Corps; and yet they were at work in the distant State of Oregon as early as the 10th day of October. Then somebody who was liked by the members of these conventions and parties interested in these constructions was removed after he had made estimates perhaps to suit them, and another officer was placed in charge by the War Department, perhaps in the interest of the public service or perhaps not. But these bodies have met and they are desiring to know why it is that the changes have been in the Engineer Corps, and they have instructed their representatives to ascertain the reasons. Their representatives could ascertain it, I suppose, at the War Department perfectly well without the Senate being called upon to go into all that question; but the resolution is that the Secretary of War shall tell us what was the cause of the delay and tell us "the date and character of any such change or changes, the names of the engineers relieved, changed, or transferred, and in what respect changed or transferred, and their rank respectively, and the reasons for such change or changes;" and all about whether plans had been first submitted before the changes were made, &c.

These highly respectable bodies in Oregon no doubt regret that some gentleman was removed and somebody else appointed. The Senate is therefore presumed to want to know all about the reasons for these changes, and we are to have perhaps all the facts stated by the War Department, that one man was removed for good and sufficient reasons and another man placed there because the good of the public service required it, and we are to ask for all the correspondence that was had with "any officer, board of trade, chamber of commerce, water-way convention, or person whomsoever, since August 5, 1886, relative to the expenditure of the appropriations above referred to," &c.

All that is to be brought before the Senate. I insist that that is not a question of information merely to arrive at facts in regard to the expenditure of money; it is to investigate the action of the Department in its change of officers and the assignment of officers to particular duties, and to bring up controversies as to whether the man removed was removed for good cause because he may have been friendly to some of the parties interested, and somebody more disinterested may have been put there, of which I know nothing. The Senate, surely, does not want to go into that question in this form, and I doubt whether it has a right to go into it in this form. Therefore, if the resolution is referred to the Committee on Commerce, of which committee I believe the Senator himself is a member, or his colleague is, for there is a Senator from Oregon on that committee, they can ascertain through the Department all the facts the Senator cares to know, and the committee can then tell what we ought to have and what we ought not to have.

The Secretary of War, under this resolution, would be compelled to give us all communications with everybody, all the reasons assigned, perhaps all the slanders that were sent to him against a man removed, which we care nothing about. The committee can call for everything it deems proper. Correspondence with every person, good or bad, friendly or unfriendly, either to the officers or to the administration, is called for. Why not let the whole matter go to the committee? One of the Senators from Oregon is a member of it, and the committee can obtain the information at once, and then it can lay before the Senate such things as the Senate ought to know and exclude such things as are not pertinent but which the Secretary of War would be compelled to send to the Senate and have printed if this resolution should pass. Therefore I shall vote for the reference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think the preamble of this resolution, which does appear to assume things that we do not know, might well be laid on the table if the resolution should be adopted; but the resolution itself, although it is long, really calls for the cause of the delay in the prosecution of this public work by public officers. That is the whole gist of the resolution, and it calls for the correspondence in connection therewith. Surely the Senate ought to have a right to such information as that; surely the Secretary of War ought to be glad to communicate to the Senate all information bearing upon that topic, and whether glad or not it would be his duty to do it.

It is not half an hour ago that we adopted by unanimous consent on an oral preamble stated by my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] a resolution of precisely the same character, calling upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office for a statement of the reasons and causes why there had been a delay in opening lands restored by Congress to public entry in the execution of a law, without a single word of objection, and on a full explanation in the way of an oral preamble, as it may be called, by the Senator from Kansas as to what was said and what was complained about. Now, are we to be one thing as to the Land Office and another thing as to the Corps of Engineers?

This resolution does not call for the reasons for removing anybody from an office. All the officers in charge of the public works on rivers and harbors of the United States are officers of the Army of the United States, in respect of whom the pretension of removal by the President or head of the Department has not yet been made. It is only a transfer of duties that is spoken of; and it is not only our right but it is our duty, when a Senator from a State interested, representing his people, asks for it, it seems to me, to call for the reasons for the transfer of one engineer in charge of one work to another in that State or out of it. Otherwise we should have no right to call on the Secretary of War to inform us whether he had transferred General Miles from the department that embraces the Indians in the Southwest to the Northwest, and who had succeeded him, and the cause of it. Is that not a matter of public information which the legislative bodies of Congress have an absolute right to? It would seem so.

It appears, therefore, that it is magnifying an ordinary course of things to refer a resolution of this character to a committee to inquire whether it is proper to ask the head of the Department of War to tell us what was being done about these officers during this recess; and that is all there is of it.

The preamble I should be willing to vote to lay on the table after the resolution should have been acted upon.

Mr. BUTLER. The statement of the Senator from Vermont relieves the resolution of the difficulty which occurred to me. I have not the slightest objection to the inquiry being made of the Secretary of War to obtain the information which the Senator from Oregon desires, but he based that resolution on a state of facts, an assumed condition of things which I am not prepared to vote for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Neither am I.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the Senator from Vermont and I are not very far apart.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that if he desires it I will abandon the preamble. I presented it so as to have the matter brought to the attention of the Senate. I ask now simply for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. No doubt the Senate has the right to call on the Secretary for information, but I am not quite prepared to assume that the transfer of one officer from one station to another has caused delay, nor am I prepared to assume as true a great many other allegations of the preamble. But with the motion prevailing that the preamble be stricken out, or laid on the table, or disposed of in some way, I have not the slightest objection to the passage of the resolution itself.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. In drawing the resolution I aimed not to assume any fact, but simply to state that it was alleged in certain quarters that certain facts existed. However, in view of what has been said, I ask leave to modify my resolution by eliminating the whereases and move the adoption of the resolution itself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The preamble is a separate part of it, and it can be divided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has a right to modify his resolution, or he can withdraw part of it. The question is on the resolution as modified by striking out the preamble.

Mr. VOORHEES. That the Senate may correctly understand what they are voting on, I should like to call the attention of Senators to the requirements of this resolution. The last clause of it is as follows:

And, further, that he transmit to the Senate with such reports, and as a part thereof, full copies of all correspondence, whether by letter or telegram, occurring between the War Department or any of its officers, and any officer, board of trade, chamber of commerce, water-way convention, or person whomsoever, since August 5, 1886, relative to the expenditure of the appropriations above referred to, and each of them; or relative to any change of engineers in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River; or relative to the change of engineers in charge of any of the works or improvements above specified.

I am not as well advised, perhaps, as others in regard to the duties of the Engineer Corps, but I take it that this is a pretty severe dragnet, calling for all the letters and telegrams of every description relating to the change of one officer for another. The preceding clause of the resolution is much the same. It is to rake out all the reasons that may have operated upon the War Department in its administration of this fund.

I desire to vote for information, and shall vote if this resolution can be gotten in proper shape for such information as is required to inform us of the condition of the work that has been suspended, and the like; but as for voting to lay before the country all the correspondence which the War Department may have had with its officers of every kind and description by letter and telegram, I shall not do it; nor shall I vote to require it to lay before the Senate and the country not only its correspondence with its own officers but with any person whomsoever on this subject. I think it an unusual call.

I say to the Senator from Oregon, what he already knows, that I am in favor of the widest information on the subject, but it seems to me this resolution is drawn in a tone of reflection upon the administration of the War Office to which I do not feel willing to lend myself by my vote or my voice.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I have already stated that I assumed, as I am bound to do, that the answer to this resolution will be satisfactory. If it shall not be, of course then will be time enough to attack the administration or attack the engineers, but we are certainly entitled to this information, and I desire to have it.

I modify the resolution by striking out the words "as alleged" in the body of the resolution ten or twelve lines from the bottom. It refers to the preamble and it is necessary to strike that out. Those words refer to the preamble and should be now stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon modifies his resolution. The modification will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the second paragraph of the resolution, third line, strike out the words "as alleged;" so as to read:

Also that the Secretary of War be further directed to report to the Senate further, at his earliest practicable convenience, whether it is true, or otherwise, that the work at the mouth of the Columbia, at the entrance to Yaquina Bay, and at Coos Bay, Oregon, has been postponed until next spring, and the reasons in detail for such postponement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from South Carolina to withdraw his motion to refer.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; I withdraw the motion to refer to the Committee on Commerce, with the understanding that the preamble shall be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been stricken out.

Mr. BECK. I renew the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the resolution as modified be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Oregon has made a satisfactory statement to the Senate of the facts upon which this resolution is predicated. There is evidently some controversy out in Oregon in respect to the removal of Major Jones from the charge of the work at The Dalles and the substitution in his place of Capt. Charles F. Powell. From the recitals in the preamble, especially that one which states that certain persons have "deprecated the delays in the prosecution of such works, and have some of them also adopted strong resolutions of regret that Maj. W. A Jones, a major of United States Engineers, and it is alleged for about two years last past in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, should, as it is alleged he was, after he had submitted his project for the expenditure of said appropriation for the continuation of work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, be relieved by his superiors and displaced by the assignment to said work of Capt. Charles F. Powell, a captain of United States Engineers, thus occasioning further delay necessarily incident to any change at such a time," I infer that Major Jones had some personal or special reason for desiring to remain in charge of that work, and that certain persons interested in the improvement, either directly or in a general sense, also desired that Major Jones should remain there, and they have expressed to the Secretary of War, I suppose in terms of strong indignation, their regret and their objection to the removal of Major Jones and the substitution of Captain Powell; and that is one of the features in the case that the resolution requires the Secretary of War to answer upon.

Now, I think that when we make an appropriation for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and in the bill we leave it discretionary with the President as to the manner and time of the application of the money, the War Department, in whose charge this fund is placed, must have at least a reasonable discretion in the selection of the officers who are to disburse the money and superintend the work; and it would be rather an innovation, and perhaps a dangerous one, if we should undertake to criticize the action of the War Department pending the progress of the work, and that a particular clamor should be listened to and indorsed by the Senate of the United States relating merely to the removal of one officer in charge of a work and the substitution of another.

Action of this kind has a tendency, to say the least of it, to withdraw discretionary power from the Secretary of War and to make him amenable during the progress of the work for the manner and conduct of all the expenditures and disbursements connected with it.

It seems to me, sir, that that is a very objectionable feature of this resolution. Every improvement, as is suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, made by the United States Government is subject to the same inquiry; and if the Senate should give its indorsement to this precedent, which I think is entirely a novel one, we shall be beset, I dare say, with interruptions in many places in the country in respect of the discretionary power of the War Department in making these expenditures in a certain way, and particularly in reference to the discretion that it must and ought to exercise as a military power in the change of its officers whenever in the opinion of the Department a change ought to be made.

I will not suggest even, although the suggestion I think does occur to the mind of any ordinary reader, that some officer of the Army of the United States has a hand in this movement. Some officer of the Engineer Corps is disappointed, doubtless, in the plans which he has made, the arrangements which he has prepared, for having this work carried on, and is dissatisfied that a captain of engineers should be substituted there in the place of a major of engineers.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, for one I want to assure the Senator from Alabama that, to my certain knowledge, no engineer has any hand in this movement. Upon the contrary, it is a movement suggested not only by the representative bodies to which I have made reference, but by the people generally, who are deeply interested in the early prosecution of these works; and, as I have said, they are not disposed at this stage of the game to find fault with anybody or to criticize anybody, but they believe, and I believe, that there has been an unnecessary delay in utilizing these appropriations, or some of them at least.

There is no controversy here, so far as I am aware, between engineers. Personally I will say that I am well acquainted with both of the engineers in charge of river and harbor improvements in Oregon. One is a major of engineers, Major W. A. Jones, and the other is a captain of engineers, Captain Charles F. Powell. I have known them both for some years. They both stand high in their profession, as I understand. They are both good engineers. The people of Oregon care nothing, so far as I am advised at present, what engineer is in charge of any particular work, so that he prosecutes the work with diligence, and carries out the wish of Congress in the premises; and I can assure the Senator from Alabama and the Senate, that I intend no attack on anybody. I intend this resolution for the benefit of no particular person or officer; and I intend that it shall not be to the disadvantage of any particular person or officer, unless the facts shall justify such a conclusion after we shall have heard from the Department.

All that the people of Oregon and of Washington Territory do desire is, that we have information as to why this is thus, and that is all; and it seems to me that the protest which is being made here is most unusual. It seems to me that the friends of the Administration, the friends of the Secretary of War, and of the Engineer Department, in view of the state of feeling, to which I have attracted attention, and which is not confined to any particular party by any means in Oregon and Washington Territory, ought to be willing to state to the Senate fully and freely what there is about this thing, why these delays have occurred; and then, if the Department has good reasons to offer, that is the end of the controversy, and everybody will be, as he ought to be, satisfied.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this protest is not unusual to any resolution that comes in this unusual form before the Senate. This is the first resolution in this form that I think I have seen since I have been in this body.

The Senator from Oregon now explains that there is no controversy between Captain Powell and Major Jones, and, so far as he is informed, no desire exists on the part of either one or the other of these officers to take the place, or be relieved from the place.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I believe they are warm personal friends.

Mr. MORGAN. And doubtless good soldiers, and obedient to the law and to the orders of their superiors; and there is no desire on the part of any person in Oregon, even those persons who express their indignation at the removal of Major Jones, to keep Captain Powell out of the work or to have any one substituted for Major Jones, and no desire to have Major Jones retained. If that be so, then what is the object of the inquiry, why is the Department asked to state reasons for the removal of Major Jones and the substitution of Captain Powell?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will tell the Senator, if he will allow me.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If good reasons existed for a change of engineers in charge of the work on the construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, then it has seemed to me, and it has seemed to a great many other persons besides myself in Oregon and Washington Territory, that that change should not have been postponed for over two months after the adjournment of Congress, and postponed until after a date, as I understand, when the engineer in charge, and who had been in charge (Major Jones) for some two years before, had submitted his project to the Chief of Engineers, had submitted his plan for the expenditure of the money appropriated by Congress, and was waiting orders to commence work. Why it was that the transfer, that the relieving of Major Jones, should be postponed until that time, when a change of engineers, without reference to whom the engineers were, necessarily involved a further delay of the work, is what we desire to know. That is all. That is the principal ground, as I understand, upon which reference is made to a change of engineers at all, that it was done at a most unusual time, at a late day in the year, and after the engineer in charge had submitted his project and plans for the expenditure of the money. I understand further, although I may be wrong about that, that since the new engineer has been in charge no change has been made in the plans or project of Major Jones, who had been in charge for two years before and was relieved some two months after the appropriation was made.

The Senator misapprehends if he supposes for one moment that by this resolution I am championing the cause of Major Jones or desiring to reflect upon Captain Powell. They are both personal friends of mine, and I am friendly to them. Nothing of the kind is intended; but there is a state of feeling among the people of Oregon arising by reason of these long delays in the prosecution of the work that has induced these representative boards to speak out, that has caused them to flood their Senators and Representative with letters from all parts of the State, and we feel, in justice to our constituents, that we are doing no more than we ought; and we feel also that the administration should be perfectly willing to give an answer to this "clamor," as it was called by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. President, it is always fair to an officer of the Government of the United States when a Senator rises in his place and offers a resolution touching his official conduct that a statement should be made of the facts upon which that resolution is predicated, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] has done. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] insists that no accusation has been made against the Secretary of War at all; he insists that he is bound to assume that the Secretary of War has done exactly right in all that he has done, and he further insists, or rather I think he further declares, that he expects that when the answer to this resolution to this fishing bill shall come in, the Secretary of War will disclose the fact that there has been some partiality or some want of interest in the expenditure of money in Oregon under this appropriation. When accusations of that kind are brought forward they ought to be specifically stated, and a committee of this body ought to inquire into their truthfulness. There is not a statement in this preamble or in the resolution which is made otherwise than upon information and belief. It is not made as forcibly as that, because the recital is, "Whereas it is alleged." There is nothing in this whole preamble, nothing in the resolution, that is predicated upon any more substantial statement than merely "it is alleged." Who alleges, and what is alleged? Let the Senator, unless he is able to get up in his seat and make a statement of the facts on which he wishes us to vote, allow his resolution to go to the committee in order that that committee may inquire into the existence of facts, not into mere allegation or suspicion of their existence, the mere general rumor of their existence.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that in his conclusion the Senator from Oregon distinctly disavows any charge of improper or arbitrary exercise of discretion on the part of the Secretary of War. If he had by law the exercise of discretion, what have we to do with it? What have we to do with a power which by law is given to him to assign his officers according to his discretion, unless there is some charge of malfeasance or misconduct on his part?

Mr. MORGAN. The view taken by the Senator from Texas is entirely obvious, it seems to me, and it should lead us, in the event that the resolution is not committed to the Committee on Commerce, to the striking out of the latter clause, at least all the last part of the resolution in these words:

> And, further, that he transmit to the Senate with such reports, and as a part thereof, full copies of all correspondence, whether by letter or telegram, occurring between the War Department, or any of its officers, and any officer, board of trade, chamber of commerce, water-way convention, or person whomsoever, since August 5, 1886, relative to the expenditure of the appropriations above referred to, and each of them, or relative to any change of engineers in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, or relative to the change of engineers in charge of any of the works or improvements above specified.

I insist, Mr. President, that if this resolution is not committed to the Committee on Commerce these words ought to be stricken out:

> Or relative to any change of engineers in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, or relative to the change of engineers in charge of any of the works or improvements above specified.

For whether correspondence may have taken place between the War Department and any individuals whatsoever, whether associated in societies or meetings or what not, is a matter that the Senate of the United States ought not to interfere with. It is a matter which we can not use in the event that the correspondence is brought before the Senate except for the purpose of impeaching the conduct in office of the Secretary of War; and what use can we make of that information?

There stands the appropriation bill. Here are the powers given under it to the Secretary of War to make the expenditure according to a reasonable discretion vested in him by the act of Congress. He gets all this information, telegrams sent to him, letters written to him, letters written by the Department or any of its officers in respect of the change of these engineers. Can we effect a change of the engineers in any way? Can we say by an order that Major Jones shall conduct that work, or shall the Senate order that Captain Powell be removed from his assignment of duty to that work if he has been assigned to it? We shall have no power over that subject when we get the papers.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand the Senator, then, to assume the position that under no state of circumstances that he could imagine would the Senate have any right to call upon the Secretary of War to state why a certain officer had been relieved or a certain other officer had been transferred?

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator is not right in supposing that I have taken any such position.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It seems to me that is the Senator's argument.

Mr. MORGAN. There are circumstances which not only could be imagined but are perfectly obvious under which the Senate of the United States would not only have the right, but it would be its duty, to inquire into the conduct of one of the officers of the Government; but this is not a case of that kind, for when we get the information as to the change of the engineers on that work what are we going to do with it? The Senator disclaims any idea of impeaching the conduct of the Secretary of War. He wishes to give that color to his resolution until, I suppose, the Secretary of War, by a self-inculpation in his report, shall place within his reach the material upon which he can make some accusation against that officer. That must be the idea.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will state very frankly to the Senator that if this resolution should be adopted, and the Secretary of War be unable to present what would be to me a satisfactory reason for these delays, I should probably criticise him pretty severely.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the Senator from Oregon states in the Senate of the United States that he believes from the facts which have been brought to his attention by his constituents that the Secretary of War has been guilty of malversation in office in the change of these engineers; that he has done something for which he ought to be censured by the Senate of the United States, for that is as far as we can possibly go in reviewing or in reforming anything that he has done or may do in respect to these engineers. The Senate can not take from him the discretionary power of changing these officers, for that is a power which belongs to the Secretary of War or the President of the United States, both under the Constitution and the laws of the country. The Senator does not expect to reach that result. He does not expect to compel the restoration of Major Jones to the place that Captain Powell has been assigned to. Then, what does he expect to do? Merely to get information upon which, I suppose, he can address himself to the Senate and people of the United States to make accusations against the Secretary of War in respect of his manner of conducting this matter of official duty.

Now, if there is ground for that, I will unite with the Senator from Oregon in bringing it to light. I should never consent to be a party to hiding it at all. But in order that the Senate shall be informed that there is such ground, let the Senator state it; let him state whether or not the conduct of the Secretary of War in the change of these officers is in the slightest degree reprehensible and a violation of his public and official duties. Let the grounds come forth, or otherwise let the Senate be informed by a reference of this resolution to a committee what the real facts of the case may be.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon disclaimed any imputation on the Secretary of War in respect of his change of assignments. That in my judgment yields the whole question.

The law places the improvement of rivers and harbors under the War Department, and grants to the Secretary of War a discretionary power as to the mode and manner of executing the duty devolved on him by law. Now, in performing that ministerial function, there being no implication of improper conduct on his part, or of arbitrary removal and appointment, he is simply doing what the law requires him to do; and no amount of information that can be furnished under this resolution will be of any service to the Senate. The effect, therefore, as everybody brings his complaint here, as a matter of course, will be to place a young officer in charge of a particular work and develop his great capacity. He wants to be transferred to a higher sphere. He is promoted to the higher field; but that officer fails to meet the expectations of the War Department. Then the Secretary simply puts a finer man there, and puts this one in charge of some minor work. That process necessarily goes on. The Secretary of War undoubtedly has information on which he acts. Captain Powell perhaps has developed bright talent as an engineer, and is able to take charge of these works.

There is nothing alleged against the War Department in the way of improper conduct in this matter, but it appears that certain persons in Oregon had an officer they liked, and another has been placed there by the Secretary of War, as he had a perfect right to do. It makes no difference to me what motive the Secretary of War had in doing it, provided it was an honest motive. The discretion by law is given him to determine where he will place different officers. He can remove one and put another in whenever and wherever he pleases, provided he thinks the public interest will be benefited thereby; and there being no allegation of any kind of improper conduct on his part, I can not for the life of me see what on earth we have to do with this matter.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, my colleague distinctly disclaims any imputation against the Secretary of War by this resolution. If I supposed the resolution contained such an imputation I should not support it without a reference or a further examination, but I do not understand that to be the case.

The Secretary of War, by the provisions of the River and Harbor bill, is given control of the expenditure of the appropriations which are made for the improvement of rivers and harbors—vast discretionary power. The work is not conducted entirely by the Engineer Corps. As I understand it, large sums are annually paid for civil engineers who assist in the work. I am not familiar with the process of auditing the accounts or letting the work, except as it is provided for in the River and Harbor bill.

I do not think it would be an extraordinary thing for the Senate of the United States, or the Congress of the United States, to call upon the Secretary of War for some account of the manner in which he expends the millions which are annually or biennially appropriated for rivers and harbors; and if there is no precedent for this resolution, I do not think it would be a bad one to establish, so far as that is concerned.

I know something of the supposed reasons of the change which was made in the supervision of this work at the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, and I believe that the Secretary of War and General Parke, who was at the time Acting Chief of Engineers, will be very glad of an opportunity to lay their reasons before the Senate, if they are called for, and all the communications which are asked for here. They have been frankly stated to me on more than one occasion by General Parke, then Acting Chief of Engineers, and by the Secretary of War also.

I think it is due to the people of Oregon who have by their representatives requested this information, and to the Secretary of War himself, that an opportunity be given for presenting the reasons for the changes and acts which are referred to in this resolution. He may be able to explain satisfactorily to my colleague and myself the reasons why the work was not progressing at Yaquina and the mouth of the Columbia. He may be able to show that it can be done more economically by deferring it till spring. He may be able to show satisfactory reasons for changing the supervision of the work on the canal at the Cascades. If he does not, it does not necessarily follow, it appears to me, that he is to be censured for exercising the power which is given him by law to designate the officers of the Engineer Corps who shall have charge of the various works. But if it shall appear that by reason thereof the work has been necessarily delayed, that there were not sufficient reasons for the change in the supervision, or at least that there were reasons which ought not to have produced the action which was had and the change in the supervision of the work, then it may be a matter for criticism, possibly for action, by the Senate or Congress of the United States.

As I say, I do not believe for a moment that the Secretary of War will hesitate to give full information on this subject. I believe he will be glad of an opportunity to make a full statement in regard to this whole matter. I therefore favor the adoption of the resolution. I do not see what can be gained by referring it to the Committee on Commerce, what sort of an investigation that committee could make on the matter, or what sort of a report they could make. It is a very common practice certainly for the Senate of the United States to call for information from every department of the Government, and I see no reason why it should not be done in this case.

As I said before, if I believed for a moment that this resolution as drawn contained a reflection upon the Secretary of War, I would want further investigation and examination myself before voting for the resolution. As it is, I deem it to be fair to that officer to have it passed.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, my attention has been especially called to this matter, and I think the resolution of inquiry is a very proper one. I can not see any objection except to the last four lines of the resolution, which call on the War Department for any correspondence, either by telegraph or otherwise, relative to the change of Major Jones in charge of the work. The rest of the resolution is simply a call for information that the Senate ought to be in possession of. The change of the officer at the time and under the circumstances, as is believed by all the organized commercial bodies in Oregon and others who have examined the subject, meant a change of the plans of this great work on the Columbia River. It is believed there, and I believe, that the change of the officer in charge meant a radical change in the plan, involving perhaps millions of dollars. As I have read this resolution carefully, it asks for nothing improper except the reasons of the War Department for making that change which for the time being suspended the work. To bring the resolution within the ordinary bound of resolutions of inquiry, on which I myself feel the Committee on Commerce can not improve, I move to strike out of the last four lines of the resolution the words:

Or relative to any change of engineers in charge of the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River; or relative to the change of engineers in charge of any of the works or improvements above specified.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. As I think the resolution is sufficiently broad to answer my purpose without those words, I consent to strike them out.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I shall vote for the resolution with great pleasure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be modified accordingly.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Maryland is quite easily satisfied. The words that he has stricken out are repeated in the body of the resolution with a good deal more emphasis than they are in the lines stricken out.

Mr. GORMAN. Where?

Mr. BECK. In the seventh line of the resolution, the Secretary of War is required to give "the date and character of any such change or changes, the names of the engineers relieved, changed, or transferred, and in what respect changed or transferred, and their rank respectively, and the reasons for such change or changes; also, in case any such change has been made, whether the engineer relieved had, prior to such change or transfer, submitted to the Chief of Engineers his project or plan for the expenditure of such appropriations, and whether or not the same had been approved or rejected by the Chief of Engineers, or Acting Chief of Engineers, or War Department, prior to such change or transfer of engineers in charge; also, what change, if any, has been made in the plan of work;" which is to my mind quite as objectionable as the resolution was before the last modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Commerce, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when Mr. BERRY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. BERRY] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. MAXEY (when Mr. COKE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. COKE] is confined to his room by sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL] on political questions. As I do not know how he would vote on this motion, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. TELLER'S name was called). The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] advised me that he would be compelled to be absent for a few days, and asked that I should pair him. Pursuant to that request I asked the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who is usually paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], to pair with the Senator from Colorado, to which he agreed, if agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. KENNA. With the permission of the Senator from Illinois, I will say that my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is absent under peculiar circumstances, and with his assent I announce a pair between the two; so that the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Kentucky may vote.

Mr. CULLOM. That arrangement is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have already voted under the arrangement suggested.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is perfectly proper, Mr. President.

The roll-call proceeded.

Mr. RANSOM (when the name of Mr. VANCE was called). My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. VOORHEES (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is temporarily absent from the Chamber.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 18, nays 34; as follows:

So the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Commerce was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to advise the Senate, at his earliest practicable convenience, as to what change or changes, if any, have been made in the United States engineers in charge of the construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River since the 5th day of August last, and in charge of any of the river or harbor improvements in Oregon and Washington Territory since said date, and the date and character of any such change or changes, the names of the engineers relieved, changed, or transferred, and in what respect changed or transferred, and their rank respectively, and the reasons for such change or changes; also, in case any such change has been made, whether the engineer relieved had, prior to such change or transfer, submitted to the Chief of Engineers his project or plan for the expenditure of such appropriations, and whether or not the same had been approved or rejected by the Chief of Engineers, or Acting Chief of Engineers, or War Department, prior to such change or transfer of engineers in charge; also what change, if any, has been made in the plan of work or the manner of proposed expenditure of such appropriation since the date of such change of engineers; also, if such change of engineers was made, what works were in charge of such engineers respectively for the two years prior to such change; and, further, what river or harbor works or improvements have such engineers been in charge of since the date of such change.

Also that the Secretary of War be further directed to report to the Senate further, at his earliest practicable convenience, whether it is true or otherwise that the work at the mouth of the Columbia, at the entrance to Yaquina Bay, and at Coos Bay, Oregon, has been postponed until next spring, and the reasons in detail for such postponement.

And, further, that he transmit to the Senate with such reports, and as a part thereof, full copies of all correspondence, whether by letter or telegram, occurring between the War Department, or any of its officers, and any officer, board of trade, chamber of commerce, water-way convention, or person whomsoever, since August 5, 1886, relative to the expenditure of the appropriations above referred to, and each of them.

REFERENCE OF FINANCE PART OF MESSAGE.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to submit a motion in the nature of a resolution, that all matters in the President's message relating to finance be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

DAMAGES TO SENATE EMPLOYES.

Mr. PLUMB. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Contingent Expenses be directed to investigate the accident which occurred in a freight elevator of the Senate wing of the Capitol in July last, whereby two employés of the Senate were seriously injured, and report their conclusions as to the responsibility for the same, to the Senate at the earliest day practicable, together with a resolution providing for the payment to the persons so damaged of such sums as the committee may deem proper to cover the expenses, loss, and damage incurred thereby.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am afraid that commits the committee to report a resolution, even if they think the United States is not responsible. I suggest an amendment to come in at the end of the resolution:

If said committee shall be of opinion that compensation ought to be made.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over and be printed.

DEATHS OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, conveyed to the Senate intelligence of the death of Hon. LEWIS BEACH and of the death of Hon. JOHN ARNOT, jr., late Representatives from the State of New York.

The message also announced the death of Hon. WILLIAM T. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I gave notice at the close of the last session that on the first day of the present session I would move to take up Order of Business 122, being the joint resolution (S. R. 5) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women. I do not know the nature of the business the Senator from Wisconsin may desire to present to the Senate. I should like to move to proceed to the consideration of that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is in order. The Senator from Wisconsin, however, rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to permit that resolution to go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin is now in order.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the message from the House of Representatives announcing the death of Hon. WILLIAM T. PRICE, a member of that body from the State of Wisconsin, be laid before the Senate.

Whereas, in the appropriation provided by the first session of this Congress for rivers and harbors, there are various sums for expenditure on public works in the Pacific northwest, especially for the locks and dam at the Cascades of the Columbia River, the continued improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River, for Yaquina Bay, Coos Bay, Coquille River, Willamette and Columbia Rivers below Portland City; Upper Willamette and Yam Hill Rivers, Upper Columbia and Snake Rivers, and for preliminary examinations and surveys of Siuslaw River, Tillamook Bay and bar, and Umpqua River above Scottsburg, which appropriations became available immediately following the approval of the River and Harbor act, August 5, 1886; and

Whereas operations (except of a minor character) for the expenditure of said appropriations have been deferred until the spring season of 1887, and the appropriation for the important canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, in Oregon, was delayed and not made available for active use until on or about October 10, 1886, thus prolonging the hopes of the people of the great Columbia basin for cheap transportation on a free river to the open sea; and

Whereas boards of trade of the prominent towns and cities interested in the commercial development expected from these works, and a water-way convention, composed of representatives from the whole of said Pacific northwest country, have called upon their Representatives in Congress to ascertain the cause of said delays: Therefore,

BUSINESS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit for present consideration the resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be authorized to request the fixing of Thursday, the 16th day of December, 1886, for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MORRISON. Does the resolution make the usual reservation in favor of revenue and appropriation bills?

Mr. TUCKER. I think the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] that I am willing to insert the reservation of general appropriation bills and revenue bills.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as now modified.

The resolution as modified was read.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask the Chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether that order will include the consideration of the Eads Ship Railway bill?

Mr. REAGAN. The resolution does not specify any particular measure; but I will state to my friend from Pennsylvania that under this order the consideration of the bill to which he refers will not be urged.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I simply asked the question for information.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether that order will include the Colorado Trail Cattle bill?

Mr. REAGAN. It includes any bill reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PETERS. Then I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. I suggest to the Chairman of the Committee on Commerce that that bill may be excepted, so as to obviate the objection of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. PETERS. If it is understood that that bill is not to be considered I withdraw my objection.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that we will not call up that bill under this resolution.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the gentleman from Texas if previous special orders are included in the reservation?

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose that would be determined under the usual rule as to priority of business.

Mr. HATCH. Unless there is a reservation of previous special orders already on the Calendar I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Missouri to object?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There was no objection, and the resolution was so referred.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. As the regular order of business, the Chair will now proceed to call committees for reports.

The call of committees was completed, no reports having been made.

Mr. MORRISON and Mr. HATCH rose.

Mr. MORRISON. I rose for the purpose of moving that the House adjourn, as there seems to be no business ready for consideration.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to make a privileged motion.

Mr. MORRISON. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills under the special order of April 30, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 13th day of May, 1886, after the second call of committees, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on Agriculture, this order not to interfere with general appropriation or revenue bills, and whether so interfered with on that day or not, shall be a continuing order until the bills presented by said committee shall be disposed of.

Mr. MORRISON. Under the terms of the order must not this be postponed till the completion of the second hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not know for what purpose the gentleman from Missouri rose. The special order to which he refers expressly provides that business of the Committee on Agriculture shall be taken up for consideration after the second call of committees.

Mr. HATCH. Then this will be the next business in order after the second call?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order after that call.

Mr. HATCH. Then I demand the regular order.

Mr. MORRISON. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] does not desire to proceed, I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The second call of committees for the presentation of bills for consideration for one hour rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

GRADUATES OF UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. BRAGG. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1424) reported back by the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That no graduate of the United States Military Academy shall be required to refund to the United States any pay or allowances received by him as an officer in the United States Army from the date of the rank given him by his first commission until taking the oath of office as such, or in consequence of having been granted a leave of absence on full pay upon graduation, in accordance with the uniform practice since the establishment of the Military Academy.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That every cadet who has heretofore graduated or may hereafter graduate at the West Point Military Academy, and who has been or may hereafter be commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army of the United States, under the laws appointing such graduates to the Army, shall be allowed full pay as second lieutenant from the date of his graduation to the date of his acceptance of and qualification under his commission, without reduction by reason of graduation leave, in accordance with the uniform practice which has prevailed since the establishment of the Military Academy.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer as an amendment to the amendment of the committee what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out in the ninth and tenth lines on the second page the words "without reduction by reason of," and inserting in lieu thereof "and during his."

Mr. BRAGG. The object of this bill is to settle and define the pay of the cadet at West Point while he occupies the peculiar position of being a graduate and at the same time holding no commission in the regular Army. The practice has been uniformly, from the organization of the Government down to last year, that the cadet received the pay of a second lieutenant from the time of his discharge from the Academy up to the time when he got his commission and also during the usual graduation leave that was given him after graduation before he entered upon his duties in the Army. During last year the point was made by the accounting officers of the Treasury that a man could not be a lieutenant who was not commissioned, and therefore that a cadet not commissioned did not hold the position of lieutenant. That presented the question what pay he should draw, and, under the decision of the accounting officers, it was held that he should draw the pay of a cadet instead of the pay of a lieutenant.

I maintain that that decision, although it may be strictly within the letter of the law, is absolutely wrong, according to the spirit of the law. The cadet when he graduated ceased to be a cadet. The vacancy made by his graduation was filled under the order of the War Department by the appointment of another cadet. If he was not a cadet, but had moved on from the cadetship, then he was, although not de jure, yet de facto, a lieutenant in the Army. There was no place for him as a cadet; there was a place for him as a lieutenant, and he was awaiting the issue to him by the Government of his commission, so that he could enter upon his duties in the service. The question thus raised is settled by this bill. The reason of the amendment proposed to that branch of the bill by the Committee on Military Affairs is this: The Senate bill would only prevent the collection of back pay from such lieutenants as it had not already been collected from, leaving a large class of officers in the army who have received the usual allowances still subject to be attacked by the Treasury Department, in each individual case, for the collection of the difference between the pay of a cadet and the pay of a lieutenant, which they had received. The Committee on Military Affairs thought that if we passed the bill in the form in which it came from the Senate it would only partially cure the evil, and the next Congress would be called upon to pass another bill to meet the difficulty in the remaining cases. Therefore the Committee have offered this amendment in order to make the bill apply to all officers who have heretofore received this pay, or who may hereafter receive it, thus settling the whole question at once. So much for that branch of the bill.

As to the other amendment, which makes the clause read: "and during his graduation leave," as I understand it, the accounting officers of the Treasury looked over the law applicable to officers on duty in the army, and found that such officers were not entitled to a leave of more than thirty days in any one year; and that if that time was extended they were put upon half pay. Then, as the graduation leave extends over more than thirty days, the accounting officers applied the scissors to that also, and reduced the pay to half cadet pay. Thus the first ruling held that these cadets were not lieutenants because they had not been commissioned, while the second held that they were sufficiently lieutenants to justify the application of a rule which would cut down the pittance which they had received. The provisions of this bill simply carry into effect what was the uniform practice from the time of the organization of the academy down to the past year. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I should like a little further explanation of this bill from the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. I have explained it as well as I can, but I will try to satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I thought the gentleman's explanation was satisfactory until I got the bill, but if what I hold in my hand is the correct bill, the explanation is not quite full enough.

Mr. BRAGG. Probably that is not the bill. When I sent for the bill, another one was brought to me.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How long is the pay to continue after graduation?

Mr. BRAGG. The graduation leave generally lasts until the 28th of August or the 1st of September.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And under this bill, as I understand it, the pay is to be that of lieutenant?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; second lieutenant.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Whether assigned to duty or not?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And permanently so?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; the pay is that of second lieutenant up to the time of assignment to duty.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Although no vacancy should occur for half a dozen years?

Mr. BRAGG. We passed a law in the last Congress providing for assignments by the President whether there were vacancies or not.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BRAGG to the substitute, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 72, noes 6.

The substitute as amended was then adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be passed as amended; there being—ayes 85, noes 0.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to amend the title so as to read "An act for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy, and to fix their pay."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION FOR CAVALRY AND LIGHT ARTILLERY.

Mr. BRAGG. I now call up the bill (H. R. 7192) which has already been partially considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7192) to provide a school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery, and for the construction and completion of quarters, barracks, and stables at certain posts for the use of the Army of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] state that this bill has been already considered in the House?

Mr. BRAGG. It has been.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds that on the 4th of May last the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was by unanimous consent, discharged from its further consideration, and it was considered for a time in the House and reached a stage at which the gentleman from Wisconsin demanded the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. Thereupon, as the Journal states, the bill was "laid aside for the present." The Clerk had better report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish upon the military reservation at Fort Riley a permanent school of instruction for drill and practice for the cavalry and light artillery service of the Army of the United States, and which shall be the depot to which all recruits for such service shall be sent; and for the purpose of construction of such quarters, barracks, and stables as may be required to carry into effect the purposes of this act the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to complete the quarters and barracks at Fort D. A. Russell, in the Territory of Wyoming, and also to enlarge and complete the quarters and barracks at Fort Robinson, in the State of Nebraska, to a capacity for a garrison of ten companies; and there is hereby appropriated for the purposes mentioned in this section, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $175,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Although the previous question was called on this bill when it was under consideration at the last session, I believe there was no action on ordering the previous question. Will the waiving of the right to consider the bill in Committee of the Whole at the last session still operate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the order of the House discharging the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill can not now be changed unless by unanimous consent, because it is too late, under the rules, for reconsideration by a vote of the House. The Chair desires to state that the consideration of this bill on the 4th of May last was at an evening session set apart by order of the House for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The present occupant of the chair was not in attendance on that occasion, and has no knowledge of the proceedings except as shown by the Journal.

Mr. HOLMAN. My recollection was that the bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRAGG. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Journal of course must be accepted as true. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he proposes now to press this bill to a vote.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to press the bill to a vote now. The Committee on Military Affairs listened to all that was said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] when the bill was under consideration before; nearly the entire opposition to the bill came from him; and I do not wish to have that discussion renewed and continued now, if it can be avoided.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think, however, my friend will remember that the sentiment of the House at that time was that this bill, as to its main purpose, was not necessary.

Mr. BRAGG. There was no such sentiment expressed by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the subject ought to be fully debated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 75, noes 20.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLAND and Mr. OATES were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 140, noes 23.

So the previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the passage of the bill). The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 55 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 140, nays 87, not voting 96; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the roll call,

On motion of Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced for this day:

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. GILFILLAN.

Mr. KING with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. GOFF.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MUSTER AND PAY OF VOLUNTEER FORCES.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I now call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 1171) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces, approved June 3, 1884."

The SPEAKER. Is the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. CUTCHEON. This bill was considered in the House. The amendment was adopted, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; the previous question was pending, but the question of a quorum being raised, the bill was informally withdrawn. I now move the previous question on the passage of the bill. It will be found in the RECORD, May 4, page 4170.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will there be debate after that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine it. This bill was considered at an evening session, when the present occupant of the Chair was not present, and therefore knows nothing about it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The bill was debated fully and amended and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. The pending question is on its passage.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Let the gentleman explain what the bill is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the hour for the consideration of bills has expired for to-day, and this will, therefore, go over until to-morrow.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALDWELL. I desire to call up for present consideration a special order made April 22. The order is as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 6th day of May, 1886 (and from day to day thereafter until disposed of), immediately after the morning hour for the consideration of bills and resolutions, be set apart for the consideration of Senate bill No. 9, to provide for and regulate the electoral count; not to interfere with revenue or general appropriation bills, the river and harbor bill, nor with prior orders, nor with the consideration of reports from the Committee on Public Lands under the special order; and if the consideration of said Senate bill No. 9 be displaced, then the next day not previously set apart shall be devoted to its consideration until the same shall be disposed of, subject to the above-mentioned interference.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it takes precedence, and I now call it up for consideration.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Has the second morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has some time ago.

Mr. HATCH. I did not hear the Chair so announce it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did announce it.

Mr. HATCH. I renew my motion, which was pending at the time the second hour began.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is not pending, as it is not in order. But the gentleman has the right to submit his motion, that is to say, he has the right to antagonize the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee by presenting the motion he desires to.

Mr. HATCH. I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, under the special order which has been already read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] calls up for consideration the special order made for the 6th of May last, relating to the count of the electoral votes. Pending that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] calls up for consideration the bill, the title of which has just been read. The question will first be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, for the reason the order of the House sets the bill to which his motion refers for the 6th of May, while it sets the bill to which the motion of the gentleman from Missouri refers for the 13th day of May. Does the gentleman from Missouri raise the question of consideration against the bill to which the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee refers?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

The SPEAKER. The question is will the House proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

Mr. HATCH demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 27.

Mr. HATCH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 23 voting in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the motion was agreed to, and the House determined to proceed with the consideration of the electoral count bill.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The bill (S. 9), with the amendments reported by the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, was then read, as follows:

[Omit the parts in brackets and insert the parts printed in italics.]

An act to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon.

Be it enacted, &c., That the electors of each State shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in January next following their appointment, at such place in each State as the Legislature of such State shall direct.

SEC. 2. That if any State shall have provided, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to the said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of electors in such State, by the final ascertainment under and in pursuance of the laws of such State providing for such ascertainment, to communicate, under the seal of the State, to the Secretary of State of the United States, a certificate of such ascertainment of the electors appointed, setting forth the names of such electors and the canvass or other ascertainment under the laws of such State of the number of votes given or cast for each person for whose appointment any and all votes have been given or cast; and it shall also thereupon be the duty of the executive of each State to deliver to the electors of such State, on or before the day on which they are required by the preceding section to meet, the same certificate, in triplicate, under the seal of the State; and such certificate shall be inclosed and transmitted by the electors at the same time and in the same manner as is provided by law for transmitting by such electors to the seat of Government the lists of all persons voted for as President and of all persons voted for as Vice-President; and section 136 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed; and if there shall have been any final determination in a State of a controversy or contest as provided for in section 2 of this act, it shall be the duty of the executive of such State, as soon as practicable after such determination, to communicate, under the seal of the State, to the Secretary of State of the United States, a certificate of such determination, in form and manner as the same shall have been made; and the Secretary of State of the United States, as soon as practicable after the receipt at the State Department of each of the certificates hereinbefore directed to be transmitted to the Secretary of State, shall publish, in such public newspaper as he shall designate, such certificates in full; and at the first meeting of Congress thereafter he shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received theretofore at the State Department.

SEC. 4. That Congress shall be in session on the second Wednesday in February succeeding every meeting of the electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of 1 o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules in this act provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, and the names of the persons, if any, elected, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses. Upon such reading of any such certificate or paper, the President of the Senate shall call for objections, if any. Every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely, and without argument, the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives before the same shall be received. When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State from which but one lawful return has been received shall be rejected [except by the affirmative vote of both Houses]. If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 2 of this act to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made, or by such successors or substitutes, in case of a vacancy in the board of electors so ascertained, as have been appointed to fill such vacancy in the mode provided by the laws of the State; but in case there shall arise the question which of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 2 of this act, is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given of those electors, and those only, of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its laws; and in such case of more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which [the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State] were cast by electors whose appointment shall have been duly certified under the seal of the State by the executive thereof, in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. When the two Houses have voted, they shall immediately again meet, and the presiding officer shall then announce the decision of the question submitted. No votes or papers from any other State shall be acted upon until the objections previously made to the votes or papers from any State shall have been finally disposed of.

SEC. 5. That while the two Houses shall be in meeting as provided in this act the President of the Senate shall have power to preserve order; and no debate shall be allowed and no question shall be put by the presiding officer except to either House on a motion to withdraw.

SEC. 6. That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or other question arising in the matter, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question five minutes, and not more than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours it shall be the duty of the presiding officer of each House to put the main question without further debate.

SEC. 7. That at such joint meeting of the two Houses seats shall be provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair; for the Speaker, immediately upon his left; the Senators, in the body of the Hall upon the right of the presiding officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the Hall not provided for the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives at the Clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two Houses, in front of the Clerk's desk and upon each side of the Speaker's platform. Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the count of electoral votes shall be completed and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under this act, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess of such House not beyond the next calendar day, Sunday excepted, at the hour of 10 o'clock in the forenoon. But if the counting of the electoral votes and the declaration of the result shall not have been completed before the fifth calendar day next after such first meeting of the two Houses, no further or other recess shall be taken by either House.

Passed the Senate March 17, 1886.

Attest: ANSON G. McCOOK, Secretary.

The report (by Mr. CALDWELL) was read, as follows:

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. 9:

The committee has had under consideration Senate bill No. 9, to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon, and report the same back to the House with amendments, as follows:

(1) A verbal amendment in the third section, line 22, insert, after the words "state of," the word "a;" so that it shall read, "state of a controversy or contest," &c.

(2) A material amendment to section 4, lines 38, 39, is as follows: Strike out after the words "shall be rejected" the words "except by the affirmative votes of both Houses," and insert after the word "one," in the same line, the word "lawful;" so that the clause shall read "and no electoral vote or votes from any State from which but one lawful return has been received shall be rejected."

The majority of the committee were of the opinion that where there was but a single return from a State the two Houses should not have the power to reject the vote of the State.

(3) A material amendment is to the same section (No. 4), lines 61, 62, 63, after the word "which" to and including the word "State." At the end of the sentence strike out the words "the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State," and insert the words "were cast by electors whose appointment shall have been duly certified under the seal of the State, by the executive thereof, in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State;" so that the clause will read "and in such case of more than one return, or paper purporting to be a return, from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question in the State aforesaid, then those votes, and those only, shall be counted which were cast by electors whose appointment shall have been duly certified under the seal of the State, by the executive thereof, in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State."

The bill as it passed the Senate provided that where there was more than one return from the State, and no tribunal established in the State to decide the question between the contesting electors, only those votes should be counted which the two Houses, acting separately, should concur in deciding were the lawful votes of the State.

The committee were of the opinion that where there was more than one return from a State, and but a single State government, the vote of the State legally certified by the executive to have been cast by the legally appointed electors should be counted, unless both Houses concur in rejecting the vote.

Should these amendments be adopted by the House and the bill pass, the mode of counting the electoral vote may be thus briefly stated: In those States where a tribunal has been established, under the laws thereof, for the determination of contests concerning the appointment of electors therein, and such tribunal has decided what electors were duly appointed, the determination of the State tribunal shall be conclusive. Where there is but one return from a State the vote so returned shall be counted.

But in case there should arise the question which of two, or more, of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes of the electors of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its laws.

Under the amendment, where there is but one State government and two sets of returns purporting to be the vote of the State, then that return shall be counted which is supported by the certificate of the executive of the State, under the seal thereof and in accordance with its laws, unless both Houses, acting separately, shall concur in deciding that the vote so certified and returned is not the lawful vote of the State.

The bill provides the means of determining what is the vote, how it shall be counted, its count, and the authoritative declaration of the result.

The two Houses are, by the Constitution, authorized to make the count of electoral votes. They can only count legal votes, and in doing so must determine, from the best evidence to be had, what are legal votes; and if they can not agree upon which are legal votes, then the State which has failed to bring itself under the plain provisions of the bill, and failed to provide for the determination of all questions by her own authorities, will lose her vote.

Congress having provided by this bill that the State tribunals may determine what votes are legal coming from that State, and that the two Houses shall be bound by this determination, it will be that State's own fault if the matter is left in doubt.

The power to determine rests with the two Houses, and there is no other constitutional tribunal.

Congress prescribes the details of the trial and what kind of evidence shall be received, and how the final judgment shall be rendered.

The interests involved are too precious and the dangers too great to be left longer without adequate provisions against trouble and discord.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill if passed will be an authoritative expression of the Constitution erected into law in advance of any complication which may again arise, as it has in the past, as to the counting the electoral votes of the States and the declaration of the result. The power of the President of the Senate to count the vote was understood to have been claimed in 1857 in the case of the electors from Wisconsin; but upon its being challenged both in the House and Senate, that officer disclaimed any such assumption. This claim was again set up in the year of disgrace, 1876, by a cabal, which had determined, in addition to debauching the Electoral College, to usurp the power of the two Houses and give it to one man. This was defeated, notably under the lead of a courageous and honest Senator from the State of New York.

While it is true that the Electoral College, and not Congress, is charged with the duty of making the election of President and Vice-President, and that the selection of the electors belongs exclusively to the States, and no department of the Federal Government is allowed to participate in the creation of the electors; and while thus is committed to the States the sole choice of the electors, whose function is to choose an Executive of the Federal Government, the right is also reserved to that Government, through and by the agency and under the supervision of the Senate and House of Representatives, to judge of the legality of returns, and to preserve itself from lapse or interregnum in the succession of its Chief Magistrate. The power of the two Houses in counting the vote is something more than ministerial and perfunctory merely.

Congress may provide by law or joint rule the manner of counting the vote. The presence of the two Houses when the vote is counted is a constitutional injunction, and is required from the fact that if there is no election by the electors, the duty of electing a President is devolved upon the House of Representatives; and of a Vice-President, upon the Senate. They are to be present at the count to ascertain and declare the result, if any, of the action of the Electoral College; or, in default thereof, to separate and elect the officers themselves. They are to count the votes. What votes? Legal votes. Then they are to determine what are legal votes, and who has a majority of legal votes. The power to judge of the legality of the votes is a necessary consequent of the power to count. The existence of this power is of absolute necessity to the preservation of the Government. The interests of all the States in their relations to each other in the Federal Union demand that the ultimate tribunal to decide upon the election of President should be a constituent body, in which the States in their federal relationships and the people in their sovereign capacity should be represented.

The States, in electing a President and Vice-President of the United States, are not exercising their State sovereignty as they are in electing their governors and other State officers. They are exercising constitutional functions, and are in the performance of a duty necessary to the maintenance of the Federal Government. Each State is the constitutional agent of the Federal Government in this matter, and must act within the scope of her agency and under the direction and law of her principal in providing an officer who is not the head of one State, but of all the States under the Constitution. For instance: Her votes must be cast upon the prescribed day, and for two citizens, one of whom must be a citizen of another State. Each State may appoint as electors a number, no more and no less, but equal to her number of Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The mode of their appointment is left solely to the States, but the elector is a Federal functionary, as much so as a Senator or a Representative. And the duties of an elector, as soon as he is chosen by the State, are prescribed by the Constitution of the United States. "They shall vote by ballot." "They shall make lists of the persons balloted for." "They shall sign and certify them;" "they shall seal and transmit them to the President of the Senate," etc. After the elector has done all required of him and deposited the vote in the hands of the President of the Senate, the Constitution then fixes the day when he shall open them in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, when "the vote shall be counted."

This bill is to prescribe the mode in which this count shall be made, and supply the omission that exists under the first article of the Constitution, which gives Congress all power to make all laws necessary to carry out these provisions. The passage of this bill will settle all the questions which have arisen from time to time as to the electoral count.

It will decide, first, that the power to count the vote is not in the President of the Senate.

Second, that it is in the two Houses of Congress, not ministerially merely, not as witnesses,

> Capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb show and noise;

but with power to count, and the consequent power to decide uponthe legality of the votes to be counted.

Third, that the action of the two Houses shall be separate and concurrent upon all questions of contest arising under the count, but joint as to results, thus preserving the dignity and rights of the two bodies by conceding to each equal and concurrent powers in counting and judging of the validity of electoral votes without merger of the lesser body into the numerically greater.

The apprehension that this bill contains anything inimical to State rights is fanciful and unreal. Even as it came from the Senate without the amendments proposed by the committee, it is not, in my opinion, amenable to such criticism. The object of the proposed amendments to the Senate bill is to remedy any lurking danger in its provisions, which it may be apprehended is ready to spring, lion-like, upon States and overcome them before they could summon their powers of resistance.

The minority of the committee fear that the reservation of the right to Congress to see that the one return of a State is a lawful return "may afford a pretext for usurpation by Congress of the power to disfranchise a State." It is certainly absurd to try to deny to Congress the power to remedy an unlawful return, although it might be the only return.

Instances have been often cited and may be again. Under section 4, article 4, of the Constitution "the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government." Suppose some State should enthrone a king, constitute a house of lords, and they should appoint electors, and send up but one return properly certified and finally determined as required under the second section of the bill proposed by the minority. Shall an American Congress count such a vote? Suppose under the fourteenth amendment, which deprives a State of electoral votes in proportion as that State shall have denied the right to vote to its citizens of color—suppose there is but one return of that State, duly certified, of the full number of electors, who is to decide the number to be deducted? In neither case, if a future Congress would obey such a law, could Congress help itself from counting such illegal votes, although both Senate and House of Representatives might know that they violated these sections of the Constitution to count them. The majority of the committee thought there might be danger in giving unlimited power to both Houses to disfranchise a State from which there was but one return if they should concurrently decide to reject the return, but felt constrained by the force of the consideration that there was equal danger in forcing Congress to count an illegal return, and had a suspicion that no power in a statute would be found sufficient to make Congress count, whether or no, votes that both Houses had concurred in declaring illegal and that should not be counted.

The separate concurrent action of both Houses provided for in the bill preserves the constitutional identity, rights, and dignity of each. This concession of each House to the other of equal and concurrent power to decide on informalities and illegalities appearing on the face of returns, upon objection of a Senator or Representative, is necessary to the determination of results.

The determination of the question as to the right to the chief executive office of a nation is a prerogative necessary to the preservation and peace of the government.

This necessary power for the Federal Government must be exercised so as not to do detriment to the separate States.

By this bill a State may confine that necessary power within the narrowest possible bounds by making provision to determine all controversies as to her vote.

At last, what is the body the Constitution invests with the authority to count the electoral vote? Is it a foreign or hostile assembly? Is it in any sense antagonistic to or non-representative of the States? It is composed of that body, the Senate, which, under the Constitution, represents the autonomy of the States as such, and that body, the House of Representatives, which represents the people, who constitute the States. Hence, if the State has not provided authorities to decide for whom its electoral vote is cast, then that question shall be decided by a body composed of the Representatives and Senators of all the States.

Under the Constitution who else could decide? Who is nearer to the State in determining a question of vital importance to the whole union of States than the constituent body upon whom the Constitution has devolved the duty to count the vote? But all apprehensions of State disfranchisement are remote and founded in part, at least, upon an assumption that can not obtain that the States will fail to perform their legal duties as to the choosing of electors. I submit that this is an assumption that can not be acted upon by a legislative body in the enactment of laws. In addition to the sense of duty abiding in the States of the Union to authoritatively and in their own way declare and legally certify their choice of electors in order to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, this law puts a premium upon diligence in the discharge of that duty by the States.

It will be perceived that this bill is not predicated upon the idea of throwing the two Houses into convention and merging the smaller body, the Senate, into the larger body, the House of Representatives, and voting per capita. It is submitted that no constitutional warrant can be found for such an idea.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to consume further the time of the House in the discussion of the bill at the commencement of the debate upon it, believing that it will be the wish of the House to discuss it hereafter in all of its details; and I am willing that there shall be reasonable time for discussion; but I do desire, before taking my seat, to call your attention to one verbal change which will be suggested in the body of the bill as printed. I do not know that I can call it an amendment, nor does it appear among the printed amendments incorporated in the report. It will be noticed in the 38th line, on the 5th page of the bill, that this phrase occurs:

> And the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State from which but one lawful return has been received shall be rejected, &c.

The committee, after suggesting the propriety of inserting the word "lawful" before the word "return," concluded, in deference to the views of the minority, and in order to obviate possible objections to the bill, that they would recommend to the House, and would agree, that this word should be stricken out. The reason is, as you will perceive, that it is unnecessary. The Houses have the power to count; and hence to decide, what is lawful to be counted, and to express it in this connection, it seemed to the committee, or to the minority of the committee at any rate, would give to Congress the arbitrary power to decide what was a lawful return, even in case where but one return was received from a State.

I shall not at the opening of the discussion detain the House further, but will reserve the remainder of my time, yielding the floor for the present to any gentleman who desires now to discuss the provisions of the bill; but will within a reasonable time resume the floor and call the previous question, and thus test the sense of the House on the adoption of this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). The gentleman has 40 minutes of his time remaining.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 6983) for the relief of certain soldiers of the Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, dishonorably discharged under special orders 92, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated March 1, 1866.

It further announced the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. LEWIS BEACH, and of the death of Hon. JOHN ARNOT, jr., late Representatives from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate this resolution to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM T. PRICE, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting the annual report of the Department of Justice for the year 1886; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of F. V. Morrison, Hunken & Bischoff, and 107 other citizens of New York, praying that Congress authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for improving the Harlem River, New York, for a sum not exceeding $1,495,000, the work to be completed July 4, 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Ida May Welton, of Groton, Vt., praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Rev. John Anketell, A. M., presbyter of the diocese of New York, praying for legislation providing for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States giving Congress power to pass uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of A. Brown and other citizens of Pawlet, Rutland County, Vermont, and the petition of L. G. He also presented the petition of Mrs. Hannah R. Langdon, of Burlington, Vt., praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Vermont in favor of the establishment of agricultural experiment stations.

These resolutions, like a great many others presented, are not addressed as a memorial to Congress, but state the opinions of the Legislature and their instruction or request to their representatives in Congress to support such measures. Technically, within the rule, therefore, they are not entitled to be read, and I do not suppose the Legislature would care about their being read. I simply ask that these resolutions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present similar resolutions, stating the opinion of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, and addressed to the Senators and Representatives, in favor of making provision, by act of Congress, against aliens acquiring an excessive quantity of public lands; and I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present similar resolutions in the same form in favor of granting pensions to Union soldiers who have suffered under imprisonment in rebel prisons, and I move that they be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER presented a petition of the Wisconsin Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, through M. S. Merrill, president, praying for legislation in behalf of Chinese laborers in the United States, and also for the passage of the so-called indemnity bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I introduce a bill to amend section 3749 of the Revised Statutes, regarding the legal methods of disposing of certain property; which I ask may be twice read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2920) amending section 3749 of the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2921) to authorize the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company to build its road across the Fort Meade Military Reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON. I introduce a bill to increase the efficiency of the officers of the line of the Army of the United States by amending section 1204 of the Revised Statutes so as to provide as to all line officers the same character of examination for promotion that is required of officers of the Ordnance, the Engineer, and the Medical Departments of the Army. This is a matter which has been recommended by the Secretary of War in his late report, and, as it is a subject of some interest, I ask that the bill may be printed at length in the RECORD, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 2922) to increase the efficiency of the officers of the line of the Army of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks an order to print the bill in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to increase the efficiency of officers of the line of the Army of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1204 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1204. Promotions in the line shall be made through the whole Army, in the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively. No officer of artillery, cavalry, or infantry below the rank of field officer shall be promoted to a higher grade until he shall have been examined and approved by a board of not less than three officers of the same arm of the service seniors to him in rank. If an officer fail on such examination, he shall be suspended from promotion for one year, when he shall be re-examined before a like board. In case of failure on such re-examination he shall be dismissed from the service: Provided, That all officers of the Army who have served as officers in the volunteer forces or as enlisted men in the armies of the United States, regular or volunteer, during the war of the rebellion, shall, in case of failure on such re-examination, be retired from active service; and no act now in force shall be so construed as to limit or restrict the retirement of officers as herein provided for. Promotions in the staff of the Army shall be made in the several departments and corps respectively."

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2925) granting a pension to William Dorman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2926) granting an increase of pension to John Upcraft; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2927) granting an increase of pension to Theodore Gardner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2928) providing for the erection of a monument to the negro soldiers and sailors who gave their lives for the preservation of the Government; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2929) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 84) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to certify lands for agricultural-college purposes to the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. DAWES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of St. Peter's and St. Paul's Catholic Church of Chattanooga, Tennessee, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

OLEOMARGARINE TAXES.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate how many manufacturers of oleomargarine, how many wholesale dealers in oleomargarine, and how many retail dealers in oleomargarine, have paid the special taxes imposed by section 3 of the act defining butter, &c., approved August 2, 1886, and in what districts said taxes have been paid; also, how many pounds of oleomargarine have been assessed under section 8 of said act, and the districts in which said assessment has been made.

GAS-LIGHT FOR GEORGETOWN.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill providing that the price of gas furnished by the Georgetown Gaslight Company shall not exceed one dollar per thousand cubic feet; and if it shall appear that the present company can not produce gas at said price, then further to report whether any other company shall not be authorized or incorporated for that purpose, upon giving sufficient guarantee to furnish gas at said price.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the first part of the resolution may be read again. I did not understand whether it was a direction to the committee to report a bill or to inquire about the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill providing that the price of gas furnished by the Georgetown Gaslight Company, &c.

Mr. INGALLS. That is sufficient.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

AWARDS AGAINST HAYTI.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to communicate to the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public interests, copies of the awards made by the arbitrator in the case of Antonio Pelletier and in the case of A. H. Lazare against the republic of Hayti, under a protocol made by and between the Secretary of State of the United States and the minister plenipotentiary for the republic of Hayti, dated 24th May, 1884, together with such action as may have been had in relation thereto.

DAMAGES TO SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business——

Mr. PLUMB. What has become of the resolution that went over from yesterday, which was submitted by myself?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution, submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], which went over yesterday under objection, will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Contingent Expenses be directed to investigate the accident which occurred in a freight elevator of the Senate wing of the Capitol in July last, whereby two employés of the Senate were seriously injured, and report their conclusions as to the responsibility for the same, to the Senate at the earliest day practicable, together with a resolution providing for the payment to the persons so damaged of such sums as the committee may deem proper to cover the expenses, loss, and damage incurred thereby.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the resolution the words:

If the committee shall be of opinion that compensation ought to be made.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

REDUCTION OF CUSTOMS DUTIES AND INTERNAL TAXES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], which comes over under objection. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire and report as soon as practicable what specific reduction can be made in customs duties and internal taxes which will, in their judgment, reduce the receipts to the necessary and economical expenditures of the Government without impairing the prosperity and development of home industries or the compensation of home labor.

Mr. DAWES. When that resolution was submitted I stated that I should like to have it lie on the table and would call it up at some future day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair treated it as a resolution coming over under objection. Does the Senator from Vermont desire to call up the resolution submitted by him yesterday?

Mr. MORRILL. Not to-day, but to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both resolutions will remain on the table.

SETTLERS AND PURCHASERS OF LANDS IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for one moment. I yesterday gave notice that I should to-day call for the consideration of House bill 1413, upon the Calendar. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] manifested some interest during the last session in regard to that subject, and on speaking to him he desired that I should not move the bill to-day, as he was engaged outside of the Chamber. I therefore ask that the bill be made a special order for Monday or Tuesday of next week—say Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1413 with the view to its being made a special order. The bill will be reported by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of business 1565, being the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the bill the title of which has just been read be made the special order for Monday next. There are two special orders for that day already.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Say Tuesday, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the bill be made a special order for Tuesday next. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7192) to provide a school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery, and for the construction and completion of quarters, barracks, and stables at certain posts for the use of the Army of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 122, being the joint resolution (S. R. 5) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar being in order, the Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution named by him. The question is on that motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to inquire if the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill or resolution on the Calendar is not debatable under the rules.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know it is not debatable, but I suppose I can ask a question as to whether the Senator from New Hampshire wants simply to discuss the joint resolution or to proceed to its actual consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will make no interposition against the question of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether it is his purpose in calling up the resolution to ask action upon it now, or simply to submit remarks?

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to submit remarks, but I also desire to ask action of the Senate. The matter has been before the Senate during several Congresses, and there never has been any actual vote whatever upon the resolution, although it has been reported favorably from committees at least twice. I desire at the opening of the session, if possible, that there be a vote, so that we may be relieved of the question at least for this session, and perhaps for some Congresses to come.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state that my colleague on the committee [Mr. BROWN] is absent, and will probably be here very soon. I would not desire a final disposition made until he is present. Still I am anxious to get the matter disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. In view of the fact stated, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the subject, and I will content myself with submitting some remarks to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope, if I can rely upon the co-operation of the Senator from Missouri, that we may have a vote as early in the session as possible.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just as soon as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] gets here. I am anxious to have a vote myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I ask for the reading of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which, when ratified by three-fourths of the said legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to have in the RECORD, following the reading of the joint resolution itself, the reports of the majority and of the minority of the committee, not including the appendices of the two reports, but simply the reports proper. If there be no objection on the part of the Senator from Missouri, and no objection on the part of the Senate, I ask that those reports be printed without the delay of reading them at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the reports referred to by him, with the exceptions named, be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MAXEY. I do not see any need for encumbering the RECORD with those reports. They are already before the Senate. It is not necessary, in my judgment, to be putting everything of that kind in the RECORD. Therefore I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BLAIR. I can perhaps incorporate such portions of the report as I shall refer to, or perhaps have them printed as part of my remarks before I close.

Mr. President, the question before the Senate is this: Shall a joint resolution providing for an amendment of the national Constitution so that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of sex, and that Congress shall have power to enforce the article, be submitted to the legislatures of the several States for ratification or rejection?

The answer to this question does not depend necessarily upon the reply to that other question whether women ought to be permitted to exercise the right or privilege of suffrage as do men. The legislatures of the several States must decide this in ratifying or rejecting the proposed amendment.

Upon solemn occasions concerning grave public affairs, and when large numbers of the citizens of the country desire to test the sentiments of the people upon an amendment of the organic law, in the manner provided to be done by the provisions of that law, it may well become the duty of Congress to submit the proposition to the amending power, which is the same as that which created the original instrument itself—the people of the several States.

It can hardly be claimed that two-thirds of each branch of Congress must necessarily be convinced that the Constitution should be amended, as proposed in the joint resolution to be submitted, before it has discretion to submit the same to the judgment of the States. Any citizen has the right to petition or, through his representative, to bring in his bill for redress of grievances, or to promote the public good by legislation; and it can hardly be maintained that, before any citizen or large body of citizens shall have the privilege of introducing a bill to the great legislative tribunal, which alone has primary jurisdiction of the organic law and power to amend or change it, the Congress, which under the Constitution is simply the moving or initiating power, must by a two-thirds vote approve the proposition at issue before its discussion shall be permitted in the forum of the States.

To hold such a doctrine would be contrary to all our ideas of free discussion, and to lock up the institutions and the interests of a great and progressive people in fetters of brass.

It is only essential that two-thirds of each House of the Congress shall deem it necessary for the public good, that the amendment be proposed to the States for their action. But two-thirds of the Congress will hardly consider it "necessary" to submit a joint resolution proposing an amendment of the National Constitution to the States for consideration, unless the subject matter be of grave importance, with strong reasons in its favor, and a large support already developed among the people themselves.

If there be any principle upon which our form of government is founded, and wherein it is different from aristocracies, monarchies, and despotisms, that principle is this:

Every human being of mature powers, not disqualified by ignorance, vice or crime, is the equal of, and is entitled to all the rights and privileges which belong to, any other such human being under the law.

The inherent independence, equality, and dignity of all human souls is the fundamental assertion of those who believe in what we call human freedom. This principle will hardly be denied by any one, even by those who oppose the adoption of the resolution. But we are informed that infants, idiots, and women are represented by men. This can not reasonably be claimed unless it be first shown that the consent of these classes has been given to such representation, or that they lack the capacity to consent. But the exclusion of these classes from participation in the Government deprives them of the power of assent to representation even when they possess the requisite ability; and to say there can be representation which does not presuppose consent or authority on the part of the principal who is represented is to confound all reason, and to assert in substance that all actual power, whether despotic or otherwise, is representative, and therefore free. In this sense the Czar represents his whole people, just as voting men represent women who do not vote at all.

True it is that the voting men, by excluding women and other classes from the suffrage, by that act charge themselves with the trust of administering justice to all, even as the monarch whose power is based upon force is bound to rule uprightly. But if it be true that "all just government is founded upon the consent of the governed," then the government of woman by man, without her consent, given in her sovereign capacity, if indeed she be an intelligent creature, and provided she be competent to exercise the power of suffrage, which is the sovereignty, even if that government be wise and just in itself, is a violation of natural right and an enforcement of servitude and slavery against her on the part of man. If woman, like the infant or the defective classes, be incapable of self-government, then republican society may exclude her from all participation in the enactment and enforcement of the laws under which she lives. But in that case, like the infant and the fool, and the unconsenting subject of tyrannical forms of government, she is ruled and not represented by man.

Thus much I desire to say in the beginning in reply to the broad assumption of those who deny women the suffrage by saying that they are already represented by their fathers, their husbands, their brothers, and their sons; or, to state the proposition in its only proper form, that woman whose assent can only be given by an exercise of sovereignty on her part is represented by man who denies and by virtue of power and possession refuses to her the exercise of the suffrage whereby that representation can be made valid.

The claim, then, of the minority of the committee that woman is represented by the other sex is not well founded, and is based upon the same assumption of power which lies at the base of all government anti-republican in form. It can not be claimed that she is as a free being already represented, for she can only be represented according to her will by the exercise of her will through the suffrage itself.

As already observed, the exclusion of woman from the suffrage under our form of government can be justified upon proof, and only upon proof, that by reason of her sex she is incompetent to exercise that power. This is a question of fact.

The common ground upon which all agree may be stated thus: All males having certain qualifications are in reason and in law entitled to vote. Those qualifications affect either the body or the mind or both.

First, the attainment of a certain age. The age in itself is not material, but maturity of mental and moral development is material, soundness of body in itself not being essential, and want of it alone never working forfeiture of the right, although it may prevent its exercise.

Age as a qualification for suffrage is by no means to be confounded with age as a qualification for service in war. Society has well established the distinction, and that one has no relation whatever to the other; the one having reference to physical prowess, while the other relates only to the mental and moral state. This is shown by the ages fixed by law for these qualifications, that of eighteen years being fixed as the commencement of the term of presumed fitness for military service, and forty-five years as the period of its termination; while the age of presumed fitness for the suffrage, which requires no physical superiority certainly, is set at twenty-one years, when still greater strength of body has been attained than at the period when liability to the dangers and hardships of war commences; and there are at least three millions more male voters in our country than of the population liable by law to the performance of military duty. It is still further to be observed, that the right of suffrage continues as long as the mind lasts, while ordinary liability to military service ceases at a period when the physical powers, though still strong, are beginning to wane. The truth is, there is no legal or natural connection between the right or liability to fight and the right to vote.

The right to fight may be exercised voluntarily or the liability to fight may be enforced by the community whenever there is an invasion of right; and the extent to which the physical forces of society may be called upon in self-defense or in justifiable revolution is measured not by age or sex, but by necessity, and may go so far as to call into the field old men and women and the last vestige of physical force. It can not be claimed that woman has no right to vote because she is not liable to fight, for she is so liable, and the freest government on the face of the earth has the reserved power under the call of necessity to place her in the forefront of battle itself, and more than this, woman has the right, and often has exercised it, to go there.

If any one could question the existence of this reserved power of society to call the force of woman to the common defense, either in the hospital or the field, it would be woman, who has been deprived of participation in government and in shaping the public policy which has resulted in dire emergency to the state. But in all times, and under all forms of government and of social existence, woman has given her body and her soul to the common defense.

The qualification of age, then, is imposed for the purpose of securing mental and moral fitness for the suffrage on the part of those who exercise it. It has no relation to the possession of physical powers at all.

All other qualifications imposed upon male citizens, save only that of their sex, as prerequisites to the exercise of suffrage have the same objects in view, and can have no other.

The property qualification is, to my mind, an invasion of natural right, which elevates mere property to an equality with life and personal liberty, and ought never to be imposed upon the suffrage. But, however that may be, its application or removal has no relation to sex, and its only object is to secure the exercise of the suffrage under a stronger sense of obligation and responsibility—a qualification, be it observed, of no consequence save as it influences the mind of the voter in the exercise of his right.

The same is true of the qualifications of sanity, education, and obedience to the laws, which exclude dementia, ignorance, and crime from participation in the sovereignty. Every condition or qualification imposed upon the exercise of the suffrage by the citizen, save only sex, has for its only object or possible justification the possession of mental and moral fitness, and has no relation to physical power.

The question then arises, why is the qualification of masculinity required at all?

The distinction between human beings by reason of sex is a physical distinction. The soul is of no sex. If there be a distinction of soul by reason of the physical difference, or accompanying that physical difference, woman is the superior of man in mental and moral qualities. In proof of this see the report of the minority and all the eulogiums of woman pronounced by those who, like the serpent of old, would flatter her vanity that they may continue to wield her power.

I repeat it, that the soul is of no sex, and that sex is, so far as the possession and exercise of human rights and powers are concerned, but a physical property, in which the female is just as important as the male, and the possessor thereof under just as great need of power in the organization and management of society and the government of society as man; and if there be a difference, she, by reason of her average physical inferiority, is really protected, and ought to be protected, by a superior mental and moral fitness to give direction to the course of society and the policy of the state. If, then, there be a distinction between the souls of human beings resulting from sex, I claim that, by the report of the minority and the universal testimony of all men, woman is better fitted for the exercise of the suffrage than man.

It is claimed by some that the suffrage is an inherent natural right, and by others that it is merely a privilege extended to the individual by society in its discretion. However this may be, practically any extension of the exercise of the suffrage to individuals or classes not now enjoying it must be by concession of those who already possess it, and such extension without revolution will be through the suffrage itself exercised by those who have it under existing forms.

The appeal by those who have it not must be made to those who are asked to part with a portion of their own power, and it is not strange that human nature, which is an essential element in the male sex, should hesitate and delay to yield one-half its power to those whose cause, however strong in reason and justice, lacks that physical force which so largely has been the means by which the masses of men themselves have wrung their own rights from rulers and kings.

It is not strange that when overwhelmed with argument and half won by appeals to his better nature to concede to woman her equal power in the state, and ashamed to blankly refuse that which he finds no reason for longer withholding, man avoids the dilemma by a pretended elevation of his helpmeet to a higher sphere, where, as an angel, she has certain gauzy ethereal resources and superior functions, occupations, and attributes, which render the possession of mere earthly every-day powers and privileges non-essential to woman, however mere mortal men themselves may find them indispensable to their own freedom and happiness.

But to the denial of her right to vote, whether that denial be the blunt refusal of the ignorant or the polished evasion of the refined courtier and politician, woman can oppose only her most solemn and perpetual appeal to the reason of man and to the justice of Almighty God. She must continually point out the nature and object of the suffrage and the necessity that she possess it for her own and the public good.

What, then, is the suffrage, and why is it necessary that woman should possess and exercise this function of freemen?

I quote briefly from the report of the committee:

> The rights for the maintenance of which human governments are constituted are life, liberty, and property. These rights are common to men and women alike, and whatever citizen or subject exists as a member of any body-politic, under any form of government, is entitled to demand from the sovereign power the full protection of these rights.
> This right to the protection of rights appertains to the individual, not to the family alone, or to any form of association, whether social or corporate. Probably not more than five-eighths of the men of legal age, qualified to vote, are heads of families, and not more than that proportion of adult women are united with men in the legal merger of married life. It is, therefore, quite incorrect to speak of the state as an aggregate of families duly represented at the ballot-box by their male head. The relation between the government and the individual is direct; all rights are individual rights, all duties are individual duties.
> Government in its two highest functions is legislative and judicial. By these powers the sovereignty prescribes the law, and directs its application to the vindication of rights and the redress of wrongs. Conscience and intelligence are the only forces which enter into the exercise of this highest and primary function of government. The remaining department is the executive or administrative, and in all forms of government—the republican as well as in tyranny—the primary element of administration is force, and even in this department conscience and intelligence are indispensable to its direction.
> If now we are to decide who of our sixty millions of human beings are to constitute the citizenship of this Republic and by virtue of their qualifications to be the law-making power, by what tests shall the selection be determined?
> The suffrage, which is the sovereignty, is the great primary law-making power. It is not the executive power proper at all. It is not founded upon force. Only that degree of physical strength which is essential to a sound body—the home of the healthy mental and moral constitution—the sound soul in the sound body is required in the performance of the function of primary legislation. Never in the history of this or any other genuine republic has the law-making power, whether in general elections or in the framing of laws in legislative assemblies, been vested in individuals who have exercised it by reason of their physical powers. On the contrary, the physically weak have never for that reason been deprived of the suffrage nor of the privilege of service in the public councils so, long as they possessed the necessary powers of locomotion and expression, of conscience and intelligence, which are common to all. The aged and the physically weak have, as a rule, by reason of superior wisdom and moral sense, far more than made good any bodily inferiority by which they have differed from the more robust members of the community in the discussion and decisions of the ballot-box and in councils of the state.
> The executive power of itself is a mere physical instrumentality—an animal quality—and it is confided from necessity to those individuals who possess that quality, but always with danger, except so far as wisdom and virtue control its exercise. And it is obvious that the greater the mass of higher and spiritual forces, whether found in those to whom the execution of the law is assigned or in the great mass by whom the suffrage is exercised, and who direct the execution of the law, the greater will be the safety and the surer will be the happiness of the state.
> It is too late to question the intellectual and moral capacity of woman to understand great political issues (which are always primarily questions of conscience—questions of the intelligent application of the principles of right and of wrong in public and private affairs) and properly decide them at the polls. Indeed, so far as your committee are aware, the pretense is no longer advanced that woman should not vote by reason of her mental or moral unfitness to perform this legislative function; but the suffrage is denied to her because she can not hang criminals, suppress mobs, nor handle the enginery of war. We have already seen the untenable nature of this assumption, because those who make it bestow the suffrage upon very large classes of men who, however well qualified they may be to vote, are physically unable to perform any of the duties which appertain to the execution of the law and the defense of the state. Scarcely a Senator on this floor is liable by law to perform a military or other administrative duty, yet the rule so many set up against the right of women to vote would disfranchise nearly this whole body.
> But it is unnecessary to grant that woman can not fight. History is full of examples of her heroism in danger, of her endurance and fortitude in trial, and of her indispensable and supreme service in hospital and field; and in the handling of the deft and horrible machinery and infernal agencies which science and art have prepared and are preparing for human destruction in future wars, woman may perform her whole part in the common assault or the common defense. It is hardly worth while to consider this trivial objection that she is incompetent for purposes of national murder or of bloody self-defense as the basis of the denial of a great fundamental right, when we consider that if that right were given to her she would by its exercise almost certainly abolish this great crime of the nations, which has always inflicted upon her the chief burden of woe.

It will be admitted that the act of voting is operative in government only as a means of deciding upon the adoption or rejection of measures or of the selection of officers to enact, administer, and execute the laws.

In the discharge of these functions it also must be admitted that intelligence and conscience are the faculties requisite to secure their proper performance.

In this day, when woman has demonstrated that she is fully the intellectual equal of man in the profound as well as in the politer walks of learning—in art, science, literature—and, considering her opportunities, that she is not his inferior in any of the professions or in the great mass of useful occupations; while she is, in fact, becoming the chief educator of the race and is the acknowledged support of the great ministrations of charity and religion; when, in such great organizations as the suffrage associations, missionary societies, the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, and even upon the still larger scale of international action, she has exhibited her power by mere moral influences and the inspiration of great purposes, without the aid of legal penalties or even of tangible inconveniences, to mold and direct the discordant thought and action of thousands and millions of people scattered over separate States, and sometimes even living in countries hostile to each other, to the accomplishment of great earthly or heavenly ends; it is unreasonable to deny to woman the suffrage in political affairs upon the false allegation that she is wanting in the very qualities most indispensable and requisite for the proper exercise of this great right.

The advocates of universal male suffrage have long since ceased to deny the ballot to woman upon the ground that she is unfit or incompetent to exercise it.

There is a class of high-stepping objectors, like Ouida, who decry the sound judgment and moral excellence of woman as compared with man, but in the same breath these people deny the suffrage to the masses of men, and advocate "the just supremacy of the fittest," so that no time need be wasted in refutation of those malignant and libelous aspersions upon our mothers, sisters, and wives, which, when carried to logical conclusions by their own authors, deny the fundamental principles of liberty to man and woman alike, and reassert in its baldest form the dogma that "the existing system of electoral power all over the world is absurd, and will remain so because in no nation is there the courage, perhaps in no nation is there the intellectual power, capable of putting forward and sustaining the logical doctrine of the just supremacy of the fittest."

In fact the minority of the committee, and this is true of all honest, intelligent men who believe in the republican system of government at all, concede that woman has the capacity and moral fitness requisite to exercise the ballot. That class of women represented by the author of "Letters from a Chimney Corner," whose work has been adopted by the minority as the basis of their report, speaking through the "fair authoress," say that "if women were to be considered in their highest and final estate as merely individual beings, and if the right to the ballot were to be conceded to man as an individual, it might perhaps be logically argued that women also possessed the inherent right to vote." Let me read from the views of the minority on page 1:

The undersigned minority of the Committee of the Senate on Woman Suffrage, to whom was referred Senate Resolution No. 5, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to grant the right to vote to the women of the United States, beg leave to submit the following minority report, consisting of extracts from a little volume entitled, "Letters from a Chimney Corner," written by a highly cultivated lady, Mrs. ——, of Chicago. This gifted lady has discussed the question with so much clearness and force that we make no apology to the Senate for substituting quotations from her book in place of anything we might produce. We quote first from chapter 3, which is entitled "The value of suffrage to women much overestimated."

The fair authoress says:

"If women were to be considered in their highest and final estate as merely individual beings, and if the right to the ballot were to be conceded to man as an individual, it might perhaps be logically argued that women also possessed the inherent right to vote. But from the oldest times, and through all the history of the race, has run the glimmer of an idea, more or less distinguishable in different ages and under different circumstances, that neither man nor woman is, as such, individual; that neither being is of itself a whole, a unit, but each requires to be supplemented by the other before its true structural integrity can be achieved. Of this idea, the science of botany furnishes the most perfect illustration. The stamens on the one hand, and the ovary and pistil on the other, may indeed reside in one blossom, which then exists in a married or reproductive state. But equally well, the stamens or male organs may reside in one plant, and the ovary and pistil or female organs may reside in another. In that case, the two plants are required to make one structurally complete organization. Each is but half a plant, an incomplete individual by itself. The life principle of each must be united to that of the other; the twain must be indeed one flesh before the organization is either structurally or functionally complete."

This is a concession of the whole argument, unless the highest and final estate of woman is to be something else than a mere individual. It would also follow that if such be her destiny—that is, to be something else than a mere "individual being"—and if for that reason she is to be denied the suffrage, then man equally should be denied the ballot if his highest and final estate is to be something else than a "mere individual."

Thereupon the minority of the committee, through the "Fair Authoress," proceed to show that both man and woman are designed for a higher final estate—to wit, that of matrimony. It seems to be conceded that man is just as much fitted for matrimony as woman herself, and thereupon the whole subject is illuminated with certain botanical lore about stamens and pistils, which, however relevant to matrimony, does not seem to me to prove that therefore woman should not vote unless at the same time it proves that man should not vote either. And certainly it can not apply to those women any more than to those men whose highest and final estate never is merged in the family relation at all, and even "Ouida" concedes "that the project * * * to give votes only to unmarried women may be dismissed without discussion, as it would be found to be wholly untenable."

There is no escape from it. The discussion has passed so far that among intelligent people who believe in the republican form—that is, free government—it is acknowledged that all mature men and women have, under the same circumstance and conditions, the same rights to defend, the same grievances to redress, and, therefore, the same necessity for the exercise of this great fundamental right of all human beings in free society. For the right to vote is the great primitive right. It is the right in which all freedom originates and culminates. It is the right from which all others spring, in which they merge, and without which they fall whenever assailed.

This right makes, and is all the difference between government by and with the consent of the governed and government without and against the consent of the governed; and that is the difference between freedom and slavery. If the right to vote be not that difference, what is? No, sir. If either sex as a class can dispense with the right to vote, then take it from the strong, and no longer rob the weak of their defense for the benefit of the strong.

But it is impossible to conceive of the suffrage as a right dependent at all upon such an irrelevant condition as sex. It is an individual, a personal right. It may be withheld by force; but if withheld by reason of sex it is a moral robbery.

But it is said that the duties of maternity disqualify for the performance of the act of voting. It can not be, and I think is not claimed by any one, that the mother who otherwise would be fit to vote is rendered mentally or morally less fit to exercise this high function in the state because of motherhood. On the contrary, if any woman has a motive more than another person, man or woman, to secure the enactment and enforcement of good laws, it is the mother, who, beside her own life, person, and property, to the protection of which the ballot is as essential as to the same rights possessed by man, has her little contingent of immortal beings to conduct safely to the portals of active life through all the snares and pitfalls woven around them by bad men and bad laws which bad men have made, or good laws which bad men, unhindered by the good, have defied or have prostituted; and rightly to prepare them for the discharge of all the duties of their day and generation, including the exercise of the very right denied to their mother.

Certainly, if but for motherhood she should vote, then ten thousand times more necessary is it that the mother should be guarded and armed with this great social and political power, for the sake of all men and women who are yet to be. But it is said that she has not the time. Let us see. By the best deductions I can make from the census and from other sources there are 15,000,000 women of voting age in this country at the present time, of whom not more than 10,000,000 are married and not more than 7,500,000 are still liable to the duties of maternity, for it will be remembered that a large proportion of the mothers of our country at any given time are below the voting age, while of those who are above it another large proportion have passed beyond the point of this objection. Not more than one-half the female population of voting age are liable to this objection. Then why disfranchise the 7,500,000, the other half, as to whom your objection, even if valid as to any, does not apply at all; and these, too, as a class the most mature and therefore the best qualified to vote of any of their sex? But how much is there of this objection of want of time or physical strength to vote in its application to women who are bearing and training the coming millions? The families of the country average five persons in number. If we assume that this gives an average of three children to every pair, which is probably the full number, or if we assume that every married mother, after she becomes of voting age, bears three children, which is certainly the full allowance, and that twenty-four years are consumed in doing it, there is one child born every eight years whose coming is to interfere with the exercise of a duty of privilege which, in most States, and in all the most important elections, occurs only one day in two years.

That same mother will attend church at least forty times yearly on the average from her cradle to her grave, beside an infinity of other social, religious, and industrial obligations which she performs and assumes to perform because she is a married woman and a mother rather than for any other reason whatever. Yet it is proposed to deprive women—yes, all women alike—of an inestimable privilege and the chief power which can be exercised by any free individual in the state for the reason that on any given day of election not more than one woman in twenty of voting age will probably not be able to reach the polls. It does seem probable that on these interesting occasions if the husband and wife disagree in politics they could arrange a pair, and the probability is, that arrangement failing, one could be consummated with some other lady in like fortunate circumstances, of opposite political opinions. More men are kept from the polls by drunkenness, or, being at the polls, vote under the influence of strong drink, to the reproach and destruction of our free institutions, and who, if woman could and did vote, would cast the ballot of sobriety, good order, and reform under her holy influences, than all those who would be kept from any given election by the necessary engagements of mothers at home.

When one thinks of the innumerable and trifling causes which keep many of the best of men and strongest opponents of woman suffrage from the polls upon important occasions it is difficult to be tolerant of the objection that woman by reason of motherhood has no time to vote. Why, sir, the greater exposure of man to the casualties of life actually disables him in such way as to make it physically impossible for him to exercise the franchise more frequently than is the case with women, including mothers and all. And if this liability to lose the opportunity to exercise the right once or possibly twice in a lifetime is a reason that women should not be allowed to vote at all, why should men not be disfranchised also by the same rule?

But it is urged that woman does not desire the privilege. If the right exist at all it is an individual right, and not one which belongs to a class or to the sex as such. Yet men tell us that they will vote the suffrage to women whenever the majority of women desire it. Are, then, our rights the property of the majority of a disfranchised class to which we may chance to belong? What would we say if it were seriously proposed to recall the suffrage from all colored or from all white men because a majority of either class should decline or for any cause fail to vote? I know that it is said that the suffrage is a privilege to be extended by those who have it to those who have it not. But the matter of right, of moral right, to the franchise does not depend upon the indifference of those who possess it, or of those who do not possess it, to the desire of those women who desire to enjoy their right and to discharge their duty. If one or many choose not to claim their right it is no argument for depriving me of mine, or one woman of hers. There are many reasons why some women declare themselves opposed to the extension of suffrage to their sex. Some well-fed and pampered, without serious experiences in life, are incapable of comprehending the subject at all. Vast numbers, who secretly and earnestly desire it, from the long habit of deference to the wishes of the other sex, upon whom they are so entirely dependent while disfranchised, and knowing the hostility of their "protectors" to the agitation of the subject, conceal their real sentiments, and the "lord" of the family referring this question to his wife, who has heard him sneer or worse than sneer at suffragists for half a lifetime, ought not to expect an answer which she knows will subject her to his censure and ridicule or even his unexpressed disapprobation.

It is like the old appeal of the master to his slave to know if he would be free. Full well did the wise and wary slave know that happiness depended upon declared contentment with his lot. But all the same the world does move. Colored men are free. Colored men vote. Women will vote. A little further on I shall revert to the evidence of a general and growing desire on her part and on the part of just and intelligent men that the suffrage be extended to women.

But we are told that husband and wife will disagree and thus the suffrage will destroy the family and ruin society. If a married couple will quarrel at all, they will find the occasion, and it were fortunate indeed if their contention might concern important affairs. There is no peace in the family save where love is, and the same spirit which enables the husband and wife to enforce the toleration act between themselves in religious matters will keep the peace between them in political discussions. At all events, this argument is unworthy of notice at all unless we are to push it to its logical conclusion, and, for the sake of peace in the family, to prohibit woman absolutely the exercise of freedom of thought and speech. Men live with their countrymen and disagree with them in politics, religion, and ten thousand of the affairs of life, as often the trifling as the important. What harm, then, if woman be allowed her thought and vote upon the tariff, education, temperance, peace and war, and whatsoever else the suffrage decides?

But we are told that no government, of which we have authentic history, ever gave to woman a share in the sovereignty.

This is not true, for the annals of monarchies and despotisms have been rendered illustrious by queens of surpassing brilliance and power. But even if it be true that no republic ever enfranchised woman with the ballot—even so until within one hundred years universal or even general suffrage was unknown among men.

Has the millennium yet dawned? Is all progress at an end? If that which is should therefore remain, why abolish the slavery of men?

But we are informed that woman does not vote when she has the opportunity. Wherever she has the unrestricted right she exercises it. The records of Wyoming and Washington demonstrate the fact.

And in these Territories, too, as well as wherever else she has exercised the suffrage, she has elevated man to her own level, and has made the voting precinct as respectable and decorous as the lecture-room or the assemblies of the devout. All the experience there is refutes the apprehension of those who fear that woman will either neglect the discharge of her great duty, when allowed its fair and equal exercise, or that the rude and baser sort will overwhelm and banish the noble and refined.

But to my mind it seems like trifling with a great subject to dwell upon topics like this. It can only be justified by the continual iteration of the objection by the opponents of woman suffrage, who, in the lack of substantial grounds whereupon to base their opposition to the exercise of a great right by one-half the community, declare that there is no time in which woman can vote.

I will now read an extract from the report of the majority of the committee, showing to a certain extent the degree of consequence which this movement has assumed, its extent throughout our country, and something of its duration. I have not the latest data, for since this report was compiled there has been action in several States, and a great deal of popular discussion and a vast amount of demonstration from the action of popular assemblies.

The committee say:

This movement for woman suffrage has developed during the last half century into one of great strength. The first petition was presented to the Legislature of New York in 1835. It was repeated in 1846, and since that time the petition has been urged upon nearly every Legislature in the Northern States. Five States have voted upon the question of amending their constitutions by striking out the word "male" from the suffrage clause—Kansas in 1867, Michigan in 1874, Colorado in 1877, Nebraska in 1882, and Oregon in 1884.

The ratio of the popular vote in each case was about one-third for the amendment and two-thirds against it. Three Territories have or have had full suffrage for women. In two, Wyoming since 1869 and Washington since 1883, the experiment (!) is an unqualified success. In Utah Miss Anthony keenly and justly observes that suffrage is as much of a success for the Mormon women as for the men.

In eleven States school suffrage for women exists. In Kansas, from her admission as a State. In Kentucky and Michigan fully as long a time. School suffrage for women also exists in Colorado, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Vermont, New York, Nebraska, and Oregon.

In all these States, except Minnesota, school suffrage was extended to women by the respective Legislatures, and in Minnesota by the popular vote, in November, 1876. Not only these eleven States, but in nearly all the other Northern and Western States women are elected to the offices of county and city superintendent of public schools and as members of school boards. In Louisiana the constitution of 1879 makes women eligible to school offices.

It may also be observed as indicating a rising and controlling public sentiment in recognition of the right and capacity of woman for public affairs that she is eligible to such offices as that of county clerk, register of deeds, and the like in many and perhaps in all the States. Kansas and Iowa elected several women to these positions in the election of November, 1885, while President Grant alone appointed more than five thousand women to the office of postmaster; and although many women have been appointed in the Departments and to pension agencies and like important employments and trusts, so far as your committee are aware no charge of incompetency or of malfeasance in office has ever yet been sustained against a woman.

It may be further stated in this connection that nearly every Northern State has had before it from time to time since 1870 a bill for the submission of the question of woman suffrage to the popular vote. In some instances such a resolution has been passed at one session and failed to be ratified at another by from one to three votes; thus Iowa passed it in 1870, killed it in 1872; passed it in 1874, failed to do so in 1876; passed it in 1878, and failed in 1880; passed it again in 1882, and defeated it in 1884; four times over and over, and this winter these heroic and indomitable women are trying it in Iowa again.

If men were to make such a struggle for their rights it would be considered a fine thing, and there would be books and even poetry written about it.

In New York, since 1880, the women have urged this great measure before the Legislature each year. There it takes the form of a bill to prohibit the disfranchisement of women. This bill has several times come within five votes of passing the assembly.

In many States well sustained efforts for municipal suffrage have been made, and, as if in rebuke to the conservatism, or worse, of this great Republic, this right of municipal suffrage is already enjoyed in the province of Ontario, Canada, and throughout the island of Great Britain by unmarried women to the same extent as by men, there being the same property qualification required of each.

The movement for the amendment of the National Constitution began by petitioning Congress December, 1865, and since 1869 there have been consecutive applications to every Congress praying for the submission to the States of a proposition similar to the joint resolution herewith reported to the Senate.

The petitions have come from all parts of the country; more especially from the Northern and Western States, although there is an extensive and increasing desire for the suffrage existing among the women in the Southern States, as we are informed by those whose interest in the subject makes them familiar with the real state of feeling in that part of our country. It is impossible to know just what proportion of the people—men and women—have expressed their desire by petition to the National Legislature during the last twenty years, but we are informed by Miss Anthony that in the year 1871 Senator Sumner collected the petitions from the files of the Senate and House of Representatives, and that there were then an immense number. A far greater number have been presented since that time, and the same lady is our authority for the estimate that in all more than two hundred thousand petitions, by select and representative men and women, have been poured upon Congress in behalf of this prayer of woman to be free. Who is so interested in the framing of the law as woman, whose only defense is the law? There never was a stronger exhibition of popular demand by American citizens to be heard in the court of the people for the vindication of a fundamental right.

Since the submission of the report the attempt has been made to secure action in several of the State legislatures. One which came very near being successful was made in the State of Vermont. The suffrage was extended, if I am not incorrectly informed, so far as the action of the house of representatives of that State could give it, and an effort being made to propose some restriction and condition upon the suffrage it was defeated, when, as I am told by the friends of the movement, if it could have reached a vote in the Vermont Legislature on the naked proposition of suffrage to women as suffrage is extended to men, they felt the very greatest confidence that they would have been able to secure favorable action by the Legislature of that State.

Miss Anthony informs me since she came here at the present session (and I am sorry I have not had the opportunity of extended conference with her) that in the State of Kansas, where she spent several weeks in the discussion of the subject before vast masses of people, the largest halls, rinks, and places for the accommodation of popular assemblages in the State were crowded to overflowing to listen to her address. In every instance she has taken a vote of those vast audiences as to whether they were in favor of woman suffrage or against it, and in no single instance has there been a solitary vote against the extension of the right, but affirmative and universal action of these great assemblies demanding that it be extended to women. And like demonstrations of popular approval are developing in all parts of the country, perhaps not to so marked an extent as these which I have just stated; but it is a feeling growing in this country that woman should have this right; and, above all, woman and man demand that she should have the opportunity to try her case before the American people; that this right of petition should be headed by Congress and the joint resolution for the submission of the matter for discussion by the States should be passed by the necessary two-thirds vote.

It is sometimes, too, urged against this movement for the submission of a resolution for a national constitutional amendment that women should go to the States and fight it out there. But we did not send the colored man to the States. No other amendment touching the general national interest is left to be fought out by individual action in the individual States. Under the terms of the Constitution itself the people of the United States, having some universal common interest affected by law or by the want of law, are invited to come to this body and try here their question of right, or at all events through the agency of Congress to submit that proposition to the people at large, in order that in the general national forum it may receive discussion, and by the action of three-fourths of the States, if favorable, their idea may be incorporated in the fundamental law.

I will not detain the Senate further in the discussion of this subject.

It should be borne in mind that the proposition is to submit to men the question whether woman shall vote. The jury will certainly not be prejudiced in her favor as against the public good. There can be no danger of a verdict in her favor contrary to the evidence in the case.

We ask only for her an opportunity to bring her suit in the great court for the amendment of fundamental law. It is impossible for any right mind to escape the impression of solemn responsibility which attaches to our decision. Ridicule and wit of whatever quality are here as much out of place as in the debates upon the Declaration of Independence. We are affirming or denying the right of petition which by all law belongs as much to women as to men. Millions of women and thousands of men in our own country demand that she at least have the opportunity to be heard. Hear, even if you strike.

The lamented Anthony, so long the object of reverence, affection, and pride in this body, among the last acts of his public life, in signing the favorable report of this resolution, made the following declaration:

> The Constitution is wisely conservative in the provision of its own amendment. It is eminently proper that whenever a large number of the people have indicated a desire for an amendment the judgment of the amending power should be consulted. In view of the extensive agitation of the question of woman suffrage, and the numerous and respectable petitions that have been presented to Congress in its support, I unite with the committee in recommending that the proposed amendment be submitted to the States.
> H. B. ANTHONY.

Profoundly convinced of the justice of woman's demand for the suffrage, and that the proper method of securing the right is by an amendment of the National Constitution, I urge the adoption of the joint resolution upon the still broader ground so clearly and calmly stated by the great Senator whose words I have just read. I appeal to you, Senators, to grant this petition of woman that she may be heard for her claim of right. How could you reject that petition, even were there but one faint voice beseeching your ear? How can you deny the demand of millions who believe in suffrage for women, and who can not be forever silenced, for they give voice to the innate cry of the human heart that justice be done not alone to man, but to that half of this nation which now is free only by the grace of the other, and that by our action to-day we indorse, if we do not initiate, a movement which, in the development of our race, shall guarantee liberty to all without distinction of sex, even as our glorious Constitution already grants the suffrage to every citizen, without distinction of color or race.

I do not desire to submit further remarks to the Senate at this time, but there may be others who wish to continue the discussion, and at as early a day as the debate can be closed and a vote reached, I shall ask action by the Senate. I defer to the suggestion of the honorable Senator, the chairman of the committee who makes the report of the minority, that his colleague from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] is absent, and that he desires a postponement now on that account.

Mr. COCKRELL. As the Senator says, others may wish to speak, and when we ascertain that, we can arrange when the vote shall be taken. In the mean time we can leave the joint resolution on the Calendar, so as to be called up at any time. It may be left as unfinished business, perhaps.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like that very much indeed, with the understanding that a vote be not pressed until a proper opportunity comes, after what has been said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). If there be no objection, that order will be made, and the joint resolution will be laid aside, retaining its present position on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator from Kansas that he has been notified that an important message from the Executive is coming, and that it is desirable that it should be laid before the Senate to-day.

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly I withdraw the motion if it is necessary that the representatives of thirty-eight States should await the pleasure of the Executive to send messages.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1990) to provide for the adjustment of matters connected with certain judicial proceedings in Pennsylvania in which the United States was a party, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6983) for the relief of certain soldiers of the Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, dishonorably discharged under special orders 92, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated March 1, 1866.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1171) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," approved June 3, 1884; and

A bill (H. R. 7990) for the relief of Thomas C. Dickey.

EXECUTIVE SESSION WITH OPEN DOORS.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, a special order for 2 o'clock to-day was made at the last session of Congress, which was the resolution introduced by me providing that nominations should be considered in open session, except when otherwise ordered by the Senate. I should like to have that special order come before the Senate to-day and get action upon it. I trust no motion will be made to adjourn which would have the effect of postponing that to any day very remote from the present time.

I am not so well informed as to the rules of the Senate as to know whether if an adjournment should take place before 2 o'clock that resolution would still stand as the special order of the Senate for the next day on which the Senate should be in session, but I suppose it would.

I merely wish to avail myself of the opportunity to say that I desire to have consideration of that resolution as soon as may be consistent with the feelings and desires of those Senators who may wish to discuss it. For myself I do not care to discuss it further, and am willing a vote should be taken on it at any time. I had at the last session intimations from some Senators that they desired to be heard upon it. I do not wish to press it unduly, but at the same time I do not wish that it shall get over into the rush and hurry and haste of the session, when we shall not be able to get a vote on it at all. So I trust that the Senate will act upon it in this early part of the session, whatever its fate may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order in relation to the resolution is a continuous one.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is there any objection to the vote being taken to-day?

Mr. PLATT. I wish that it may be.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator asked if there be objection. If there be none, I ask for a vote now.

Mr. INGALLS. We are waiting now upon information that the Executive desires to communicate with us. If that suggestion is withdrawn, I desire to move an adjournment.

Mr. DAWES. Why not go on with the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut make any motion in reference to his resolution?

Mr. PLATT. I should like to take it up at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut moves to take up a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT January 29, 1886, as subsequently modified by him, as follows:

> Resolved, That executive nominations shall hereafter be considered and acted upon in open session, except when otherwise ordered by vote of the Senate, and so much of section 2, Rule XXXVI, and section 2, Rule XXXVIII, of the standing rules of the Senate as conflicts with or is inconsistent with the above is to the extent of such inconsistency rescinded.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. No; no.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg pardon. If any Senator desires to speak I do not wish to make the motion to adjourn.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to offer a resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg the Senator's pardon. The motion may be informally laid aside.

PROTECTION OF FOOD FISHES.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Fish and Fisheries be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire into and report to the Senate as to the power of Congress to legislate for the protection of food fishes in the rivers and navigable waters of the United States, and especially in rivers which form boundaries between States, and as to the propriety of such legislation; and to report by bill or otherwise.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, were received.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire of the Chair if there be any communications relating to executive business in the messages from the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are executive nominations.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

AMERICAN FISHERMEN IN NORTH ATLANTIC WATERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State which is accompanied by the correspondence in relation to the rights of American fishermen in the British North American waters, and commend to your favorable consideration the suggestion that a commission be authorized by law to take perpetuating proofs of the losses sustained during the past year by American fishermen owing to their unfriendly and unwarranted treatment by the local authorities of the maritime provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

I may have occasion, hereafter, to make further recommendations during the present session for such remedial legislation as may become necessary for the protection of the rights of our citizens engaged in the open-sea fisheries in the North Atlantic waters.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 8, 1886.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the formal introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

ISSUE OF SUBSIDIARY SILVER COIN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Mint, inclosing a draft of and recommending the passage of a joint resolution for the issue of subsidiary silver coin; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a tabulated statement of unexpended balances for river and harbor works November 1, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

DISBURSEMENTS DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a statement of the condition of appropriations December 4, 1886, under control of the Attorney-General; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TWELFTH MICHIGAN VOLUNTEERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, for reference under the rule, the bill (H. R. 6983) for the relief of certain soldiers of the Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, dishonorably discharged under Special Orders 92, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated March 1, 1866, returned from the Senate with amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered at this time and concurred in. I will explain the nature of it if the House will indulge me just a moment. The only point of the bill is this. As it passed the House it annulled a certain order by which nine soldiers of the Twelfth Michigan Infantry were dishonorably discharged in 1866. The bill passed the House in that shape and went to the Senate, and the only amendment proposed by the Senate is to insert the names of the nine soldiers who are to be benefitted by this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment, after which the Chair will ask for objections, if any.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to revoke and cancel special orders numbered 92, dated Washington, March 1, 1866, ordering the dishonorable discharge of the soldiers therein named; and to cause to be issued to Sergeants John M. Russey, Company A, and William Becker and Michael Casey, Company B; Corporal Seth Gregory, Company B; Sergeants Collins Phelphs and George S. Foster, Company E; and Alfred Doolittle, Company H, and Hull M. Cross and Lewis M. Rope, Company K, and each of them, all of the Twelfth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, and in case of the death of any of them, then to their heirs, respectively, honorable discharges as of the dates and places at which their companies were respectively mustered out of the service; and such discharges shall each have the same force and effect as if issued at the times and places of the muster-out of the said companies, respectively, and as if said special orders numbered 92 had never been issued or executed.

There being no objection, the amendment of the Senate was considered and concurred in.

Mr. BURROWS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF DEATH OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate resolutions; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table for the present.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. LEWIS BEACH, and of the death of Hon. JOHN ARNOT, jr., late Representatives from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate this resolution to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the appointment of a joint committee to take order for attending the funeral of the deceased, at his residence in the State of Wisconsin; and that the members of the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore has appointed Mr. SPOONER, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. BLACKBURN the committee on the part of the Senate under the foregoing resolution.

AUGUST F. BRONNER.

Mr. HEWITT. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a pension bill which was delayed in transmission by the mail, so that I could not present it on yesterday.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10068) granting a pension to August F. Bronner was introduced, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM WARD.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1990) be considered at this time. It will not take a moment. After the reading of the bill and the report I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The bill (S. 1990) to provide for the adjustment of matters connected with certain judicial proceedings in Pennsylvania in which the United States was a party, was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Attorney-General is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain what sum, if any, is a fair equivalent for services rendered by William Ward in the court of common pleas of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, in defending certain attachments and suits pending therein against the United States revenue-marine steamer William H. Seward; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said William Ward, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as the Attorney-General shall certify to be a fair equivalent for the said services.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. As I heard it read I understand there is no limit on the amount to be paid.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Committe of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it now be put upon its passage. The Committee of the House has unanimously reported a similar bill, and made a report covering exactly the same ground that was covered by the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggested that there was no sum named by the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir. The bill directs the Attorney-General to ascertain the amount.

Mr. SPRINGER. The limit of the claim is $3,000. The claimant does not ask for more than that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection if it be understood that the amount shall not exceed $3,000.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I accept that suggestion, and offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:
"Provided that the amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS C. DICKEY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7990) and that the same be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Thomas C. Dickey, late postmaster at Murphy, N. C., the sum of $275, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBATE OF DUTIES, EASTPORT, ME.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present the memorial of the municipal officers of Eastport, Me., and to introduce the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, and that the bill be now considered and passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill and memorial were read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10069) for the relief of sufferers by fire at Eastport, Me.

Be it enacted, &c.

SECTION 1. That there shall be allowed, and paid, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, on all materials actually used in buildings erected on the ground burned over by the fire which occurred at Eastport, Me., October 14, 1886, a drawback on the import duties paid on the same; provided that such materials shall have been imported and used during the term of two years from and after the said 14th day of October, 1886.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, respectfully represent that the conflagration in Eastport, Me., that occurred on the 14th of October, 1886, destroyed every store, our hotels, boarding houses, banks, six large factories, nearly all of our wharves, storehouses, and places of business, and over sixty dwelling houses, causing a loss of over $800,000.

In consideration of the above heavy loss to our town, we respectfully ask and petition that Congress will pass the following act for the relief of the sufferers by the above fire.

N. B. NUTT, JR.,
E. E. SHEAD,
JAMES MULNEAUX,
Selectmen of Eastport, Me.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what amount is involved in this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state, if the gentleman will permit me. Many members of the House are doubtless aware that since the adjournment of Congress one of those disastrous conflagrations which periodically overwhelm communities entirely destroyed the business portions of the seaport town of Eastport, Me. That fire destroyed every store, every warehouse, nearly all the wharves, the banks, the hotels, the custom-house, and post-office, and more than sixty private dwellings, leaving the community stricken to a degree almost unparalleled in the history of such disasters. The selectmen of that town have requested, by memorial, that this bill shall be passed, granting the people there the privilege, which has been accorded in cases of a similar character that have heretofore occurred, such as those of Portland, in 1866, Chicago, in 1871, and in other cities that have been visited by like disasters, of importing, without payment of duty, the materials actually necessary for the rebuilding of the town.

The bill is entirely in accordance with precedent. I understand that it has been the custom of the House to grant this privilege in such cases without debate or objection, and I trust there will be none in this case. For the information of the House I will state that this bill is identical in form with the one passed in the case of Portland, except that the period during which the material is to be admitted free is put at two years instead of one year, as in the case of Portland. The difference in the size and wealth of the places being considered, this seems reasonable. With this brief statement, I trust there will be no objection made to this act of courtesy to a community which is manfully striving to overcome the effects of a disaster that seemed at one time to almost preclude the possibility of the early restoration of the town.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman whether there is any limit fixed to the amount of rebate required to be paid. I see the bill provides that "on all materials actually used in buildings erected on the ground burned over by the fire" there shall be a rebate of the duties paid——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And the time is limited to two years.

Mr. SPRINGER. Here is a large city——

Mr. BOUTELLE. No, it is a town of some 5,000 population.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, here is a place of 5,000 inhabitants, and I presume the buildings to which this bill will apply have already been erected.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No, sir; the fire occurred on the 14th of October last, and they have now simply got so far as to commence the rebuilding of their wharves and to erect some temporary places of business. The merchants of that town are many of them at this time keeping store in their dwelling-houses, and some of the first citizens, as a matter of neighborly kindness, are taking boarders in the best apartments in their houses, to furnish homes for those who have lost their own by fire. The people are doing everything that they can to overcome the effects of the overwhelming disaster which has befallen them just as the severities of winter were approaching.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill contains, I observe, a proviso that these materials shall be used during the term of two years.

Mr. BOUTELLE. During the term of two years.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this similar to the provision which was passed in the case of Chicago?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Entirely so, with the exception, as I have stated, that in this case the term is two years instead of one, this being a much smaller place, and the work of rebuilding proportionately more difficult and slower.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the case of Chicago, lumber was excepted; in this case you let lumber come in.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill is the same in that respect as the bill for the relief of Portland.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection. I think that the greater the quantity of these materials that may come in the better.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I must demand that the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is an unusual procedure in a case of this kind. I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who makes no objection. The course which the gentleman from Arkansas proposes has never, I think, been adopted heretofore. I will say to the gentleman, also, that while there may not be a great amount of practical relief from this bill, a principal feature and value of it will be the grace and courtesy on the part of the Congress of the United States in according the usual recognition of a disaster of this kind.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. There are other people in this country who, by reason of short crops and misfortunes of various character, are as much in need of relief from taxation as the people of Eastport to-day. I think that any proposition of this sort should be considered by the appropriate committee, and in the light of the general wants of the country. I am very much gratified to find a Representative from Maine confessing that the tariff is a tax, and confessing that his people are not more than compensated for the burdens they are under by the home market which, it is claimed, is produced by these excessive prices. I shall insist that this bill go to the committee that has charge of questions of taxation; and, for my part, I hope it will be considered in the light of the necessities of all the people of this country who are suffering from misfortune and bearing the burdens of this taxation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust that I am duly impressed, and that the House will also be, with the nobility of the gentleman's position in taking advantage of this disaster which has befallen a town to air his views upon the tariff question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am entirely ready to accept all the nobility that arises from a perfect willingness to stand here for the rights of all the American people.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas on the right demands the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Unquestionably he has the right to do so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And does it with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I recognize all the gracefulness of the gentleman's act.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine (Mr. BOUTELLE) desire to have the bill referred?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let it take the usual course.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for one week.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed, as the regular order, to call the committees for reports.

COMPAGNIE GÉNÉRALE TRANSATLANTIQUE.

Mr. RICE, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8954) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique for duties of tonnage illegally exacted; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, the regular order now is the consideration for one hour of bills reported from committees. The hour begins at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m. The Committee on Military Affairs has an unfinished bill in this hour.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to call up the bill pending at the close of the last morning hour, and upon the passage of which the previous question was moved.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1171) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," approved June 3, 1884.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question upon the passage of this bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. Would it be in order to ask or to demand the reading of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the bill read, unless there be objection, as it was considered some time ago.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1 of "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," approved June 3, 1884, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the joint resolution approved July 11, 1870, entitled 'Joint resolution amendatory of joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army,' approved July 26, 1866, is hereby so amended and shall be so construed that in all cases arising under the same any person who was duly appointed and commissioned, whether his commission was actually received by him or not, shall be considered as commissioned to the grade therein named from the date from which he was to take rank under and by the terms of his said commission, and shall be entitled to all pay and emoluments as if actually mustered at that date: Provided, That at the date from which he was to take rank by the terms of his commission he was actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was so commissioned, or, if not so performing such duties, then from such time after the date of his commission as he may have actually entered upon such duties: And provided further, That any person held as a prisoner of war, or who may have been absent by reason of wounds, or in hospital by reason of disability received in the service in the line of duty, at the date of his commission, if a vacancy existed for him in the grade to which so commissioned, shall be entitled to the same pay and emoluments as if actually performing the duties of the grade to which he was commissioned and actually mustered at such date: And provided further, That this act and the resolution hereby amended shall be construed to apply only in those cases where the commission bears date prior to June 20, 1863, or after that date when their commands were not below the minimum number required by existing laws and regulations: And provided further, That the pay and allowances actually received shall be deducted from the sums to be paid under this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is, shall this bill pass.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is the bill subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The question is on its passage, upon which the previous question has been ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSOLIDATION OF NAVY DEPARTMENT BUREAUS.

The Committee on Naval Affairs being called,

Mr. HERBERT said: On behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I call up, and ask unanimous consent to have considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill, the title of which will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED. I should like to know what that bill is.

Mr. HERBERT. It is the bill to consolidate certain bureaus of the Navy Department.

Mr. REED. Has it the approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. Unanimously?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; there were two members who dissented. I am only asking now that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is this proposition?

Mr. HERBERT. This is the bill to consolidate the bureaus of the Navy Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But what is the proposition?

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Of course it will be subject to amendment——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I object.

Mr. HERBERT. Then if I do not obtain that consent I ask to call up the resolution reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, fixing a day for its consideration. The resolution is on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, 28th day of April, 1886, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, except Mondays and Fridays, not to interfere with the consideration of revenue bills, regular appropriation bills, nor with the morning hour, nor with the hour for the call of committees for consideration of bills, nor with prior orders, be set apart for the consideration of House bill No. 7635, entitled "A bill to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes," and if said bill shall not have been previously disposed of, that Wednesday, the 5th day of May, 1886, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the exclusive consideration thereof in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that the previous question on said bill and all amendments which may be offered thereto be considered as ordered at half-past 6 o'clock p. m. of the said 5th day of May.

The committee propose to amend by striking out in the first line of the resolution the words "28th of April," and inserting "15th day of December."

Also strike out after the words "consideration of bills," the following: "Nor with prior orders."

Also strike out wherever it occurs "5th day of May," and insert "18th day of December."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is this before the House by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is presented for consideration by the Committee on Naval Affairs under the rule which allows that committee one hour after the first call of committees for the consideration of such measures as they may present.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How is it proposed to consider this; in the regular way?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk had better report the resolution again.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is important to know exactly what it does propose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it leaves the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where it now is.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If that be so I have no objection to the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will, however, examine the resolution again. [After a pause.] Upon an inspection of the resolution the Chair discovers that it makes no provision whatever concerning the question as to whether or not it shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole or in the House; and it has been held heretofore by the predecessors of the present occupant of the chair that when a bill which is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has been made a special order by the House it takes it out of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is also another proposition, as I understand it, embodied in the resolution, providing that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at a particular time. I would like to hear the resolution again read.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. HERBERT. If you will indulge me a moment I will write out a substitute for the resolution.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The point of order then is reserved.

Mr. HERBERT. I offer as a substitute what I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 15th day of December, 1886, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, except Mondays and Fridays, not to interfere with the consideration of revenue bills, regular appropriation bills, nor with the morning hour, nor with the hour for the call of the committees for the consideration of bills, be set apart for the consideration of House bill 7635, entitled "A bill to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes."

Mr. STEELE. I desire to inquire whether this excludes all the prior orders. I did not catch its reading exactly.

Mr. REED, of Maine. One question before I withdraw my point of order. It is—and I have not been able to gather from the reading of the resolution the point about which I wish to inquire—does that cause this bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole? Now, I have no objection to the bill if brought up and duly considered. But it is a very serious matter, and there ought to be no snap judgment upon it.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not propose to take any snap judgment. I simply ask a fair consideration and discussion of the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the resolution proposes to take it out of the Committee of the Whole, it proposes not to give it fair consideration, and I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he make his motion in such character and fashion as that we can all agree upon it. If it can be considered in the regular way, there will be no objection on this side.

The SPEAKER. Under the rulings referred to a moment since the passage of this resolution will take this bill out of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and bring it into the House for consideration.

Mr. HERBERT. But it will be subject to amendment and discussion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Subject to amendment and discussion at the option of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; at the option of the House; and I promise for my part to give full opportunity for amendment and discussion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why will not the gentleman give us the consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole in the regular way?

Mr. HERBERT. This is the ordinary way and the common mode of proceeding.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But this is not an ordinary and common transaction.

Mr. HERBERT. It is.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This bill proposes to change the organization of an entire department of the Government.

Mr. HERBERT. That is true; it is a very important bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Precisely; and that is the reason why it should be discussed in proportion to its importance as the rules of the House have regulated.

Mr. HERBERT. I promise to give one day or two days for discussion, if the gentleman desires it, and the fullest opportunity of amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We want it in Committee of the Whole, where there will be full opportunity of amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. There is no necessity for the bill being considered in the Committee of the Whole if you have full opportunity to discuss and amend.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What objection does the gentleman have to its being considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HERBERT. What objection has the gentleman from Maine to having it considered in the House if we can dispose of it there? We want it where it can be disposed of and a conclusion reached. If the gentleman from Maine is willing to that he will not object. I promise he shall have two full days for discussion and opportunity to amend. If the gentleman's objection is captious, if he desires to defeat the bill and prevent a determination of it he will insist on having it considered in Committee of the Whole. We want it where we can reach a conclusion, and, as I understand, the Speaker has simply ruled that this order which sets apart a day for consideration of the bill, and provides it shall be considered from day to day till the consideration is completed, has the effect, as such orders have always had, of bringing it into the House out of the Committee of the Whole. Every special order perhaps on that Calendar fixing a day for the consideration of a measure is subject to the same criticism the gentleman from Maine now makes to this. I can not see why he should make this objection if he gets a fair opportunity to amend and a full opportunity to discuss.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time in the conduct of matters connected with the naval affairs of the country that the gentleman from Alabama has endeavored to put the House in a position of opposition to the bill, when their opposition is merely to his method of managing it and discussing it. Now, the rules of the House have been established for many years upon one great principle; that is, that when a measure was to be thoroughly discussed, when it was of grave magnitude, involving certain important principles and details, it should be discussed in the Committee of the Whole. The gentleman proposes to change that now, and he gives no reason for it, except that we can rely upon his promise that there shall be full discussion and ample opportunity for amendment.

I submit to the gentleman that the method which has been established by this House which gives full discussion, which gives every opportunity for amendment, is consideration in Committee of the Whole. That is arranged for that purpose, and accomplishes that result. And the gentleman from Alabama knows that, practically, even with his willingness that there should be the opportunity he speaks of, his method does not give full opportunity, because we find ourselves limited in the number of amendments which can be presented in the House; whereas in Committee of the Whole there are no limitations.

Mr. HERBERT. What limitation is there to the number of amendments?

Mr. REED, of Maine. There can only be three.

Mr. HERBERT. Three to any one proposition?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Precisely; and after the previous question is ordered no further amendments can be presented; so that in reality the ample permission of the gentleman from Alabama to make amendments is reduced to three, and none of those may really suit the wishes of the majority of the House.

Now, there is no disposition—I tell the gentleman with the same frankness and good faith with which he talks to me—there is no disposition to make trouble with regard to this matter. All we want is a fair opportunity of discussion and amendment. There is no desire of obstruction whatever. I submit to the gentleman, he has periled measures occasionally in this House by not being willing to listen to the reasonable wishes of gentlemen on the other side. I submit to him he can have the measure put in good shape, where there will be an opportunity for discussion and amendment, and no desire to put any obstruction in his way. This is an important matter, and should be fully and freely discussed in the manner we all recognize as affording full and free methods of discussion, namely, in Committee of the Whole.

It need take no more time than the gentleman says he is willing to grant us.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman will promise for his side of the House that no obstruction shall be offered to this bill, that it shall be taken up and considered until a conclusion upon it is reached, and that action shall be taken after the bill shall have been discussed for six hours in the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is no occasion for such limitation. Let us limit the discussion when we get to it. Why should we undertake to limit the discussion now, before we know how much the subject may require? I object here and now in this and in all such cases to limiting discussion before we have commenced it. You can not tell what sort of a discussion a subject may require until you have begun it, and the rules of the House make adequate provision for proper limitation.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] says that this is not the first time when I have imperiled a bill by method of management. In reply to that, I simply desire to say that, according to my recollection, this is not the first time when that gentleman has raised technical objections—objections which have seemed to me to be purely technical—to the consideration of bills coming from the Committee on Naval Affairs. I remember very well that when we were discussing here last session a bill reported from that committee in regard to the increase of the Navy, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] objected to my methods. In spite of the fact that on more than one occasion he had voted against taking up the bill, he was contending before this House that he and his friends were better friends of the increase of the Navy than gentlemen on this side of the House. And I remember that on that occasion, after the discussion was concluded, my friend from New York, Mr. CAMPBELL, remarked that the attitude of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] reminded him of an able-bodied man he once knew who was always looking for work and praying to God that he might not find it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, do not let us have old stories twice repeated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HERBERT. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to ask whether this proceeding is by unanimous consent, or under the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. It is under the call of committees.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to ask further in that connection whether it is competent for the chairman of a committee, under that call, to introduce measures here other than those which have been acted upon and authorized by the committee? In other words, whether it is in order at this time for the House to be called to the consideration of a proposition offered by the chairman of a committee individually—whether that can be done under a call of the committees, which I suppose to be for the purpose of disposing of measures reported from committees?

Mr. HERBERT. This is the action of the committee, Mr. Speaker. That is to say, the original resolution was reported by the committee, but the day fixed in that resolution has passed, and therefore it is necessary to make a change. That change can only be made by a substitute similar to this which I have proposed, and I am satisfied that a majority of the committee are with me in this proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] practically acknowledges that this proposition has not been authorized by the committee.

Mr. HERBERT. This particular proposition has not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that if this proposition has not been authorized by the committee, it is not in order to be considered by the House at this time under the call of committees.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] will permit the matter to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HERBERT. I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, by one of my colleagues on the committee, Mr. SAYERS, of Texas, that I was authorized by the committee to make such a change as I have made.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to have the gentleman state when and where he was so authorized.

Mr. HERBERT. The subject was before the committee at a time when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] was not present, as has frequently happened.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to state to the House that, by action of the Committee on Naval Affairs, he has been authorized to present to the House this proposition which he has twice changed? If so, I should like to see the record of that action of the committee.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, upon the suggestion of a gentleman on the other side, a member of the committee, I will say that, if consent be given that this proposition be so changed that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the rule adopted at the beginning of the last session, when a committee is called——

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to say that I am satisfied with the proposition which the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. HERBERT) now makes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that my colleague does not object, but I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that under the rule a measure must be called up by the committee having it in charge, which means that the committee must authorize it to be called up, just as a committee authorizes a report to be made, or as a committee is required to authorize a motion to suspend the rules when committees are called for that purpose. But whether the committee did or did not authorize its chairman to call up a particular measure, is a question of fact, which of course the Chair can not decide.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I make the point that the committee has not acted on this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not know that. That is a question of fact which, as the Chair was about to remark, must be decided by the committee itself, and the Chair must depend, of course, upon the good faith of members in regard to that matter. Where there is a difference of opinion upon a question of that sort, it is impossible for the Chair to decide it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. As I understand, the chairman of the committee does not contend that the present proposition has been acted on by the committee. As a matter of fact, there has been no meeting of the Naval Committee this session.

Mr. WISE. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that the committee did authorize the chairman to call this up.

Mr. BOUTELLE. When?

Mr. WISE. At the last session.

Mr. BOUTELLE. At the last session?

Mr. WISE. Yes, sir; and to make these changes whenever necessary.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should like to see the record.

Mr. HERBERT. That was done. Since my attention has been called to the matter, I have a distinct recollection of it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, Mr. Speaker, the resolution has been originated here to-day. How could it have been authorized by the committee?

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman does not refer to the original resolution?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The substitute we are now considering.

Mr. HERBERT. That is the one I had authority from the committee to submit. Now, if gentlemen on the other side will consent we will pass the resolution in that form.

Mr. STEELE. I shall object unless prior orders are excepted.

Mr. HERBERT. I call for a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point of order that this resolution changes the rules of the House, and that one day's notice has not been given of the proposed change.

The SPEAKER. The resolution called up by the gentleman from Alabama is an original resolution offered at the last session. When the resolution was called up to-day the gentleman from Alabama offered a substitute for it; but the resolution has been on the Calendar for some months—since April last.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I was not aware of that.

The SPEAKER. But, moreover, the Chair desires to say, in order to avoid misapprehension hereafter, that this is not a resolution changing the rules of the House. It is simply a resolution fixing a day for the consideration of certain business and making it a special order.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the resolution as amended—the substitute.

Mr. GOFF. I should like to hear the amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 15th day of December, 1886, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, except Mondays and Fridays, not to interfere with the consideration of revenue bills, regular appropriation bills, nor with the morning hour, nor with the hour for the call of committees for consideration of bills, be set apart for the consideration in Committee of the Whole of House bill numbered 7635, entitled "A bill to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes."

Mr. HERBERT. I ask that this be substituted for the original resolution, and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. STEELE. As I understand, if this resolution be adopted, this bill will have the right of way against all prior orders from now until the close of the session, if necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if the House enters upon the consideration of this business on the day indicated, it will exclude thereafter the consideration of all other business, except that which is provided for in the resolution itself.

Mr. STEELE. In other words, this will have the right of way against everything else.

Mr. HERBERT. We shall get through in a reasonably short time.

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOWDEN. It is utterly impossible for us who remain in our seats to know what is going on, and I ask, therefore, that members shall take their seats, excepting of course the member who is addressing the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's point of order is well taken, and members will resume their seats and preserve order. The Chair has made repeated efforts to secure order upon the floor. The gentleman from Alabama demands the previous question on the substitute.

Mr. HERBERT demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 170, noes 12.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum is present, and the Chair will therefore appoint Mr. HERBERT and Mr. STEELE as tellers.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it; and the previous question therefore is ordered.

The substitute was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WISE. I move, on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to take up for action at this time Senate bill 71.

The SPEAKER. This seems to be a private bill, and therefore is not in order under this call. Reports are still in order from the Committee on Naval Affairs. [After a pause.] If that committee has no further business to present the Chair will call the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

EXTENSION OF THE FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will take the floor and yield it to my colleague on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to call up for consideration at this time a bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes, which has been reported from that committee with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and is not before the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask, then, that by unanimous consent the bill and amendments be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. But it has been already partially considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of that bill and pending amendments.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to the committee's amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the Clerk report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is, to strike out in line 18 of the amendment reported by the committee the words "at which place," and insert in lieu thereof the words "or at any place where;" so the bill will read:

According to the last general census taken by authority of State or United States law or at any place where the post-office produced, &c.

The question is on that amendment to the committee's amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, this matter was up at a night session during the last session of Congress, and I suspect is not remembered by members of the House. My friend from Missouri, I know, will not object to giving some five or ten minutes for the purpose of explaining the amendment on which we are called to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no limit put upon the debate. If gentlemen desire to speak, the Chair will recognize them. He will recognize, in the first place, the gentleman having charge of the bill—the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that five minutes on each side be allowed on the pending amendment.

Mr. CANNON. The debate had better be allowed to run on without any limit being imposed upon it at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have suggested that five minutes be allowed on each side for the purpose of explaining the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. Let the debate run on.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand the debate to be running on, but that the House was dividing on this question, and that no quorum had appeared. The proposition of my friend from Missouri is to waive that situation and allow five minutes on each side to explain the pending amendment.

Mr. CANNON. It is an important matter, and I think discussion should be allowed.

Mr. DOCKERY. I propose to allow five minutes on each side.

Mr. CANNON. But that is not enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that when the committee rose and the House adjourned the committee was dividing on the proposition to limit debate on this proposition, but the question was not acted on.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the suggestion, if my colleague will allow me, that we allow ten minutes on either side, with the understanding that all debate on this proposition be then closed.

Mr. CANNON. To that I object. I will say to the gentlemen that debate has not been closed, and although they may force a vote on this precise amendment, we can offer others and have discussion upon them.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. The House was dividing and the Chair was counting the vote. This debate is therefore out of order, and I call for the regular order of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, as the Chair has already stated, on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to the amendment offered by the committee. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 81.

Mr. CANNON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. CANNON as tellers.

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out in line 18 of the printed bill the words "at which place," and insert in lieu thereof "at all places where," so it will read:

According to the last general census taken by authority of State or United States law and at all places where the post-office produced, &c.

I should like to be heard for a moment on that amendment to the amendment of the committee. I ask the gentleman from Missouri, in the first place, whether he has a list of the post-offices which will be affected by this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I had at the last session, when this bill was under discussion, but do not have it before me at this moment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee I will explain the scope of my amendment to the amendment. Under the bill as proposed by the committee it requires two things, as I understand it, for the extension of the free-delivery system. First, in all cases of 10,000 population; and second, in all cases of $10,000 gross revenue. Am I correct? The two together. Now, my amendment gives 10,000 population as authorizing the free-delivery system, or $10,000 gross revenue. And I believe the amendment is right.

To illustrate: The committee's bill will give free-delivery service to the city of Alexandria and every old and venerable city, but where after all there is not a great amount of necessity for it, but I am willing it should go there—the city having 10,000 population and $10,000 revenue. But take my own city of Danville as another case. It is so situated there is only one-half the population of Danville proper within the corporate limits; and, while there is $17,000 gross revenue in that growing and flourishing city, yet it is cut out.

Mr. RYAN. What is the revenue of Alexandria?

Mr. CANNON. The revenue of Alexandria is barely over $10,000 a year.

Now take the city of Freeport, in Illinois, which has a gross revenue of $19,000 a year.

Mr. RYAN. How much population?

Mr. CANNON. Slightly under 10,000, according to the census of 1880, and Freeport is cut out.

This free-delivery service is a good thing, and I think it ought to be stood by and promoted. Even-handed justice, in my judgment, would give it to these flourishing and growing cities of the West, and, in some instances, to cities of the South, and of the East as well, which need it far more than some of those which happen to have 10,000 population as well as $10,000 revenue. Now, mind you, this is discretionary with the Postmaster-General. He is not bound to put the service in all of these cities. The amount of the service will depend on the appropriation that is given. Therefore, I hope that both sides of the House will consent to amend this bill, as I propose, which will then make it right and proper, and in that form I believe it ought to pass.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, either the proposition suggested by the gentleman from Illinois is right or else the bill itself is wrong. If a city which has a population of 10,000 and yields a revenue of $10,000 is entitled to this free-delivery service, then any city which yields $10,000 of revenue is equally entitled to it. So that I maintain either the bill itself is wrong or the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is right.

Why is it that a city which happens to have had an opportunity to have a census taken which shows that it has 10,000 population should enjoy the benefit of this free-delivery service when the thrifty and populous cities of the West, which spring from five hundred to twenty thousand during a period when no census can be taken, must be deprived of it? I happen to reside in a city which in 1880 was supposed to have about 3,300 people, according to the census of the United States. It is now estimated to have a population of from 12,000 to 14,000 people; and yet we have had no census since 1880. I say, therefore, that if we yield a revenue of $10,000 to the Government we are just as much entitled to the benefit of this service as if we had a census taken which shows a population of 10,000 people; and hence my conclusion is that we ought either to antagonize and defeat the bill or carry out the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DOCKERY. I believe the hour has expired, and I prefer to continue my remarks to-morrow.

The hour having expired, the Speaker resumed the chair; and Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7536) had come to no resolution thereon.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to submit a privileged report from a committee of conference, which merely corrects an error in the initials and spelling of a name.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1 and agree to the following:

Strike out the name "William B. Chambliss" wherever it occurs in the bill, and insert the name "William P. Chambliss."

GEORGE W. STEELE,
FRANK L. WOLFORD,
JOSEPH WHEELER,
Managers on the part of the House.
CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Unless the reading of the statement be called for the question will be on agreeing to the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the special order coming over from yesterday.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the eminent constitutional lawyer, Judge Cooley, of Michigan, in an address recently delivered in Columbia, S. C., as the honored guest of the South Carolina Bar Association, in remarking that "the human mind accepts with complacency the idea of change," and that in reference to our institutions" the Constitution can not remainaltogether stationary," continues:

Indeed, at this point is one of our chiefest dangers, a danger the full extent of which we are not likely to perceive except as we consider it carefully and with philosophical mind, unblinded by the brilliancy of a national career altogether unparalleled in history. America is the accepted representative of progress, and our pride in the fact closes our eyes to its perils, so that we come to feel that whatever is new is progression, and we fall into the tide without considering whether it floats us on our accustomed course or rises to the breakers; whether it pursues the course of safety or of destruction.

And he expresses his apprehension that "we shall be led further and further away from constitutional forms, methods, and principles, and possibly into dangers at present unknown and unsuspected." The dangers apparent are, however, in the opinion of this able thinker, "sufficiently serious to challenge thoughtful and considerate attention." And as the result of these reflections he sums up in the following conservative and patriotic expressions, accordant with the best and purest thought of our country in all stages of its existence:

Accepting, as we must, the fact that modifications of the fundamental law are inevitable, it is a plain duty to restrict them as far as possible to the precise method agreed upon when the Constitution was formed, that is to say, to amendments duly formulated and regularly adopted. By this method alone is it certain that the system of liberty which has come down to us as a precious legacy may be preserved. When changes are voluntarily suffered to creep in by other ways, we cultivate a habit of mind which saps the foundation of our institutions and sets us afloat upon a sea of uncertainty without definite landmarks, where the most reckless and pushing is likely to be most influential; and the most presumptuous, by the mere force of assurance, may seize upon the helm and boldly steer the course among unseen dangers. But unless we are prepared to put the wisdom of the past behind us as foolishness, we shall never forget that the liberties we enjoy have been worked out for us through a succession of ages, by keeping the old landmarks steadily in view, and by holding firmly to the teachings of experience. We have no warrant in history for an assumption that by a different road we should have reached the same advanced and enviable position.

Especially should every insiduous change which threatens to creep in by usurpation of authority be met at the threshold and sturdily resisted. Any such change will owe its accomplishment either to general ignorance among the people regarding the fundamental principles of government, or to general indifference.

Mr. Speaker, the principles so eloquently enunciated by the distinguished jurist of Michigan are the principles which should guide us in the consideration of the present proposed legislation. It is to be remembered that we are not proposing in this bill a change of the organic law. Whenever a constitutional amendment is submitted to the consideration of Congress, then there need be no bounds, no limitation to the scope of our propositions; but when legislation is proposed by statute, care must be taken that in every respect the fundamental requirements of the written Constitution are strictly and rigidly observed.

This bill proposes to adopt a certain method, by which the danger of confusion in the counting of the electoral vote shall be avoided. Regard must be had in its consideration to the different stages by which the election of a President and a Vice-President are consummated. In the first place there is the appointment of electors; that is one stage. In the second place there is the casting of the vote by electors and its certification; that is another stage. And thirdly there is the aggregation of that vote, and the declaration of its final result in the presence of the two Houses of Congress.

Now take these steps. The appointing power of the electors is exclusively in the States, and the Constitution provides each State shall appoint, in such manner as its legislature may direct, such and such electors. Everything in relation to that appointment, the manner of its being made, any disputes that may arise upon it, everything in connection with its determination from first to last, is under the jurisdiction of the States, and under the control of the State legislatures. Congress has no right to trespass upon that field at all. The next step is when the votes are cast by the electors. It will be borne in mind that these electors are State officers; they are appointed by the State, and in cases where they draw pay, they are paid by the State. They give their votes upon the soil of the State; they constitute a State electoral college; and while they are discharging a duty under the Constitution of the United States they are just as much State officers in the discharge of that duty, as the governor of the State is when he certifies their election under the great seal of the State. Everything, therefore, connected with the casting of that vote, everything connected with the observance of constitutional provisions, if you please, in connection with the casting of that vote, is under State jurisdiction and State authority.

Then we come, Mr. Speaker, to the third stage—that is, the counting of the vote in the presence of both Houses of Congress. Congress has no legislative power conferred expressly or indirectly in the Constitution except in connection with what is done in the presence of the two Houses of Congress on the day of the electoral count. As a matter of course under Article IV, section 1, of the Constitution, Congress has the right to regulate by law the manner and form in which any State shall certify its official public acts, its official public records, and any of the proceedings of its government. That is one of the powers vested in Congress, and it has the right to prescribe in what manner the action of the State in this, as in everything else, shall be transmitted; but as to anything behind that, a careful search will reveal no part of the Constitution where jurisdiction is given Congress to go behind that certification, and to go further than the recognition of credentials.

It is true there is a clause which says that Congress has the right to pass all laws necessary to carry out certain powers; but those powers are defined. It has the power to carry out its own express grants of power. It has the right to pass laws concerning any act of the Federal Government; but the election of a President is not an act of the Federal Government, but is the action of the State Government. It has the right to pass laws concerning what any Federal officer shall do or what any Federal department shall do; but there its power is exhausted. So that Congress has no power in relation to the electoral vote except to count, in the sense of enumeration.

Now let us consider, Mr. Speaker, in what ways a State communicates with the General Government. I can recall but three instances—certainly there are only three current instances—where a State communicates with the Federal Government. Those are where it certifies the election of a member of the House to the House; where it certifies the election of a member of the Senate to the Senate; and where it certifies to the two Houses of Congress assembled for the purpose of counting the electoral vote, the appointment of the electors and their return of the vote cast by them. These are the three instances, and I wish to call the attention of this House to a marked difference which exists between the former two and the third. In all these cases each House should accept implicitly, in the primary event, the prima facie case as presented by the State; and the member-elect of the Senate or of the House of Representatives, as the case may be, when he presents the great seal of the State certifying that he is elected to the office of Senator or Representative, is seated on that prima facie case. The House or the Senate accepts it and seats him.

Never mind whether behind it all his opponent may be in fact the lawful member. That certificate seats him prima facie, and he votes and takes part in all the deliberations of the body, and represents the district or State from which he is accredited until the case is decided. But the Constitution provides as to these two cases that each House of Congress shall be the judge of the election and qualifications of its own members. There you find judicial power of a certain kind expressly granted to the two Houses of Congress, making an exception to the general provision which confines judicial power to the Supreme Court and the subordinate Federal courts. Each House shall be the judge of the election and the qualification of its own members.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to the third, the certification by a State of its electoral vote, of the names of its electors and the result of their action. That comes certified under the great seal of the State, and again, in that case, it is the duty of the two Houses to do what they do in the other cases where there is a grant of judicial power; it is their duty to accept the prima facie case presented, and I deny the existence of any authority in one House, or in both Houses of Congress combined, to set aside that prima facie case when it is certified and presented in regular form and manner. Why, Mr. Speaker, in that case there is no grant of judicial power as there is in the other cases, yet even in the case where there is a grant of judicial power the two Houses of Congress do recognize the prima facie case.

I contend, therefore, that the same analogy prevails in regard to the electoral count; that the prima facie case has to be recognized, and that, so far as that count is concerned, is final, because the Constitution has not given to Congress in that case the same judicial power of revision which it has conferred upon each House in regard to the election and qualification of its own members. The case of the electoral count is therefore a distinct case, and with the reception and count of the prima facie return the power of Congress is exhausted. That was the idea which actuated the founders of the Constitution.

It will be remembered that at first it was proposed that the National Executive should be elected by the National Legislature, but, after discussion and deliberation, that power was withheld from the National Legislature and was reposed in the several States, as is seen in the emphatic provision that each State shall appoint its own electors. The change was well considered, and its design was to remove the executive department of the Government as far as possible from the danger of being the creature of the legislative department.

The idea was that the President must go into office without being under any obligation of any sort to the National Legislature, and the framers of the Constitution went so far as to provide even that a member of Congress should not be an elector—that to be a member of either House of Congress should be a disqualification. And even when they came to the case where, by failure of election by the States, they were called upon to provide ex necessitate that there should be some mode of electing a President, so jealous were the fathers of reposing this power in Congress that they divided it into two parts, giving to one House the power of electing the President and to the other the power of electing the Vice-President; thus providing that in no instance should the Houses of Congress be consentaneously and actively concerned in determining the question of who should be President and Vice-President of the United States.

The provision adopted was that one-half of Congress, acting independently, should choose one of those officers, and that the other half of Congress, also acting independently, should choose the other. That provision, I say, shows the jealousy with which this power was kept from Congress. Not only did the fathers provide that neither of the Houses of Congress should vote for both these officers, but they provided that when either House voted for one of them, its vote should be confined to individuals for whom the States had already voted. They were tied down to a choice between persons who had already been designated by the States.

Now, there are two other constitutional provisions, in relation to the electoral vote, granting powers to Congress. One is that Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors; the other is that Congress has the right to fix a day, which shall be the same all over the country, in which the electors shall cast their votes. I call the attention of the House to the difference in expression in these two cases. The provision is that Congress shall name the time of choosing the electors, and that it may also determine the day on which they shall cast their votes, which shall be the same throughout the country.

Members will doubtless recollect that under that provision, the early legislation as to the time provided that the States should choose the electors within thirty-four days of a certain date, fixing no day for the choice, but fixing the time within which the choice should be made, thus recognizing the power and the discretion of the States in that regard. The requirement that a day certain should be fixed for the casting of the vote is, by implication, the termination of the power of the State as to appointment of electors. If the vote must be cast on the same day throughout the United States, then it follows as a necessary consequence that unless the appointee, the elector, has been chosen by that day, he can not cast his vote, and the vote of the State is lost.

Just the same, Mr. Speaker, as in the election of any of us, if a man who is a voter does not go to the polls on election day and within the hours fixed by law and cast his vote, the vote is lost, and it makes no difference whether he was sick, or whether he was prevented from casting his vote by some necessity, or mischance, or design, or whether his vote might have changed the complexion of the election; his vote is lost if his right to vote is not exercised on the day designated.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I would submit, this being the exercise of a State power, that up to the day of election, the day when the electors are to cast their votes, the State power as to appointment can not be interfered with in any manner, shape, or form by the Congress of the United States, or by any other power. Up to that time the State stands fortified by the privilege granted in the Constitution. The fact that the day is to be designated by Congress, and is to be the same throughout the United States, of course limits the time when the appointing power can be exercised.

Now, if there is any fraud or any neglect of duty, if there is any hiatus, any unforeseen occurrence whereby the vote of a State is likely to be lost by reason of conflict, we contend that the State should have the full period up to the time of the casting of the electoral vote in order to repair that difficulty, to make that determination, to save her vote. As I have already shown, the State has complete control of the matter. It is a field into which Congress has no right to enter. That being the case, the State should have until that time to repair any disaster which may interfere with or interrupt the casting of her vote by the proper electors.

Now we come to the opening of the certificates as laid before the two Houses of Congress by the President of the Senate on the day when the electoral vote is declared. The President of the Senate is to open all the certificates. If it had been intended that the President of the Senate should count all the votes embraced in those certificates, how easy it would have been to have so framed the words of the Constitution. The language of the instrument is—

> The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates—

It does not go on to say, "and shall count the votes," but—

> And the votes shall then be counted.

It has been a question ever since that amendment was adopted, by whom the votes shall be counted; some (though very few) contending that the President of the Senate should count; others contending that the two Houses have the power to make the count; others contending that the House of Representatives has the power to make the count as to the Presidency, because it must elect the President, in the case of the failure of an election by the vote of the States, and that the Senate has, for an analogous reason, the same power with reference to the Vice-Presidency.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Constitution not having named by whom the count is to be made, it is competent for Congress, by statute or by joint agreement, joint resolution, or joint rule, to name individuals to exercise the duty of making the count. I submit that Congress has this power under its general legislative authority to pass all laws to carry into effect any of the functions of the Government; because at that stage the vote has come into the possession of the Federal Government from the State government; the State government has certified the result of the election under the seal of the State and sent it here. The vote is in the hands of the Federal Government, and Congress has authority to provide for the count.

But what is that count? Mr. Speaker, that count is simply an enumeration. It has been said that it must embrace two features; that you must have an ascertainment of what are votes before you can count them, and that, therefore, the count must embrace both ascertainment and enumeration. Upon this proposition has been built up an argument claiming for Congress judicial power to go back and decide questions on their merits as to transactions within the State by State officers.

Why, Mr. Speaker, of course there must be ascertainment in a certain sense before there can be counting; but it is the kind of ascertainment that the clerk of a court or a registering officer exercises when he reads the decree of the court, in order to record it. It is the kind of ascertainment which a sheriff exercises when he reads an execution in his hand, in order to find how many dollars he is to levy on the property of the judgment-debtor. That is the kind of ascertainment. It is not the exercise of a judicial function; and this power of ascertainment no more authorizes Congress, or its appointees, the tellers, to go behind the certification of the vote than the clerk of a court would be authorized to go behind the decree of the court, in order to correct it, or a sheriff to alter the figures of the amount which he is commanded to collect in his execution.

The count is a ministerial act, not a judicial act. We should be on our guard, therefore, Mr. Speaker, in any system of legislation, against usurpation, against an undue extension of the powers of Congress. The spirit of this act, its avowed policy, as expressed by its authors, is in accord mainly with the views I have advanced. In some few details it seems to a portion of the committee, some seven of us, that the line is not as well guarded and defended as it might be, and therefore we have submitted some amendments in that respect.

Not only should we hesitate to extend our powers in this regard beyond the proper limits because it is the spirit of the Constitution, but it is the spirit of the times. The members on this floor will remember that in the early history of this country it was the common practice for the nomination for the Presidency to be made by a Congressional caucus. It was the usual way, but, like the fathers, the people of the country, jealous of reposing any of that power in Congress, spontaneously adopted and put into operation a system of nomination by party convention removed from Congress, having delegates in the main not members of Congress, showing not only the jealousy which the fathers had of this power, but the jealousy which the people of the United States to-day show by their action every four years in national convention—the jealousy of establishing too much control over the election of the national Executive in the two Houses of Congress.

But it may be asked where is the judicial power to be lodged as to the determination of the right to this office. Who is to prevent grievous wrongs from being done to one party or the other of the people in the person of its candidate for the Presidency, if there be no places where hide-bound forms of credentials can be broken through?

To that, Mr. Speaker, I would simply reply that it is the opinion of eminent constitutional lawyers that Congress has the power to establish a judicial tribunal, or it can confer on an existing judicial tribunal jurisdiction, to try the right to the presidential office as well as to any other. But above all things, in relation to the presidency, certainty is a matter of prime concern, and the country can better endure wrong for four years—as this country once has done and survived it—than to place the power of appeal from the dictates of the States in a body like Congress, not authorized by the Constitution for that purpose, and not representatives of the States in that regard.

A few words as to the differences that exist in the House committee in relation to the amendments proposed. As I have before said, this bill comes from the Senate, and, in its general tenor and spirit, meets, I think, with the unanimous approval of the House committee. So far as I know there has been no dissenting opinion as to the main features of the bill and the advisability of its passage; but in one or two matters, we submit, the spirit of the bill is carried out and rendered more consistent by the adoption of the amendments submitted by the minority. There are only two points of difference.

In reference to the use of the single word "lawful," as stated by the chairman of the committee yesterday, the committee have agreed to adopt the views of the minority, considering the word to be unnecessary in the place where it is inserted, and so far as that amendment is concerned I will not consume the time of the House. The first difference between the majority and minority of the committee is that by the bill as proposed by the committee certain limitations of time are put upon the States in the exercise of the appointing power of the electors, and in regard to the determination by the States of any dispute as to who are chosen electors. In accord with the principles I have mentioned, seven of the committee are of the opinion that, so far as casting the vote is concerned, the State has all the constitutional power conferred, and that Congress can not prescribe that a State shall make its determination within a limited time prior to the day of casting the vote.

When the Constitution of the United States says that the day on which the electoral votes shall be cast shall be the same throughout the United States, the Constitution thereby imposes a limitation upon the appointing power of the States. The appointment must be made, all determinations concerning it must be made, all disputes concerning it must be settled, prior to that day; but Congress has no power, as is attempted here, to put a statute of limitation other than the limitation imposed by the Constitution on the appointing power of the State, by enacting that the determination of such question must be made six days, or at any other period, before the vote is cast. That is our point of difference; and its amendment is accomplished by the striking out of some six or eight words without destroying the phraseology or frame of the bill as proposed.

The other point on which the minority submit a difference of views from the rest of their brethren of the committee is this: That where there are two sets of papers from the same State, coming up before the two Houses of Congress and opened by the President of the Senate, both of which sets of papers purport to be returns of such State, that in such case that return and that only shall be received which has been certified by the executive of the State under the seal of the State and in accordance with its laws. That is the position of the minority. The majority of the committee go farther and give to the two Houses of Congress the power to over-ride that certificate; and from that conclusion of the committee, six of its members have dissented.

We hold that the act of the Congress assembled for the electoral count is to recognize credentials, and that when these credentials have been recognized by the two Houses as the lawful certificates sent, officially certified by the governor under the seal of the State, the returns so certified shall be counted, and that there is no proviso or "unless" about it, as the majority of the committee have it—"unless the two Houses decide not to count," thus giving the two Houses the right to override that State's action and deprive it of its vote, although the credential is in due form, signed by the executive of the State and under the seal of the State. We say that to be consistent, Mr. Speaker, that return, in the case of two, is the one to be counted and none other, and that it shall be counted, and that the two Houses shall not interfere or interpose to prohibit its count.

It may be said, suppose there are two persons claiming to be the Executive; suppose there is a dual government, that there are two persons claiming to hold the office of governor, two persons claiming to hold the State seal, two impressions of the seal which are fac-similes and two returns which come up purporting to be the returns from the State: What is to be done in that case?

That, Mr. Speaker, is a case I do not find provided for in this bill. I go further and say that there is no way of providing absolutely for such a case, unless you could get, instead of two bodies acting separately to decide the question, one umpire or arbiter; because, under the power which Congress undoubtedly possesses, and which I have conceded throughout the whole of my remarks—the power of the recognition of credentials—it might happen that the Senate would recognize one set of credentials and the House the other set of credentials; and then, of course, that vote would have to be thrown out, because there is no arbiter to decide which are the proper credentials. That case, I say, is not provided for here, either by the majority of the committee in the bill, or in the amendments proposed, or by the minority report; and I submit that it is impossible to provide for it unless you have, as I say, a single power, a unit, to decide. You can not determine the question by having two bodies to decide it, because they may take opposite positions.

Mr. Speaker, I have not dwelt upon the features of this bill, because I suppose they are familiar to the members of the House. I have dwelt upon the principles which seem to underlie the bill, and submit that in the amendments offered by the minority these principles are consistently preserved, and the bill made complete and symmetrical in all its parts.

I will ask to reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCREARY in the chair). The gentleman from South Carolina has twelve minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to occupy the time or to delay the action of this House by any general discussion of this bill. I agree with all the committee that the condition of affairs, the defects in the present law, the perils through which we have passed by reason of these defects, and the possible recurrence of such perils, require that the legislative department of the Government shall make such provisions as shall obviate such dangers, correct these defects, and protect us from such perils in future. I therefore agree that a bill should be passed of the general character and containing the general features proposed by the pending bill.

I have agreed with the majority of the committee in the amendments which they propose for the purpose of protecting and guaranteeing the States and the nation from any peril by the invasion of their rights by the Senate and the House of Representatives in the counting of the electoral vote.

But I can not agree with the amendments proposed by the minority, and I desire simply to give a few reasons why, believing as I do that the amendments proposed by the majority go to the utmost verge of wisdom, prudence, and safety in the direction which I have indicated; they can not go further in that line as requested by the minority of the committee.

Objection is made by the minority to the provision that the differences, the claims between the contending electors of the respective States, should be settled within the State where such contest is made by laws enacted prior to the day when that contest is to be decided. They object first to the phrase "enacted prior to the day." It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, manifest that these contests, these disputes between rival electors, between persons claiming to have been appointed electors, should be settled under a law made prior to the day when such contests are to be decided.

In my judgment it would be wise if it could be provided that these contests should be decided under and by virtue of laws made prior to the exigency under which they arose, made prior to the existence of the particular contest to be decided. That it would be unwise to permit a legislature to assemble and permit the dominant party, in view of the very existing affairs, in view of the peculiar phases of the contest which is being made, to enact laws governing and deciding that contest—possibly with a view of having it decided in accordance with their wishes rather than with the expressed wish of the people or with justice and the right. I think that it would be wise if the contest should be made in the face of existing law rather than that the law should be made in the face of the existing contest. Therefore, I would prefer that the interval should be further extended rather than that it should be absolutely destroyed as the minority proposes. I do not believe that a legislature should be permitted to meet concurrently with the contesting electors and provide a method of deciding the contest at the time the contest is proceeding. To what anarchy, to what confusion, to what riot, if you please, Mr. Speaker, might such a course of procedure lead!

It seems to me manifest that this law, under which this question is to be solved as to which of two sets of claiming electors are to be recognized, ought to be an enactment existing prior to the day they are to assemble; and if prior, then certainly it should be enacted for a reasonable time prior. And who will say that six days is not a reasonable time? Who can say that the limit of a week is too long an interval in which those who are to decide these disputes are to study the law, examine its provisions, and ascertain its effect upon the pending contest? How could any court, how could any tribunal intelligently solve the claims of parties under a law which is made concurrent, to the very moment perhaps, with the trouble which they are to settle under the law?

Therefore I do not agree with the minority of the committee, that this bill should be so amended as to strike out the provision that the law should exist prior to the time of meeting. And if we have a right to say it shall be an existing law when they meet, we have a right to say how long it shall be existing. If we have a right to say it shall be six hours or six minutes prior, we have a right to say it shall have been enacted six days prior.

Again, and especially, it is insisted here by the minority that the office, the power and duty of the Senate and House of Representatives is merely and purely clerical; that they have no power, no discretion, no right here to adjudicate upon anything whatever. I do not and can not so understand the provisions of the Constitution concerning the counting of the electoral vote by the Senate and House. Are we to suppose that our wise and unostentatious fathers, who made the Constitution, and who above all men despised pomp and circumstance, provided for mere show that the Senate, the concentrated wisdom, learning, and statesmanship of the legislative department of the great Republic, is to vacate its seats, each single Senator rising in his place, donning the Senatorial toga, and forming an imposing procession with the second officer of the Republic at their head, leave the Senate Chamber silent, empty, and deserted as a newly made sepulcher, march over here with measured step while we, the representatives of the people, receive them standing with uncovered heads—they to sit at the right hand of the presiding Vice-President while we crowd to the left, and finally all to remain sitting, and only sitting, in owl-like, solemn, lifeless silence, until a couple of gentlemen solve a small sum in addition which any average ten-year old school boy could perform just as correctly and just as satisfactorily inside of thirty minutes any day of the week, and then all rise up and the Senators return in the same mournful, solemn, and imposing manner in which they came? Sir, the foolish formality, the solemn silliness of such a proceeding, it does seem to me, could have no other office and produce no other effect than to excite the merriment of the street Arabs who would congregate in the corridors and the galleries to witness the performance.

And in case there should be objection made to any return, under the very provisions of this bill which this minority propose the grave and reverend Senators must rise, fold their garments around them, shake off temporarily the polluting dust of this Chamber, and depart—go over to their Senate Chamber, and the objections are there to be stated; the Senators then, being utterly helpless to decide any objections, return here and sit down again. Thus the ceremony proceeds. I undertake to say, sir, that it is absurd to suppose that our fathers contemplated any such dumb show. They meant that this solemn transaction should mean something.

They meant that this assembling of the two Houses, which has the effect of stopping the wheels of legislation, of suspending all other action upon the part of the legislative department of the Republic—the Senators and the Representatives being gathered together for this special purpose, the Vice-President presiding over the joint assembly, while the eyes of the nation are directed to it, awaiting the decision—our fathers intended, I say, that this solemn proceeding should mean something more than a gathering of the two Houses simply to sit by and ascertain that, 185 being subtracted from 210, there would be a certain 25 remainder.

What are we required to do in such a case? Why did the Constitution thus require that all legislative proceedings should be suspended? Why did it require this solemn formality, with all this solemn circumstance and pomp? Why, unless they did understand that the joint legislative tribunals of the Republic, the four hundred men representing the States, and the people of the States, had a duty imposed upon them, the discharge of which would be of some value and some significance. What is that duty? It is not, I grant you, to reject the vote of a State, and nobody claims that the Senate and the House have the right to say that the vote of any State shall be rejected. But they have a right, and, as I understand the matter, it is their duty, to ascertain whether a State has voted or not, and ascertain whether the vote that has been deposited under the forms of law, with the proper officer, is in fact the lawful vote of a State.

It is, as has been already said, a question of identity, and these two assembled bodies, the Senate and the House of Representatives, have the right, and have the duty imposed upon them, to see to it that the votes counted are in fact the votes of the States. Sir, if there be no power in these concurrently acting bodies to decide such questions, then, as has been admitted by the distinguished gentleman who has just presented the views of the minority, those questions, if they arise, as they may, will necessarily go unadjudicated, and we shall be remitted to chaos, and to what always follows chaos in such cases, the arbitrament of the sword.

Sir, it is within the recollection of living men, members of this House, that upon at least two occasions there have been in each of two States of the Republic two acting-governors, each claiming to be duly elected by the people, each surrounding and environing himself with all the paraphernalia of gubernatorial authority, each having in his possession and using the great seal of the State, each sending out proclamations, and, in the case of the electoral count, each would no doubt have been found sending down to this Capitol, under the great seal of the State, and under his signature as governor, a certificate that certain men had been legally chosen and qualified as electors of the State.

What are we to do in such a case? My friend says that we can do nothing. I answer that, under the provisions of this bill, as it is proposed to be amended by the majority of the committee, the House may inquire into the authenticity of the certificates, and may say, if they can, which one of the certificates sent here is true and correct; and if they can not do that, may reject them both, and settle the question in that way.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will my friend from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] permit a question?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. DIBBLE. Does not the majority report provide that the two Houses can not decide that question unless they both agree, and agree to throw out?

Mr. COOPER. Exactly so. That is one of the chief provisions against an invasion of the rights of the States.

Mr. DIBBLE. They are to agree to throw out, and nothing else.

Mr. COOPER. Yes; the majority of the committee in their recommendations go, I say, to the utmost verge of safety in providing against any possible invasion of the right of a State, for they agree that, where there is but one certificate from a State, no matter whether every single member of each House considering it may believe, or may know, that not one of the men named in that certificate has been duly elected, yet they shall have no right to throw it out, but it must be counted. Therefore, I think that this bill does not go far enough. There are contingencies for which it does not provide. It does not provide, for instance, for the case in which a State certifies that a member of Congress, or an alien, or a foreigner, or some other disqualified person, has been chosen as an elector. The only objection I have to the bill, therefore, is in a very different line from that of my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] who thinks it goes too far in giving power to the Senate and House.

But this bill does provide that where there purport to come from a State more returns than one, where there are conflicting returns, as there might be in the case I have suggested—where two sets of returns come here both regular upon their face, both (as might happen in the contingency to which I have referred) duly certified by the governor of the State, we may examine into them; but if the House and the Senate can not ascertain which are the votes of the lawfully chosen electors, in that contingency, under the provisions of the bill, and in that contingency only, both returns may be rejected, "if the two Houses acting separately shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State."

Mr. DIBBLE. Will my friend point out any provision of the bill providing any mode of determining the question where there are two returns from dual State governments, and when one House favors the regularity of one government while the other House favors the validity of the other government?

Mr. COOPER. I have already stated that there is no provision for a case of that kind. And no return which appears upon its face to be lawful can be rejected, except by the concurrent action of both the Senate and the House, such action being taken separately. The only possible contingency in which, under the bill, any return can be rejected is when the House and the Senate, acting separately, both agree that the return does not represent the lawful votes of the legally qualified electors of the State. As I said, I might complain, and I do in fact feel that this bill does not go far enough in that line; but I certainly search in vain for reasons for complaint that it has gone too far.

Mr. DIBBLE. My friend will permit me to say that I read the majority report to be this: The return lawfully certified by the legal executive, in accordance with the laws of the State, shall be counted unless the two Houses throw it out. Now, the minority of the committee maintain that if a return is the lawful return it should be counted, and that nobody should be authorized to throw it out.

Mr. COOPER. There is no doubt about the language of the bill, and no occasion for any dispute as to what its provisions mean. The bill speaks for itself, and says that—

> Those votes, and those only, shall be counted which were cast by electors whose appointment shall have been duly certified under the seal of the State, by the executive thereof, in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide——

Decide what? Not that the votes shall be thrown out, not that there has been some informality, not that the return is irregular; far more than this is required to authorize even the Senate and the House, acting separately, to concurrently reject a vote. Nobody undertakes to reject the lawful vote of any State, but the bill provides that these returns shall be counted——

> Unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State.

Who will say that when there are conflicting returns, a return should be received when the Senate and the House, separately acting, shall concurrently agree that that return does not represent votes lawfully cast by the legally-appointed electors of the State? And this is what the gentleman from South Carolina is making such a fuss about, as I understand. On this point there seems to be a squeamish sentimentality of very unhealthy growth.

Mr. DIBBLE. My friend will permit me to say that the "fuss" I am making is just this: that the two Houses——

Mr. COOPER. I beg my friend's pardon. He and I together will make a speech which will read very incongruously, I fear.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will not interrupt the gentleman further.

Mr. COOPER. I am not complaining.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the majority of the committee I insist that the provisions of this bill are wise. I beg the House to remember that it is only in the case of two returns that any return can be rejected. I desire to repeat that, although the two Houses, acting separately, should concurrently agree that a return was not the return of the votes legally cast by the lawfully-appointed electors of the State, still there would be no right to ignore that return and those votes if there were no conflicting return from the State. In other words, if the authorities of the State have not themselves challenged the correctness of a return, we are not to do it. But where the authorities of a State come here and themselves challenge the correctness of a return which is presented to us, and invoke us to inquire into its legality; and where the two Houses, in response to that invitation on the part of the State, shall, acting separately, reach a concurrent agreement that a particular return does not embrace the votes legally cast by lawfully-appointed electors, the two Houses of Congress ought to have the right to say that such a return shall not be used to elect the Chief Magistrate of this Republic.

And what dire consequences are likely to follow from such a proceeding? I need not remind the House that the adjudication, the determination under this provision that a certain return should not be counted, could not elect anybody President of the Republic. Any person chosen President must have the votes of a majority of the whole electoral college, not merely a majority of the votes which are counted; and the decision and declaration of the Senate and the House that a particular State has made no return does not enable any one to claim to be elected thereby. The result of the election could only be affected in case one candidate had, with the votes embraced in the controverted return, a majority of the electoral college, and would not have a majority without those votes. In that case, the election of President would be remitted to the determination of the House of Representatives—only that, and nothing more.

Who will complain of that? Certainly a State which places itself in this position, which has failed to observe the forms of law, failed to preserve peace and order within its own boundaries, which has a conflict in its own territory, dual governments presenting conflicting and irreconcilable claims—a State which permits itself to be in that position, and comes with that sort of representation, could not complain if the Senate and the House should say to it: "You should adjudicate the rights of these tribunals within your own boundaries and not send them here and require us to investigate and decide them."

Therefore, it seems to me if there be errors in this bill, if there be defects in it, it is not in the line of going too far in the way of infringing on any supposed rights of any of the States. We certainly have the right, and it is our duty, to say to-day that when votes are counted they should be lawful votes, coming from lawfully constituted authorities, and in the way in which the State has provided.

Sir, I do not desire, as I have said, to go into the general discussion of the merits of this bill, but simply to note objections to the bill as it passed the Senate, and as it is proposed to be modified by amendments of the majority of the committee, and having done so, I desire to reserve the residue of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair). The gentleman has thirty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. EDEN. With the concurrence of the majority of the committee I desire to offer an amendment, which is as follows: After the word "States" in line 32, section 4, insert "which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been certified to according to section 3 of this act." Should that amendment be adopted, the word "lawful," which the committee propose to insert in line 38, of course will not be adopted.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to engage in any elaborate discussion of the bill before the House; I am not prepared to do so; but I regard the measure as a very important one and as one which ought to be passed. I think, however, the amendments proposed by the committee should also be adopted. I will confine myself to the consideration of the points embraced in the bill and the amendments reported by the committee, so that it will be seen what the law will be if adopted with those amendments.

The bill as it passed the Senate, in the second section provides that if any State shall have established, by laws passed prior to the day fixed for the appointment of electors, a tribunal for the determination of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods of procedure, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination shall be conclusive, &c.

The third section makes it the duty of the executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of electors, by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws providing for such ascertainment, to send a certificate thereof, under the seal of the State, to the Secretary of State of the United States, and to deliver a like certificate to the electors of such State on or before the day they are required under the law to meet; and the electors are to inclose and transmit this certificate at the same time and in the same manner as is provided by law for transmitting by such electors to the seat of Government the lists of all persons voted for as President and of all persons voted for as Vice-President.

The important points in the bill as passed by the Senate are in the fourth section, which provides that objections shall be called for upon the reading of any certificate, and when objections are made the two Houses shall separate and the objections shall be submitted to each House separately for its decision; but no electoral vote or votes from any State from which but one return has been received shall be rejected except by the affirmative vote of both Houses. Where more than one return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 2 of this act to have been appointed, if the determination of said section shall have been made; but in case there shall arise the question of which one of two or more of such State authorities determining what electors have been appointed, as mentioned in section 2 of this act, is the lawful tribunal of such State, the votes regularly given by those electors only of such State shall be counted whose title as electors the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so authorized by its laws; and in such case of more than one return from a State, if there shall have been no such determination of the question aforesaid, then those votes only shall be counted which the two Houses, acting separately, shall decide to be the lawful votes of the State.

The object of the bill of the Senate is to fix certain rules by which the two Houses shall be governed in counting the electoral vote.

In case of but one return from a State the Senate bill allows the vote to be rejected by the affirmative vote of both Houses.

When there is more than one return from a State and a tribunal of the State, according to section 2 of the bill, has determined who are the lawfully appointed electors of the State, the votes of such electors are to be counted without question.

If a question arises as to which of two or more of such State authorities, acting under section 2 of the bill, is the lawful tribunal of the State, then the vote of such electors only shall be counted as the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide is supported by the decision of such State so acting under its laws.

In case of more than one return from a State, if no determination has been made by a tribunal thereof as to which is the lawful return, then those votes only shall be counted which the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of the State.

It will thus be seen that under the Senate bill there are three contingencies in which the two Houses in counting the electoral vote may refuse to count the vote of the State.

The House committee has undertaken to remedy this defect by a limitation of the power of the two Houses to reject the vote of a State. We propose to amend the bill so that where there is but one return, or paper purporting to be a return, from a State, and the vote was regularly given, and the credentials of the electors are in due form and in accordance with the laws of the State, and properly certified by the executive authority thereof, the vote shall be counted.

We propose a further amendment, that where there are two or more returns from a State, and no tribunal thereof has determined who are the legally appointed electors from the State, the votes regularly given by electors, whose appointment shall have been duly certified under the seal of the State by the executive thereof, in accordance with the laws of the State, shall be counted, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State. If the amendments proposed by the House committee be agreed to, there will be but one contingency in which the vote of a State may be rejected. That contingency is the presentation of double returns from a State by opposing State authorities, disagreeing in the determination as to which set of electors are the legally appointed electors of the State. In that case no electoral vote of the State will be counted unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide that one of the opposing sets of electors are the duly appointed electors of the State.

In case of more than one return from a State, where no State tribunal has determined the question as to which is the true and lawful return, the vote of those electors regularly given who bear the official certificate of the governor under the seal of the State, showing that they were duly appointed in pursuance of the laws of the State, under our amendment are to be counted unless rejected by the concurrent vote of both Houses, acting separately. I am of opinion that with the adoption of the proposed amendments the Senate bill may be safely passed, and that no question will remain to be determined relative to the count of the electoral vote, when the two Houses meet for that purpose, that can not be rightfully determined in accordance with the terms of this bill. Under the bill as thus amended the States are left not only to appoint the electors, but to determine all disputes relative to their appointment.

If no dispute arises relative to the appointment, and no contesting electors appear to demand a hearing, the bill as amended, should it become a law, absolutely requires the electoral vote of the State to be counted. If a dispute or contest has arisen relative to the appointment of electors, and the proper State authorities have determined who are the lawfully appointed electors, the bill as amended says the vote shall be counted. If more than one return of electoral votes is made from a State, and no determination has been made under its laws who, of the opposing forces, were lawfully appointed electors of the State, the bill as amended requires that the vote of those electors regularly given, who hold the certificate of the governor under the seal of the State, showing that they were appointed according to the laws of the State, shall be counted, unless rejected by the concurrent vote of the two Houses, acting separately.

In the one instance only, where a question arises as to which of two or more State authorities, acting under the second section of the bill, and having made conflicting decisions as to lawfully appointed electors from the State, is the concurrent action of both Houses required to decide as to the legally appointed electors from a State. In case no decision can be reached, of course the vote of the State will be lost; but that is an extreme case, and one not likely to arise exceptin revolutionary times.

The necessity of the proposed legislation is manifest. Heretofore, when the period for counting the electoral vote has arrived, merely temporary expedients have been adopted to meet the particular emergency. In several instances grave questions have arisen that had to be decided upon the spur of the moment and amid the excitement of party contests. That all these have been adjusted peaceably is no reason for leaving the law unsettled and thus inviting future contests over questions arising upon each occasion when the duty of counting the electoral vote devolves on the two Houses of Congress.

In providing by law a method to insure a fair count of the electoral vote we need exercise no doubtful powers. The Constitution requires the vote to be counted. I assume that Congress has the authority under the Constitution to pass all laws necessary to carry into effect that mandate of the Constitution. I am of opinion that this bill, when amended as we propose, does not go beyond that necessity. Nor do I conceive that the two Houses of Congress, when met for the purpose of counting the vote in pursuance of this bill, will be likely to do violence to the will of the people as expressed under the laws of the several States in the appointment of electors of President and Vice-President.

The minority of the committee have made some criticism on that part of the bill which provides that if a State tribunal authorized by law shall have determined contests relative to the appointment of electors, at least six days before the time of their meeting, that in making the count Congress shall be governed by that determination. The minority of the committee assume this to be an attempt upon the part of Congress to dictate to the States the mode of appointing electors. I respectfully submit that this criticism is not just. The States are entirely free under the Constitution to adopt the mode of appointment of electors that the legislatures thereof may prescribe. This bill only provides that if the States shall have settled all controversies relative to the appointment of electors, within a given time before the meeting of the electors and by a tribunal of its own selection, the votes of the electors thus appointed and regularly given shall be counted.

If any State neglects to use the means within its power to identify who are its legally appointed electors, the two Houses of Congress, when in joint meeting to count the electoral vote, are to resort to other provisions of the bill to determine who are the legally appointed electors of the State. The bill contemplates no exclusion of electoral votes from the count because of the failure of a State to settle disputes as to the lawful vote of the State. While I do not mean to say that this bill, with our proposed amendments thereto, is perfect, I do believe it is a very great improvement upon the law as it now stands upon the subject of counting the electoral vote. Every question that can be properly settled prior to the meeting of the two Houses to make the count is settled by this bill, leaving the Senate and the House to pass upon objections that may be made pending the count under the provisions of the bill. It seems to me that the passage of this bill will insure a fair and orderly count of the electoral vote, and relieve the country of the anxiety heretofore felt when disputes over double returns were left to be decided by the two Houses without any settled rules to govern them.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has forty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] agreed, as I understood, to speak before me. If he is ready I will yield to him.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] has retired from the Hall, and will not be here again this afternoon.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] is absent I will now, Mr. Speaker, if permitted, take the floor in my own right, although I do not expect to occupy an entire hour. The question involved in the bill before us is of such importance that it is hardly possible for any one who undertakes its discussion to refrain from going over the whole subject of the electoral count. I shall not pursue that course. I think the demand for some legislation on this subject is so strong that if any bill reasonably good is presented we ought to adopt it without captious criticism; and when a bill has come from the Senate, and certain definite amendments are proposed by the House, I, for one, propose to confine myself to the discussion of those points in which there is a difference between the Senate and the committee of the House, and those points in which the committee of the House is itself divided.

There was an amendment proposed by the committee, which, I understand, is practically abandoned, for the insertion of the word "lawful" before the word "returns" in one of the paragraphs of this bill. Am I correct, I ask my colleague.

Mr. EDEN. So I understand.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Then I shall not consume any time in speaking of that amendment.

The principal amendment proposed by the House committee is in striking out the words "except by the concurrent vote of both Houses." This will be found on page 5 of the printed bill, in section 4, in lines 38 and 39. The case provided for by that part of the section is expressed in these words:

> And no electoral vote or votes from any State from which but one lawful return has been received shall be rejected, except by the affirmative votes of both Houses.

That was the bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. CALDWELL. With the exception of the word "lawful."

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. With the exception of the word "lawful," which, as I have said, I understand has been abandoned.

The House, by striking out the words "except by the affirmative votes of both Houses," makes the presumption in favor of a single return a conclusive presumption, and the main object of my addressing the House at this time is to indicate my opinion that, whether that is wise or not, it is not a valid exercise of the constitutional power of this House.

Mr. EDEN. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him a moment to call his attention to the fact that the amendment which I have sent up and had read, and which I shall offer at the proper time, is intended to take the place of that word "lawful," and probably it may remedy the objection my colleague has to that part of the bill?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have observed as nearly as I could the reading of the amendment of my colleague, and may have occasion to consider it in the course of my remarks hereafter.

My theory is that the Constitution in declaring that the President of the Senate shall open the certificates in the presence of the two Houses, and the votes shallthen be counted, must of necessity mean one of two things: it must mean either that the President of the Senate himself does the counting, or else it must mean that the counting is done by the two Houses of Congress.

Whatever may have been the idea of the framers of the Constitution—in fact, however difficult it may have been to them to conceive of the questions that have arisen at a later day—the discussions which took place in Congress and out of Congress from within ten years of the adoption of the Constitution to the present time have, in my judgment, rendered untenable now the theory that the President of the Senate shall count the votes; and therefore my theory is that the two Houses of Congress, acting each in its own individual capacity, each voting by itself, have absolute control of the entire subject.

Whenever the two Houses of Congress agree that a certain alleged return is the legal vote of a State, their determination that that alleged return is the legal return is the counting of the vote of that State within the meaning of the Constitution; and whenever the two Houses of Congress agree that a certain alleged return does not represent the legal vote of the State, their concurrent determination that that alleged return is not the legal vote of the State is equivalent to a refusal to count the vote of that State within the meaning of the Constitution; hence, my judgment is that the entire scope of our power to legislate on this matter must be confined to the third contingency, namely, the case in which the two Houses of Congress neither concurrently vote "yea" upon the proposition nor concurrently vote "nay" upon it, but differ in opinion, and one decides one way and the other the other. The power of Congress to intervene in such a case arises, in my judgment, out of the necessity of the case, and the exercise of our legislative power to meet the contingency must be considered now to be in accordance with the meaning of the Constitution.

There are several causes, Mr. Speaker, why it must be determined that an alleged vote of a State is not the real vote of the State.

In the first place the persons claiming to be electors may not have been voted for by the people of their State according to the provisions of the Constitution and the laws enacted by the State.

In the second place the persons assuming to have been elected as electors may have been ineligible to that office.

In the third place, admitting that they were eligible and were duly elected, yet when they met to cast the electoral votes it may be that they did not cast them in accordance with the Constitution and the laws; and fourthly, if in all their acts they complied with the Constitution and the law, and they are eligible to act as electors, and have been duly voted for as such at the polls, yet the persons for whom they vote may not have been eligible to the office to which they assumed to elect them; and, in my judgment, notwithstanding the changes that have come over the character of Presidential elections in this country, these objections to the validity of an alleged electoral vote stand in full force to-day, and will so stand until the Constitution has been amended.

I am aware that some of these cases of invalidity are not so important in our minds as they were in the minds of the framers of the Constitution. To us it may make little difference whether a person chosen as an elector is a Senator or Representative or person holding an office of profit and trust under the Government. To us it may appear to make little difference whether the electors vote by ballot as the law requires or not; or whether they cast their votes upon the day appointed by law or not.

To us, accustomed to the choice of a presidential candidate by the convention of a political party, it may appear of less importance than it appeared to our fathers that the President elected should be a native-born citizen, or over thirty-five years of age. Yet all these provisions are still the provisions of the Constitution, and in my judgment it is not our duty to disregard them; it is our duty to observe them until in the wisdom of Congress and of the people it shall have been determined that the Constitution shall be changed.

The reason why I refer to these different causes of invalidity is that, if the amendment proposed by the House committee is adopted, the only means which we have or can have for enforcing these provisions of the Constitution will have been done away forever. I know that when the two Houses of Congress meet here to count the electoral vote, the main question present to their minds and present to the minds of the people is the question which Presidential candidate the people appear to have preferred. And yet, so long as these provisions regarding the eligibility of electors, regarding the eligibility of a Presidential candidate, regarding the form and manner in which the electoral vote shall be cast, remain as portions of the Constitution, it is not only our bounden duty to observe and abide by them, but it is also the bounden duty of those two Houses of Congress, who have a duty imposed on them which is not imposed on us in passing upon this bill, the duty, namely, of sitting here in joint convention and deciding upon the electoral vote submitted to them by the President of the Senate.

But, Mr. Speaker, the main objection I have to the amendment proposed by the House committee, namely, the proposed striking out of the words "except by the affirmative vote of the two Houses," the effect of which would be that a single return would have a conclusive presumption of validity in its favor—the main objection which I have to that provision is that I believe it possesses no legal and constitutional validity whatever. However wise it may seem to us, in attempting to legislate on this subject, that a single return shall be conclusively presumed to be valid, the real question will arise when the two Houses meet here to pass upon the electoral votes in the next Presidential election; and those Houses, in my judgment, when they meet here to discharge a duty which is expressly imposed upon them by the Constitution, will not be bound by the action of the Senate and House of the Forty-ninth Congress and the President, when he signs this bill, if it shall pass. It is their duty, conferred on them by the Constitution, to count the votes. If for any reason whatever a single return shall appear to both Houses of Congress to be an invalid return they have the right so to determine; and if they do so determine, that vote will not be counted, however many statutes we may pass like this.

It has often been asked what the operation of counting the electoral vote consists in. The President of the Senate sits in that chair and opens certain papers. The members of the Houses know not what they are. He submits them to the Houses as papers purporting to be electoral votes. That they purport to be electoral votes does not prove that they are such. That he opens and submits them to the two Houses does not constitute a counting of the votes. The action of the tellers at the desk in regard to the papers placed in their hands does not, I think, constitute the counting of the electoral votes.

The tellers are but the eyes, the ears, and the hands of the Houses, their mere ministerial agents, and the votes are not counted until the two Houses of Congress have in some way acted upon them. It will be observed that provision is made in this very bill for an objection even in the case under consideration; provision is made for an objection even in the case of a single return; and under the provisions of this bill any member of this House and one Senator have the right to make a written objection, and if they do make that written objection, then, by the terms of this bill, the Houses must separate and must vote upon that question one way or the other.

When the tellers go on counting the electoral vote, and nothing is said, it is the concurrent acquiescence of the two Houses. The concurrent acquiescence of the two Houses amounts just as much to a counting of the electoral votes as though their assent were expressed in votes cast in separate chambers of this Capitol. But under this bill if any objection is made, then by the very terms of the bill the Houses separate and the vote is had upon that question one way or the other; and until some vote has been had on that subject by the two Houses of Congress the votes have not been counted and can not be within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. EDEN. I understand my colleague to make a point upon that part of the amendment that is proposed, that notwithstanding, if it is a lawful return, it being but one it is to be counted; yet the bill provides for objections. I suppose it would be proper that objections should be made to see whether it was a proper return or not. The fact that the bill provides for objections does not reach that point.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Very well; that gives me occasion to say, Mr. Speaker, that my argument is not based at all upon the wording of this bill, because I believe that, in the absence of legislation, or in the presence of legislation, the two Houses of Congress are the only bodies which can count, and a legislative body can not count, or do anything else, except by assenting to some proposition by a vote. Therefore I say that, whether this law is in existence or not, under the meaning of the Constitution and the necessity of the case, under the provision that the vote shall be counted by the two Houses, as we now understand it in these later days, under the provision that the vote shall be counted by the two Houses of Congress, there would be always the right of any member of this legislative body, if it happened to be sitting to count the votes, to raise the question and bring it to a vote; and a similar right would, as I opine, exist in the Senate which in such case sits with the House.

I can not conceive that any statute can take away from either of these two legislative bodies the power to come to a vote of yes or no on any question relating to the business they then have in hand under the provisions of the Constitution. And, if the Constitution has conferred upon the two Houses the right to count the electoral vote, and if, as I believe, the count of an electoral vote by a legislative body consists only in an assent by that body to the proposition that such and such a paper does in fact represent the legal vote of a State—if that is true (and to my mind there can be no question about it), then, under the Constitution and this law, or under the Constitution without this law, the question could always be raised, either in the House or in the Senate, whether a particular return purporting to be the legal vote of a State was in fact that vote or not. Hence I say that a provision of law like this, which seeks simply to take away from the two Houses the right to express an opinion upon that question, is of utter invalidity. The two Houses of Congress, meeting under the Constitution to discharge the solemn duty of counting the vote, may utterly disregard any such statutory provision.

Mr. EDEN. Does my colleague take the position that Congress can pass no law providing rules by which the vote shall be counted?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I will come to that immediately. I do not desire to detain the House further than to merely indicate my general ideas upon this subject, and therefore I pass now to the question suggested by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. EDEN]. The question is as to the scope of the legislative power of Congress.

Soon after the Constitution was adopted attempts were made to provide mode of counting the electoral vote. As early as 1800 an attempt was made to regulate the matter by statute.

A bill passed the Senate providing for a procedure somewhat analogous to that which is now prevailing. When that bill came into the House, Mr. Gallatin moved to amend it so as to provide that the decision should be made by the votes of a majority of the members of both Houses, voting as one body.

That proposition nearly carried. It was defeated, I think, by so close a vote as 46 against, to 44 in favor of it. From that time to this that theory has been practically abandoned—at least down to the Forty-eighth Congress, when, as gentlemen will remember, Mr. Eaton, of Connecticut, proposed and secured the passage by this House of a similar provision.

But, I say, the idea that the two Houses should sit as one body has been practically abandoned ever since the failure of Mr. Gallatin's attempt. Therefore, from that time to this, the work of counting the votes has been done by a joint session of two independent bodies each acting freely, both acting concurrently in order to act effectively, each able to vote yea or nay; and, therefore, the counting of the electoral vote by the two Houses in that way, in the sense of a joint or a concurrent vote by the Houses that a certain paper purporting to be a return should be regarded as a return, was only possible when both Houses happened to agree. If they both voted yea, the vote was counted. If they both voted nay, the vote was rejected, and the only contingency left was the contingency in which one House voted yea and the other nay.

Now, my theory, I will say to my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. EDEN], is this: that the moment you abandon the doctrine that the two Houses sit as one body and vote per capita—the moment you accept the theory that action must be had by the two bodies acting concurrently—from that moment it must be assumed to have been the meaning of the Constitution that legislation upon this subject would be valid only in so far as it was necessary to meet the contingency of a divided vote of the two Houses. I can not conceive how a statute can enact any rule that will make an alleged return a real return if both Houses say that it is not.

I can not resist the conclusion that, under the meaning of the Constitution, if both Houses concurrently say that an alleged return is not a real return, that vote is not counted and can not be counted; and I can not resist the conclusion that, under the same Constitution, if the two Houses, acting concurrently, say that a certain alleged return is a legal return, their saying so amounts to the counting of that vote, and no statute can avail against it. Therefore I say to my colleague that in my judgment, although Congress may pass laws to govern the count of the electoral vote, Congress can not pass a law which can nullify the concurrent action of the two Houses of Congress upon whom has been cast by the Constitution of the United States the duty of acting concurrently in that matter. That, at all events, is the only theory which is satisfactory to my mind.

When I listened to my colleague while he enumerated the various contingencies which were to be met by this bill, as a single return and a double return, a single State tribunal and a double State tribunal, it occurred to me that he might simplify the matter by reducing the possible contingencies to two, namely, the contingency in which the two Houses of Congress concurrently vote yea or nay, and that other, the sole remaining contingency, in which the two Houses are unable to agree. This contingency in which the two Houses are unable to agree covers the entire scope of our legislative power, so far as we assume by legislation to control the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress to meet for the purpose of counting the electoral vote.

I will now remind the House that this question has been discussed since 1800. It has been discussed repeatedly. Repeatedly attempts have been made to legislate; repeatedly have joint rules been enacted by the two Houses; and the scope of all this legislation, the purpose of every such joint rule, has been to meet the contingency to which I have alluded, that is, the contingency in which the two Houses, bound by the necessity of the case to act concurrently or not to act at all, have been unable to agree. To meet this contingency has been the effort in all that has been done by the two Houses of Congress in the adoption of legislation or in the framing of joint rules on this subject.

The attempt in this bill to say that a return, single or double, should avail against the concurrent vote of the two Houses is, I think, the first instance of any such attempt. I believe it will not succeed. I believe it can not succeed. We might think it wise so to provide; but I say it is impossible that such a provision can be effectual. It would have no legal validity whatever. If a bill like this should pass, and the two Houses should meet, and, in the exercise of their plain right under the Constitution, be called on to pass upon a single return which all the members considered to be illegal, there would be this dilemma: The two Houses would either have to violate this statute or would have to violate the Constitution under which they act. Whichever way they acted there would be dissatisfaction, there would be doubt, there would be complaint in the public mind; there would be all those evils which we are accustomed to deprecate and deplore under the language, "A disputed Presidential election." Therefore, it seems to me the amendment ought not to be adopted, being not only unwise but invalid. The only thing, in my judgment, which Congress can do is to provide for the case in which the two Houses may fail to agree.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that in criticising this proposed amendment of the House committee it may be thought that I do in effect criticise one provision of the Senate bill, for there is in the Senate bill a provision that where the question of the validity of the title of electors has been submitted to a State tribunal and decided to be valid, such return shall be conclusively presumed to be valid, even though both Houses might dissent from that conclusion.

Perhaps the two cases are not exactly parallel. The conclusive presumption of validity established by the provision of the Senate bill to which I have alluded is established in a case where the question at issue has been submitted to and decided by the State tribunal provided for in section 2 of the bill. The decision of this State tribunal may be regarded as a judicial determination of the question by a court of last resort. To give conclusive effect to such a judicial determination is at any rate a very different thing from the provision of the proposed amendment, since the latter gives the same conclusive presumption in favor of a mere alleged return which has never been judicially passed upon and may be known to be a forgery by every member of each House.

Mr. EDEN. I will ask my colleague whether he recollects an instance in the whole history of the Government in which the two Houses have failed to agree in a case where there was but a single return.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I am not prepared to answer that question fully; but as my colleague is more familiar with the history of this matter than I am (for I was not prepared to discuss this bill, not knowing until late yesterday that it would come up), I will ask him whether there was more than one return from the State of Georgia in the case of the election when Horace Greeley was a candidate.

Mr. EDEN. There was but one return.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I will ask my colleague, further, whether the Senate did not agree to count that vote and the House refuse to count it.

Mr. EDEN. The vote was counted.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Did not the House refuse to count it?

Mr. EDEN. My recollection is that the House so voted after the count had been made.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. My impression is that my colleague is mistaken; but he is so well informed, I feel bound to assume that I am mistaken myself.

Mr. EDEN. I have not examined that case recently, but certainly the vote of Georgia was counted, just as the vote of Missouri was counted in 1820, I believe.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. According to my recollection, when the two Houses separated, the question was brought to a vote in each House, "Shall the vote from Georgia for Horace Greeley be counted?" and the Senate voted yea, while the House voted nay. That is my recollection.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that there may possibly be in the Senate bill a defect of the same kind as that which I attribute to the House amendment; but the provision of the Senate bill that when the question of the validity of the title of electors has been submitted to a State tribunal and decided affirmatively that title shall be conclusively presumed to be valid, is not, in my judgment, so dangerous as the provision of the House amendment that a single return, or a paper purporting to be a return, shall be conclusively presumed to be the legal and valid vote of a State, even though all the members of both Houses (to use the illustration of my friend from Ohio) are firmly convinced that the return is a rank forgery. My friend from Ohio said that in such a case he would be in favor of the return standing. I should not be; and I think that nothing we might enact in the form of legislation would prevent the two Houses of Congress from expressing their opinion in regard to the legal value of such a paper purporting to be the electoral vote of a State.

I notice a distinction drawn by the gentleman from Ohio between challenging the vote of a State, as he called it, and deciding a challenge when it has been made. In the case of a single return, he said, any objection to that return would be challenging the vote of a State. I do not think so. But he says that in case of more than one return, it amounts to a challenge in some mode by the State itself; and therefore a decision by the two Houses of Congress may properly be made. In my judgment the distinction is not well founded. I rest my objection to one or the other of the propositions upon that ground, which is the only logical basis on which I can frame a theory of the electoral count, namely, that if the two Houses of Congress, acting concurrently, agree one way or the other, they act in accordance with the Constitution, and nothing which any statute may provide can invalidate their action.

Although I see some slight objections to the Senate bill, I do not care to detain the House upon them. Perhaps they are corrected by the amendment my colleague from Illinois proposes to make. I refer to the provision in the Senate bill. I can not put my hand on it now, but it is a provision that there shall be conclusive presumption in regard to the validity of the title of electors, and their votes shall be counted if they are regularly cast. I think that is the phrase.

Mr. EDEN. Does the gentleman refer to the amendment I propose?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. No, sir, but I was trying to find in the Senate bill the place where these words occur. I believe it is in section 4, page 5, of the printed bill:

> If more than one return or paper purporting to be a return from a State shall have been received by the President of the Senate, those votes, and those only, shall be counted which shall have been regularly given by the electors who are shown by the determination mentioned in section 2 of this act to have been appointed, if the determination in said section provided for shall have been made.

Now, the object of the Senate bill there was to establish conclusive presumption whenever a State tribunal had been erected and had discharged its functions. Yet, by the insertion of the words "regularly given," everything is thrown into as much confusion as if this conclusive presumption had not been established. Because the regularity of the proceedings of the electors is not a question which comes before the State tribunal. The State tribunal has to decide simply the title of the electors. The title of the electors may be valid, and yet their votes may be invalid, and the words "regularly given" referred not to the title of the electors themselves, but to the validity of their votes after they have been regularly elected. And, if that question is left open to one or the other, or to both Houses of Congress, I fail to see how the Senate, by that wording of the section, has avoided doubt and perplexity, as it is assumed they have done.

But, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding any defects in the Senate bill, the necessity for some legislation on this subject is so strong, the importance of passing it at this session of Congress is so urgent, that I do not feel justified in detaining the House any more on this subject. For my part, I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the committee, but I trust the bill in some form will become a law.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I will reserve it for the benefit of whom it may concern.

FISHERIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, which is accompanied by the correspondence in relation to the rights of American fishermen in the British North American waters, and commend to your favorable consideration the suggestion that a commission be authorized by law to take perpetuating proofs of the losses sustained during the past year by American fishermen owing to their unfriendly and unwarranted treatment by the local authorities of the maritime provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

I may have occasion hereafter to make further recommendations during the present session for such remedial legislation as may become necessary for the protection of the rights of our citizens engaged in the open-sea fisheries of the North Atlantic waters.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 6983) for the relief of certain soldiers of the Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, dishonorably discharged under special orders 92, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated March 1, 1866; when the Speaker signed the same.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS FOR DECEMBER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce at this time for immediate action a joint resolution authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1886.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1886, on the 20th day of said month.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. Res. 220) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALDWELL. I desire to give notice that on to-morrow, within twenty minutes, say, after the resumption of the consideration of the electoral count bill, I shall ask the previous question upon the bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. HEWITT. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion for a moment.

Mr. ROGERS. I will withdraw the motion for the present.

POST-OFFICE SITE, EASTPORT, MAINE.

Mr. BOUTELLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10070) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey the United States custom-house and post-office property at Eastport, in the State of Maine, lately destroyed by fire, the proceeds thereof to be invested in the purchase of a new site and for the erection of a new building in that place; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

SUPERVISION OF WATERS, NEW YORK HARBOR, ETC.

Mr. HEWITT. I ask unanimous consent that certain resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in relation to the harbor of New York, be printed in the RECORD, and be referred to the Committee on Commerce. I will state that they are very brief.

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

Resolutions in reference to the bill creating a commission to supervise the waters of New York harbor and its tributaries.

At the monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held November 4, 1886, the following resolutions, reported by the committee of the chamber on the harbor and shipping, after full discussion of the subject, were adopted:

Resolved, That this chamber hereby reiterates its mature judgment in favor of the bill constituting a commission for New York harbor and its waters, which was introduced at the request of this chamber, was passed by the United States Senate, and is now pending in the House, as a measure absolutely required by the peculiar geographical and legal conditions of this national gateway from the ocean.

Resolved, That experience of a nature to be deplored has taught that no reliance can be placed upon any or all measures, short of this, to protect our channels from serious dangers, and our coasts and the ocean frontages, now so largely sources of health and enjoyment to all citizens, from the destructive effects of dumping garbage, offal, and other offensive matter, in total disregard of law.

Resolved, That while entertaining the highest respect and confidence in the ability of our Engineer Corps in all matters relating to that profession, we deem the combined judgment of the Navy and professors of the Coast Survey, with that of the Engineers, together with civilians representing the respective States adjoining, as prudent business wisdom and of a value not to be thrown aside for any consideration; and we therefore earnestly request the passage of the bill in question.

A true copy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will withhold his motion for the time being, and bring it up later in the day.

Mr. CAMERON. It may just as well be voted on now as later in the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of Charlotte K. Sibley and others, heirs and personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 909) for the relief of Henry H. Sibley. The bill is upon the Calendar, and has been reported, but the petition states the death of the claimant and some reasons why the bill should be amended, and I therefore move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER presented the petition of Clara G. Scott and other citizens of New York, praying for the passage of a bill granting certain relief to Clara G. Scott; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2931) granting a pension to John Walters, alias Jacob Kuntz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2932) granting a pension to James D. Kirkpatrick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 2933) to authorize the redemption by the United States of the silver coin known as United States trade-dollars under certain stipulations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2934) in relation to the binding of certain public documents; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call the special attention of the Committee on Printing to this bill and hope that they will take speedy action upon it. The bill provides—

That the Public Printer be, and he hereby is, directed, in the binding in sheep of the executive and miscellaneous documents and reports of committees, so far as practicable to print on the back thereof the title or titles of the documents or reports therein contained.

This is to my mind a very great omission in the publication of these documents. I have now in my hand a document which has just been placed on our tables, "Report of the Secretary of the Interior, volume 2, 1885." There is nothing, when that is in a library, to indicate what the volume contains. There are five volumes of the report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1885, and those five volumes have each the same inscription on the back and nothing to indicate whether a volume contains the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Commissioner of Pensions, the Commissioner of Patents, or the Commissioner of Education. Now, we have a volume of the report of the Secretary of the Interior which contains alone the report of the Commissioner of Education, and yet there is nothing on the back to indicate what it is.

It seems to me that this is a great oversight, and I ask that the Committee on Public Printing will take notice of this and recommend the enactment of this proposed law, so that we may have some little indication on the back of a volume as to what the contents of it are.

This volume No. 2, of 1885, Report of the Secretary of the Interior, contains the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the report of the superintendent of the Yellowstone Park, the report of the superintendent of the Hot Springs, the report of the Utah commission, and of the governors of Arizona, Alaska, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming Territories; the report of the governor of Wyoming concerning Chinese labor troubles; and also the report of the directors of the Union Pacific Railway Company.

I move that the bill be printed and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2935) granting a pension to Robert Baxter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr COCKRELL. I present in connection with that bill, and to accompany it for reference to the Committee on Pensions, a petition of the judges of the county court of Jackson County, Missouri, and other officials and citizens, praying that a pension be granted to Mr. Baxter, now totally blind, poor, and dependent upon the charities of the world. The petition is accompanied by two affidavits of Silas M. Hillard, two of J. W. Rider, and two of James D. Meador; an affidavit of Dr. L. W. Twyman, an affidavit of Mr. Baxter himself, and an affidavit of sundry other citizens. I move that the petition and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2936) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin T. Phillips; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 2937) for the relief of the Selma and Meridian Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 85) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease to the National Hotel Company of New Jersey certain land in Monmouth County, New Jersey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HIRAM BERDAN.

Mr. PLATT. I desire at this time, if it be in order, to submit a proposed amendment to a bill for printing, and I should like to make a short statement in relation to it.

During the closing days of the last session there came up in its order, under the eighth rule, a bill reported by the Committee on Patents, authorizing the Court of Claims to take jurisdiction and render judgment in the case of the claim of Hiram Berdan. It was objected to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], but was passed over without prejudice. On conference with the Senator from Vermont, his objections have been relieved by the amendment which I propose.

I ask that the amendment be printed, and I shall endeavor, at the next sitting of the Senate, to call up the bill for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut submits an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 2619) authorizing a settlement of the claim of Hiram Berdan, assignee of the Berdan Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company, and asks that it be printed and lie on the table. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

COLUMBIA RIVER SALMON FISHING.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged by persons interested in the commerce of the Columbia River that sundry persons engaged in the business of salmon catching on that river have erected certain structures known as salmon traps and salmon wheels, and that sundry other persons engaged in such salmon fisheries on said river have from time to time during the salmon season placed salmon gill-nets of large dimensions in the waters of said river at various points and places; and

Whereas it is alleged that said wheels, traps, and gill-nets are obstructions to the commerce of said river and seriously interfere with the navigation thereof: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed through the proper Engineer Bureau of his Department to investigate the subject of the salmon fisheries on the Columbia River in the State of Oregon and Washington Territory, the manner in which carried on, whether by gill-nets, traps, or wheels, in what manner the same are placed or used in reference to the navigable waters of said river, and to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable convenience whether such traps, wheels, or nets, or any of them, and which class, in any manner and in what respect and to what extent interferes with or obstructs the navigation of said river and its commerce.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. VAN WYCK. At the request of many citizens of Washington, who are compelled to ride on the Metropolitan Railway line, I ask leave to offer a resolution directing the Committee on the District of Columbia "to inquire whether the Metropolitan Railroad Company neglected to run cars on their road north of Dupont Circle, on Connecticut avenue, on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, December 5, 6, and 7; if so, the reason therefor." Also, whether the cars are generally run on said portion of that road only between 8 o'clock in the morning and 8 o'clock in the evening.

This is only one of a few of the grievances which the people of this city are subjected to by reason of the determination of this company to run their road first, second, and last for their own especial benefit, without regard to the convenience of the public, which when they were incorporated was supposed to be the first matter to be considered. The people of this city are unable to find anywhere relief from this determination and the exactions of this company. They have very many other grievances which I think have been heretofore enumerated, and I believe the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia expressed a determination, as the citizens will be rejoiced to know, to investigate the matter of motive power upon this and the other street-car lines.

Now, it is a notorious fact, which every member of Congress knows and every citizen who unfortunately has to ride over this road knows, that their cars are overloaded, their horses and drivers are overworked, and the patrons of the road are overworked in discharging the duty of conductor, as they are required to do, willing or unwilling. There seems to be no relief for this unfortunate people—200,000 of population here, yet they are powerless. Actually on every trip made over this road every person from Georgetown or Dupont Circle is required to give ten minutes of his time—ten minutes actually stolen—because this company, now rich, full of large dividends, insist upon carrying their cars full with a small broken-down horse that has to pause to a walk at every grade; and therefore ten minutes are actually stolen out of the time of every citizen compelled to ride upon this road. A road which will not transport its passengers with the same speed that an ordinary dray team would a heavy coach or omnibus certainly deserves to be interfered with by Congress when the people have no power themselves.

I merely mention that in connection with other grievances which this people are called upon to bear. I have been at a loss to know, and so have they, why, when a car is loaded beyond its full capacity, often with twenty-five passengers, and a horse staggering under the load, the passengers must be required to perform the duty of conductor, passing over one another's shoulder 25 cents to get tickets, and then a passenger generously opens the package and starts the coveted ticket toward the box, and then having the other passengers staggering with the package of unused tickets back to the rear of the car to give it to the passenger clinging for dear life to the props for human support. Yet this people must be subjected to this grievance because they have no power in themselves to reach it.

I have had occasion before to say, what is not necessary to repeat, that this corporation has these people by the throat and compels them, and compels every man who rides, to do a conductor's duty.

Therefore, I ask that the resolution may be adopted at this time, and then it is to be hoped that this people will secure some redress from other grievances of which they complain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to inquire whether the Metropolitan Railroad Company neglected to run cars on their road north of Dupont Circle on Connecticut avenue on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, December 5, 6, and 7; if so, the reason therefor. Also whether cars are generally run on said portion of road only between 8 o'clock a. m. and 8 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 220) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1886; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss; and

A bill (H. R. 6983) for the relief of certain soldiers of the Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, dishonorably discharged under Special Orders 92, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated March 1, 1866.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE AND VICKSBURG RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask unanimous consent to give a notice of the postponement of a special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will receive it.

Mr. EUSTIS. At the last session, on my motion, the bill (H. R. 3186) which is a bill to declare the forfeiture of what is known as the Backbone-railroad grant, was made the special order for Monday, December 13. I know it is the desire of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to be present when the bill is considered. He is absent from the city. Therefore I move to postpone that special order to one week from next Monday, that is, to December 20, at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated, with a view to its postponement.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana now moves that the bill be postponed to and made a special order for Monday, December 20, at 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1905) for the relief of Theodore W. Tallmadge.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9183) for the relief of James R. Marrs.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, insisted upon by the Senate, to the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FORNEY, Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. BUTTERWORTH, managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

TARIFF REVISION.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call up for present consideration the resolution introduced by me on Tuesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by him on the 7th instant, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the promise of making any revision of the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests, not to injure any domestic industries, but to promote their healthy growth, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital involved, and without depriving American labor of ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country, appears so obviously hopeless and impracticable that any further attempts at revision by the present Congress, in contravention to the foregoing cardinal declarations, are to be regarded as inexpedient and detrimental to the revival of the trade and industry of the country.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it appears that some new Democratic leaders have determined upon a national contest on the tariff question. They would drag reluctant followers away from the example of the first act of the First Congress, away from the teachings of Jefferson and Jackson, as well as from the warnings of Tilden, away also from the latest Democratic national platform; and they demand that the United States shall humbly begin to copy the British dogma of free trade, notwithstanding it seems to be everywhere else tottering to its grave. The avoidance by these tariff reformers of all old issues may be wise, but it is not so clear that the new issue will be less calamitous than those issues from which they seek to escape, or which have heretofore ended in inglorious defeat. Neither the magnitude of the question nor the courage of those who flaunt free trade on their banner will be denied, for the reason that it obviously threatens nothing less than ruin and disaster to many of the great industries of the American people. Under these circumstances it would be cowardice to shirk the discussion so broadly tendered—a discussion wherein the Senate has not had, and may not have, any formal opportunity to participate; and regretting that the subject is not about to be handled by some Senator more competent than myself, I yet venture thus early to bring to the attention of the Senate what, as it appears to me, supremely concerns the enduring prosperity of our common country. Bearing in mind that the Senate may be assumed to know something about the tariff, I hope to escape from being wearisome by omitting much of what I do not know.

THE TARIFF BACKBONE OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

It is clear that the Democratic Presidential candidate in 1884 would have been defeated but for the protective-tariff backbone inserted in the Democratic platform by the national convention at Chicago, July 10, 1884, from which I take the following remarkable extract, now supposed to be too square-toed to make a literal compliance politically advantageous:

The Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests. But in making reduction in taxes it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth. From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue. Such they must continue to be. Moreover, many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved. The process of reform must be subject in the execution to this plain dictate of justice—all taxation shall be limited to the requirements of economical government. The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

These strong pledges, pregnant with fair-minded protection in every sentence, were introduced into the Democratic platform through the insistence of protective-tariff Democrats, who are now receiving vitriolic denunciations from the late half-breed allies of free trade, because of their honest efforts to prevent their party from violating pledges upon which their national co-operation was based, and upon which the party obtained its victory by a majority of only a finger's breadth. Before the election, in the words of Rabelais:

The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be.

But after the election,

The devil was well, the devil a monk was he.

Promises to associates are said to bind the honor of a class not to be named by me, and assuredly should have bound that branch of the Democratic party which prides itself on "tariff reform;" but forgetting they had solemnly declared that "it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their growth," we find instead that their conduct bore no reference to their creed, and they were ready not only to injure, but to injure fatally, whatever they touched, as was shown by their latest edition of tariff bills, which proposed to repeal all duties upon imported wool and hemp, as well as upon salt and fish, flax and flax straw, jute and jute butts, and lumber—a measure which at one blow would blot out all of these "domestic industries," vital to the prosperity of all portions of our country, and stampede them directly into alien hands.

When business of all kinds is moving in a normal condition of general contentment, neither excited nor depressed, a change in tariff laws, by which trade and industrial affairs are to be governed or affected, is ever unwelcome, and only to be justified when promising great, immediate, and palpable benefits, as any change must to some extent dislocate the regular and ascertained results of all industrial establishments. But to propose such a change when business affairs have been unusually depressed, when trade everywhere has offered only meager inducements, when wage-earners find steady employment uncertain and unsatisfactory, but showing signs of improvement, it would seem peculiarly inauspicious. Statesmen, with any broad view of the general welfare, especially those suddenly dressed in brief authority, should be wary about pushing legislative measures which would have no other effect than to multiply obstacles in the way of a revival of business, increase the losses and timidity of capital and enterprise, and break the hope of laboring men. And yet it would seem that the party of free trade, under the alias of "revenue reform," has determined to run amuck against nearly all the industries and productions of America, and such as escape the first assault could not hope for immunity from the next.

A sudden and violent reduction of the tariff subjects all stocks on hand to sudden and violent depreciation, and forces many people into bankruptcy, or to abandon their life-long occupations only to crowd labor and capital into other employments, perhaps already overstocked and unremunerative.

OBJECTIONS TO WILD EXPERIMENTS.

The foremost objections to the proposed reductions of the tariff, however small the reduction, are that they were supremely ill-directed and wholly at war with American industries, and that according to the estimates of the Treasury Department there did not appear to be any surplus of revenue to spare. The revenue, as estimated by the present administration, was to be $315,000,000, and the estimated regular annual and permanent appropriations were $339,589,552, and the actual amount appropriated for 1887 was $328,000,000, although not including a dollar on account of fortifications or for coast defenses. Notwithstanding these stubborn records, a reduction of revenues was proposed in the face of a deficit, as was clearly disclosed by their own highest authority, of $24,589,552, and this estimated deficit the revenue reformers sought to increase.

A deficit, whether really imminent or not, can not now be denied by those who originally proposed a reduction of the revenue, for they subsequently very ostentatiously sought to avoid it by threatening the attachment of an amendment to pension bills, a sort of legislative-swivel veto, imposing new taxation to cover the full payment of any bill that increased pensions, or of any grant to persons not previously entitled by law to pensions. Their belated patriotic foresight was, however, rather incongruous. To reduce taxation was the primary object, as we were assured, of all their early efforts; but their ultimate side-show was to increase taxation and the revenue in order to save the Treasury from bankruptcy, and the Executive, possibly, from a too prolific brood of pension vetoes. These several incoherent conclusions find, perhaps, their only support in the terms of Poo-Bah's celebrated verdict:

So now you'll all agree
That he was right,
And we were right,
And you were right
As right could be.

It may be true that a larger revenue will be received than was estimated; and, if so, it will have been mainly derived from duties on imports—a fact which by no means would tend to prove that the existing rates of the tariff were excessive and urgently requiring reduction, but proving that a reduction might still more, through an increase of imports, augment the excess of revenue.

To the scheme of a radical and permanent reduction of the revenue there are other objections (and objections are as plenty as blackberries), one of which is, that the reduction necessarily implies a long postponement of the payment of the public debt, and the non-fulfillment of the pledge, given by the statute, of an established sinking fund. Surely no policy should find favor by which a permanent debt is to be indefinitely left riveted upon the country.

STRUCTURAL WEAKNESS OF FREE-TRADE TARIFF BILLS.

There appears to have been, if I may say so, a "structural weakness" in Democratic free-trade tariff bills. The framer of some of these bills seems to have expected that free trade brought across the Atlantic, like spirits after a sea-voyage, would be so mellowed as to make it more palatable. He began with homœopathic doses, horizontally administered, as if dreading to excite an outcry; and, like the English parson, described by Selden, "baptized his own fingers rather than the child."

The ill-born horizontal schemes—first 10 per cent., and then 20 per cent.—by which it was at first proposed to change, but not to amend, the existing tariff, were not limited to a few articles; but, while equally cutting and bleeding nearly all the duties upon imported articles, copying the Sangrado specific in every case, with nothing of "Tariff Reform," or of computable advantage to consumers, proposed to reduce the tariff just low enough to let a flood of foreign productions pour in and overrun the American market. These measures not having inspired love at first sight among members of a House anxious to escape a "Waterloo" on the ides of November, the juvenile play of Bo-peep commences—now the horns peep out, now they hide for safety—and an amended bill was hurriedly brought to the front, where the horizontal jumped to the perpendicular, and all about iron dropped out of sight for safety. The authors, rough-hew it how they would, seem to have been suddenly taught, in the words of an eminent political teacher,

What perils do environ
The man that meddles with cold iron.

IRON HARDER THAN WOOL.

The architects of these various unrelated reform-tariff bills—the last one of which being always at war with its predecessors—finally reached the conclusion that iron had more gravity and that its impact was more to be dreaded in any political contest than wool, from which, therefore, they abruptly proposed to withdraw all tariff protection. The farmers were accordingly selected as the victims of the new experiment. In order that there should not be a rag of protection left, it was proposed that not only all wools, but woolen rags, shoddy, waste, and mungo, and wool on the skin, should also be admitted free. No revenue from rags and shoddy! What ringing watchwords to carry admiration without limit are these of tariff reform! Rags and shoddy free, and oleomargarine may come next.

WOOL AND SHODDY.

The annual clip of wool since 1861 has increased from 60,000,000 pounds to over 320,000,000 pounds. Protection has not only magnificently increased the product, but has wonderfully improved the quality; and the supply of nearly every variety required by American manufacturers can now be furnished, with the single exception of coarse carpet-wools. This vast interest, deeply identified with all portions of our country, is thus exposed to absolute annihilation by the proposed free-trade reform. The husbandmen whose flocks require winter feeding can not compete with those in Australia and South America, where no such feeding is required; and when American sheep-husbandry shall have been banished from the fields where it now prospers, the land can only be devoted to wheat or corn, for which there is no profitable market visible at home or abroad, and our prairie farmers would soon become the tenants at will of foreign landlords. It may be that the lamb-like submissiveness of wool-growers has been overestimated. In numbers they have a giant's strength, and may not consider it tyrannous to use it in self-defense.

HEMP AND FLAX.

Another industry of no mean importance, which it is also proposed by the free-trade reformers to destroy root and branch, is that of hemp and flax, for these also are to be wholly deprived of protection. In Missouri and Kentucky hemp is a staple product which gives employment to large numbers of the colored people through the long winter months, when no other work is in season. My excellent friend, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, has a fancy that he is at his best when he is assailing the present tariff and fixing it up for "revenue only." He holds that, as Bishop Berkeley held tar-water, to be a remedy for all diseases. I do not question his great ability nor his sincerity; and when he shall be gathered to his people, which I hope will not be until he has reached the longest record to be found in sacred history, I have no doubt there will be found engraved on his heart the words, "A Kentucky tariff for revenue only." But what is he to do with that free-trade reformer who proposes to make hemp free? I think I can hear him, with something of old Scotia's emphasis, repeating Shakespeare's words:

Let hemp suffocate his windpipe.

FARMERS TREATED WITH CONTEMPT BY THE FREE-TRADERS.

In all these experimental tariff-reform bills farmers are treated with contemptuous injustice, and their products are branded as unworthy of the slightest protection. Corn, oats, hay, and potatoes have appeared on the perilous edge of the free-trade bills. At first they were put on the free-list, and then apparently granted a reprieve until the next installment; but, like the companions of Ulysses, they are all in the same cave with the one-eyed monster, Polyphemus, and threatened to be hereafter successively devoured.

THE AMERICAN FISHERIES.

Our fisheries, from the earliest days of our history regarded with national pride and solicitude, it is now proposed by the latest of these bills to abandon and surrender to our affectionate and rather demonstrative northern neighbors a free and their only market, for which they have so long fiercely but vainly struggled, and for which they have often been willing to tender many so-called equivalents. All is now legislatively offered without any reciprocity, without money and without price, as a boon to the parties who have rudely seized, the past year, so many of our defenseless fishing-vessels, and so often insulted our flag. Further diplomacy, after this proposal of unconditional legislative surrender, will no longer puzzle the State Department, and we ought to be loved as we can not be feared. Certainly no copyright need to be secured on these tariff-reform bills, as the distinguished authors are likely to long enjoy a monopoly of their models.

NOT OVERPRODUCTION, BUT OVERIMPORTATION.

It has often been asserted that the recent dullness of American trade was caused by an immense overproduction of American manufactures; but so long as the report of the Treasury Department shows that we annually import manufactured articles to the amount of $379,987,472, nearly all of which might as well have been produced at home, this overproduction statement must lie, and be located elsewhere. Our total imports of 1886 were $635,436,136, and of these all but $255,448,664 were in manufactured articles. The manufactures of wool imported into the United States for the year ending June 30, 1886, were valued at $41,421,319, and not only displaced an equal amount of our domestic woolen manufactures, but deprived our wool-growers also of a market for not less than 120,000,000 pounds of wool contained in the woolen fabrics imported. Clearly the evil from which we have suffered has not been so much from overproduction as from over-importation. Our people could not fail to find a much larger market at home if they were not crowded out by the overproduction of foreign machinery, from which free-trade reformers seek no relief.

CAPITAL IN FARMS, AND THE LABORERS.

The aggregate capital of our people invested in farms, including lands, fences, and buildings, is a trifle over $10,000,000,000, and this immense capital can not fail to become sadly depreciated unless the home market for agricultural products shall be not only maintained but augmented. The wheat from India and Australia, produced by laborers at one-eighth of what is paid to laborers in Texas or Georgia, appears to be obtaining all those foreign markets hitherto open to our farmers, and at this crisis the agitators of free trade are insiduously attempting to sap and undermine our home market by the deprivation of large bodies of home consumers of their accustomed means of livelihood. So much protection as is necessary for the full retention of those employed in manufactures is unequivocally for the benefit of agriculture. They are just as indispensable for the consumption of the crops as is the live-stock of the farmer.

CAPITAL IN MANUFACTURES, AND THE LABORERS.

It may be that some of those astride of their free-trade hobby, guided wholly by a British chart, and bespattering with mud whoever they meet on their way, underrate the numbers of those whose occupations they would either cripple or destroy. Most likely they have forgotten that, while the number of laborers employed in agriculture is large, or 3,323,876, the number of laborers employed in manufactures is also large, or 2,718,805, and only less by 605,071. The interests of these laborers are inseparably interlaced, and in spite of all misleading foreign devices, if the question is to be determined as a political one, they must ere long go hand in hand to the ballot-box.

We have also nearly three billions of capital ($2,775,412,345) invested in manufactures and the mechanic arts, giving useful employment to large and important numbers of our people. * This capital is immovable, and must abide the fate that awaits it, survive or perish, in the general policy of the country, whether friendly or adverse. If that policy should continue to be friendly, this capital will be a working capital, a capital for wage-earners, and cover our country with countless blessings. If it should be adverse, all this fixed capital will be smitten with paralysis, and the multitude of vigorous workmen, finding their occupation gone, will be an army of the unemployed, and exposed either to idleness or to a much lower scale of wages, with all of its bitter train of miseries.

A large proportion of agricultural products are consumed by farmers on their own premises: but, according to the census of 1880, the amount sold was $2,212,540,927; and yet the aggregate value of manufactures, aided by the giant water and steam power of machinery, was more than twice that amount. These vast American interests, illustrated by figures that tax human comprehension, must be affected from top to bottom by changes of the tariff; and even the fear of a change, when engineered by hostile hands, is disastrous and destructive to all hopeful enterprise. But our fearless tariff reformers appear to be as unmindful of the disturbances they may create as the little child who throws a pebble into the ocean at Sandy Hook, not knowing that a vibration will be sure to follow on to the farthest shore of the Atlantic. Moved by partisan inspiration much more, it is to be feared, than by practical experience, it is not wonderful that the audacity of such meddlers, having won no applause from opponents, should have provoked some pungent criticism even from their political friends. But the candor of tariff and anti-tariff Democrats, it must be admitted, is conspicuous: they never speak well of one another.

WAR TAXES REDUCED LONG AGO.

It is sometimes arrogantly declared that it is time that "war taxes" were reduced; as though they had not been already repeatedly reduced. In 1866 our receipts from all sources were $558,032,620.06. Since that time the tariff has been reduced, and all internal revenue, except that from spirits and beer and a moiety of that from tobacco, has been wholly abandoned; and the amount from the tariff and internal revenue in 1885 was $293,969,664.88, which shows that we have relinquished taxation since the close of the war by an amount nearly equal to all that is now collected. I suppose the continual loud barking about "war taxes" will even eclipse that of Mr. Beecher's dog, which, he said, barked at the hole for several days after the squirrel had gone.

PROTECTION REQUIRED MOST FOR THE GENERAL WELFARE.

It is true that many American products have outgrown protection, and neither receive nor covet it. But, while all home manufactures have been wonderfully cheapened, foreign competition has become unbounded, and protection against underpaid foreign labor can not be abandoned. It requires, therefore, an extensive acquaintance with the entire products of the world, and special skill on the part of those who are about to revise and readjust tariff rates, subtracting here and adding there, in order to be absolutely just to the Government as well as just to all parties whose interests and daily avocations are so greatly concerned. Interests so deep and far-reaching should be intrusted to friends, and not wholly to those who care not for them—certainly not to those who have shown a purpose to strangle them. Protection is not required solely for or by manufacturers, but for the industrial autonomy of the nation, for the general welfare of the whole country; and a revision of the tariff calls for much patient labor, and should be grounded upon established facts, instead of upon a theory which makes statistics and our history and experience all go for nothing.

NOT REQUIRED TO LOVE THY NEIGHBOR BETTER THAN THYSELF.

In my humble career in relation to the tariff as long supported by me, I have found no command to "love thy neighbor better than thyself;" but I have found, what I hope may be the universal promptings of patriotism and philanthropy, to urge on that pronounced tariff policy which, while offering an ample revenue for the support of the Government, aims also to advance the prosperity, power, and glory of our country by developing the full forces, material and intellectual, of all and every part of its people, and which furnishes "the fences to secure for labor profit, and to men at large the full enjoyment of the fruits of the earth." This policy holds out no exclusive favors, and no possible monopoly of trade, neither to persons nor places. It is a continental policy which embraces Augusta and Chattanooga as much as Lowell and Pittsburgh; San Francisco as much as Wilmington and Jersey City. All places and all persons are not only permitted but invited to enter the race, foreign lands and persons alone excepted; and yet the free-trader, like the Knight of the Sorrowful Countenance, still wages a windy battle against the wholly imaginary foe which he calls a "monopoly."

UNDEVELOPED RESOURCES OF SOUTHERN STATES.

In all of the so-called Southern States but two, only about one-third of the land has been improved; and even in Virginia and Kentucky there are millions of acres untouched by the plow. As all of these States have a superiority in climate, an abundance of labor, and by no means an inferior soil, ought this immense dead capital and all of its earth-hidden mining treasures, together with the unrivaled water-power of unnumbered rivers, to remain forever untouched and undeveloped?

But it will not be improved unless a market for the products shall be created at the threshold, and this can only be broadly created by that multiplication and diversity of employments which a protective tariff brings forth in home manufactures; but, instead of this, free-trade would blindly sow the seeds for an abundant crop of pauperism.

A new generation has appeared in the South, which offers a retreating support, in its new and emancipated condition, to the free-trade dogmas so long caressed and dominant under the ancient régime. The world does not stand still, but revolves. All alien or sectional embarrassments of our country have vanished. The idle man is no longer the only gentleman. The talent not buried in the ground finds its reward. Dogs in the manger are being kicked out. The factories, founderies, and machine-shops on the James River and on the Tennessee—as potential as those on the Merrimac and the Providence—are so many battering-rams, before which alien theories and crooked abstractions are tumbling down, to rise no more forever. Hostility to and destruction of these young but promising workshops involve something akin to the Herodian guilt of a slaughter of the infants. But the time will come when it will be said, "They are dead which sought the young child's life."

HUNGRY FOR CAPITAL.

Most of the Southern States claim to be in need of capital for new industrial establishments, and for the general development of their great natural, but slumbering, resources, which would more tempt Northern investments were it not for some distrust of their permanent safety, too often menaced by the approval with which some Southern leaders still appear to hail measures that hand over all such investments to be legislatively crucified. When the character of public opinion shall have become hospitable and fully ripened, the consummation of the valid hopes and demands of Southern States will not be long delayed.

THE IROQUOIS STILL AFTER AMERICAN SCALPS.

The Iroquois, still employed by the British to tomahawk Americans, might increase their riches and prosperity and pay proper taxes if they would only work; but they won't. They talk and reduce economical discussion to a farce. They are constitutionally the "Indians not taxed." In the earliest years of our Government two or three million dollars for its support was regarded as more abundant than fifty or one hundred times that amount would be by the present administration. When the imports and rates of duties were small our wants were small. In this early period our settlements barely fringed the shores of the Atlantic; but since that time our citizens—leaping over the Alleghanies, beyond the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains—have peopled the Pacific slopes so densely that no room can now be found for the Iroquois or even for a Chinese wedge. To support a free government in this New World of magnificent distances and of liberal institutions, a large revenue is necessary, and American progress constantly leaves fewer articles upon which revenue can be based.

The whole amount raised is used for the support of the Government, and for no other purpose. To this end duties upon imported foreign articles are imposed, and they bear very lightly upon our own people, as foreigners must bear a very considerable part of the burden before they can have any license here to sell their commodities. At the same time the duties are found to be a powerful stimulus to American enterprise, which soon brings forth similar articles either of better quality or at a cheaper price; and there is not now a single manufactured article which has ever received tariff protection that has not been vastly reduced in price from the competition arising therefrom. In the long run a protective tariff is, therefore, for the advantage of the consumer. The range of articles for popular consumption is enlarged and offered at popular prices. Beyond all doubt incidental foreign exclusion promotes American industries and their growth. Americans prosper by reason of this comparatively easy method of supporting the Government, and much more prosper by the policy which secures to the whole people profitable and diversified employments.

EXPORT TRADE NOT DEPENDENT UPON DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

The party slogan is, though nowhere supported by facts, that if foreign manufactures were permitted to come into our ports free of duties foreign ports would be opened to receive a greater amount of our export trade. This is everywhere contradicted by experience, and is not less absurd than it would be for our sailors, when the tide and wind were favorable for entrance only to our harbors, to start out for a tempestuous voyage at sea.

This stale theory is also refuted with mathematical certainty by the foreign-trade statistics of many other countries. Germany imported from Spain only to the amount of $1,513,170, and yet her exports to Spain reached $17,735,845. The exports of British home produce to Russia in 1882 were $28,859,225, while the imports of Great Britain from Russia were $105,238,610. This scanty recital might gain by indefinite expansion, and with like results, as to our exports and imports with Great Britain, Brazil, Japan, Cuba, and the Canadas, and wholly and forever disproves the allegation that our exports to any particular country are dependent in the slightest corresponding degree upon the extent of our imports. And yet this baseless argument, without one fact to stand on, has been repeated this season, and will be the next, both here and abroad, by every professor of English political economy; for they think as the heathen do, "that they shall be heard for their much speaking;" and these learned theorists, having no warm-heartedness for labor, are the stars among those specially endowed with an incapacity to earn, and who have never attempted to earn, a dollar by the sweat of the brow. Why is it that in Great Britain, the only pretentious paradise of free trade, their export trade has passed its zenith and seems to have been visibly declining, while that of the United States, where a protective tariff finds some support, has been largely gaining? Our exceptionally large imports of tea from Japan and of coffee from Brazil, wholly duty free, have signally failed to promote a corresponding reciprocity of our exports to those countries. The experiment has, therefore, been fully tested and indelibly branded with the figure of a cross.

It is not to be doubted that there are many American products which from their excellence and cheapness might find a ready market abroad, provided the producers would first study so much of utility as not to be distanced by England, and, second, so much of beauty as not to be distanced by France; but the producers having facilities for such productions, instead of idly complaining of dullness at home and calling upon Hercules for aid, should imitate the German and British traders and send out to foreign countries young men, and free-traders if possible, as traveling salesmen, to learn the language, the wants, and tastes of the people with whom a wider intercourse might be advantageous. Samples, not of slipshod, scamping work, but of their most attractive products, should be exhibited. Trade has grown to be exacting, seeks what will wear well as well as what is beautiful, and must be wooed to be won.

If manufacturers here have been in some respects remiss in courting foreign trade, they have this practical excuse, that the Government has refused all facilities to foreign markets by declining to establish on the ocean any adequate mail service by American vessels.

The argument of free-traders, as already stated, is that our domestic productions would find a wider foreign market if we were only to open our ports, through a reduction of the tariff, to a larger introduction of foreign productions. But obviously the currents of the two streams, foreign and domestic, would then meet, and an overflowing flood could only be avoided by drying up or by entirely suppressing the conflicting American industries, which could not maintain their existence except on the lowest scale of wages paid to producers of like commodities abroad.

The whole idea appears to be that, by the abandonment of the prosperity we have at home, we might gain more abroad, and is quite on a par with the logic of Sir Boyle Roche, who said:

It would be better, Mr. Speaker, to give up not only a part, but, if necessary, even the whole of our constitution, to preserve the remainder.

IMMIGRATION NOWHERE FOLLOWS THE TRACK OF FREE TRADE.

If free trade leads to prosperity and protection to adversity, how does it happen, since 1860, that 2,910,067 of British subjects have emigrated and emigrated—not including those to India or to any other of the British colonies—to the United States? Forty thousand emigrants came to us in September last, and about the same number in October. But an American emigrant to Great Britain would be a curiosity worthy of preservation in the British Museum. There are no tracks in that direction.

Although we pay working men more than once and a half as much as they are paid in England, and twice as much as they are paid in Germany, yet our free-traders say that Americans are the cheapest workmen in the world because they do more work. Is it to be believed that an Englishman, as soon as he puts his foot on our soil, can do 50 per cent. more work than ever before, or that a German can do twice as much?

LABOR-SAVING INVENTIONS.

Americans have won an enviable reputation by their numberless inventions of labor-saving machinery, and by the genius displayed in original discoveries, that make up the milestones of the world's industrial advancement. No other people hold a better title to the use and profit of the utmost power of machinery than the people of the United States, nor will they consent to measures which tend to remand thousands of our people to hand-labor only. If, at times, there appears a redundance of commodities, the result is a diminution of prices. The great advantage is that the extensive introduction of machinery and the protection of skilled-labor have marvellously reduced the cost of the necessaries of life, and in many countries have also increased, not only the comforts and luxuries, but the longevity of mankind. Tireless engines take up the hardest work. Ingenious mechanism often snatches a grace beyond the reach of human hands. We look in vain, however, to find in the land of free trade so many healthy and happy dwelling-places, occupied by their intelligent owners, as to-day profusely decorate the American landscape and practically uphold the national wisdom and beneficence of a protective tariff.

ADAM SMITH AND HIS FREE-TRADE THEORY.

When Adam Smith brought out his great free-trade work, on "The Wealth of Nations," it was based on the state of things in 1776, when England was almost the sole possessor of manufactures, when provisions were double of their present cost, and wages perhaps not half as high, and when steam-power was comparatively unknown. Since that date wondrous inventions, vastly improved machinery, skillful mining, railroads, and the electric telegraph have revolutionized the industries as well as the political, commercial, and social relations of mankind. Smith himself, if alive to-day, would no longer abide by his own work, but would confess his short-comings, his errors of fact, and admit the falseness of his predictions and of his hypothetical argumentation. Were his premises admitted to be true as to England, they would still be shockingly untrue when applied to any other nation.

The sources of wealth have been multiplied and expanded and dignified by science and skilled labor. The British free-trade theory of the eighteenth century, with all of its later modifications and complexity, always isolated and impotent, is as unworthy of universal application, and, outside of the British Islands, is practically as moribund and obsolete as the spinning wheels and farming tools of that by-gone age; and its professors would now very properly appear in cocked hats, red waistcoats, and velvet breeches. Modern statesmen have everywhere discovered that they must adapt their measures to their own country, study its special wants, its aptitudes and natural resources, and not linger behind the spirit of the times. What may be wise and acceptable to-day may require some modification to-morrow. But the unchangeable finality of free trade scorns evolution, and adheres to its tallow candles, notwithstanding the world is illumined with electric light.

Free trade in Great Britain came at last as a British local necessity, but came with the advocacy of Cobden, for which he is said to have obtained a million dollars, seventy years after the work of Adam Smith, and not until extreme protection had accomplished the supreme object of placing British manufactures beyond the reach of any foreign competition then in sight. Their corn laws were repealed in 1846, because they kept the price of corn up to the starvation point, no matter how redundant the supply might be elsewhere. Their workingmen, mainly regarded by free traders as animals that have to be fed, must have cheaper bread or more wages. More wages could not be offered, as that, by raising the cost of manufactures, would throw their foreign trade into the hands of rivals, and foreign trade was then, as it is now, their chief reliance for the support of a large proportion of their population. The pinching necessity for the repeal of the corn laws is shown by the fact that the British imports of corn and flour retained for home consumption in 1846 were 17 pounds weight per head of population, while in 1882 the imports were 241 pounds per head of population, and are likely to be more for the coming year.

The hereditary landlords would have preferred that one-half of their population, threatening to be dangerous to their waning class, should have emigrated to Hades or Halifax, but they had either to submit to free trade in corn or to retire from the rule of a great and aggressive empire. Free trade in corn, though a serious blow to British agriculture, was a heroic but temporary remedy for the threatened decadence of the British Government from the rank of the mistress of the seas to that of a second or third rate power. This remedy has nearly spent its force, and free trade has nothing more to offer. Other skilled manufacturing nations are coming to the front, and British workmen are still unprotected and discontented; and this fact is daily emphasized by the emigration of British subjects to the United States, where, under a protective tariff, they find a higher standard of comforts, free schools for their children, and better wages as well as much cheaper food.

SUPREMACY OF FREE TRADE IN IRELAND AND INDIA.

The present sorry condition of Ireland and of India, where their chief domestic manufactures have been altogether superseded by the superior capital and machinery of Great Britain, is the work of free-trade craftsmen, whose gospel in both places has had its ripest supremacy and fullest effect. The average yearly income of the inhabitants of India is estimated not to exceed $7.50; and, having only this pittance, they are still forced to submit to the most grinding taxation. These people, the poorest on the globe, are made to pay annually over thirty million dollars of revenue on salt; and this great necessity of life can there only be obtained as the dearest of luxuries. Famines in India have long been periodic; and how long its hungry people can escape utter bankruptcy is a problem that even Englishmen are forced to consider. The orange has been squeezed and not much but the rind has been left. Home rule in India only lags in the rear of home rule in Ireland.

FREE-TRADE FALLACIES.

There is repeated contention, though a thousand times refuted, that our people have to pay the whole amount of the duties imposed upon articles imported, as well as an equal amount upon like articles of home manufacture. To show how false such a contention is, let me quote from a late report of our consul at Prescott, in Canada:

> The moment the tariff is taken off, that moment hop-poles go up in price just the amount of the present duty. It is so with all exportations. Butter pays 4 cents per pound. It is 5½ to 6 cents less in price here than in American towns on the frontier. Potatoes pay 15 cents per bushel duty. They are 18 to 22 cents per bushel lower here than on the frontiers across the St. Lawrence.

This brief statement demonstrates that the foreign exporter, in all the instances cited, pays the whole duty; and he rarely fails to be subjected to a large part of such revenue contributions. It is notorious that Canadian exporters to the United States of cattle, horses, sheep, and wool always lose or pay the entire customs duty, and our people bear no burden whatever, except from the increased competition, which, of course, may diminish the price of the home stock. That all this is true is also indirectly proven by the fact that the chief complaint against our tariff has a single foreign origin—does not come from Germany, France, or from any other continental power, and does not come from home consumers. England, however, is clamorous for a reduction of the American tariff, and watches and eggs on her chances of free-trade here with more of selfish persistence than any of our own people. In the words of the Cobden Club, she "cannot rest while the United States are unsubdued."

The stale fallacy limping around with the phrase, "Buy where you can buy cheapest and sell where you can sell dearest," though often confuted, is still current among free-traders, but hardly merits respectful attention. As it requires two to buy or to sell, obviously here one side or the other must be cheated. In the mouths of the original propagators of free trade this fallacy put on a different shape, and the unconcealed intention was that other people, and especially Americans, should sell cheaply and buy dearly. To sell abroad, the first condition is to sell at a lower price than anybody else. Foreign trade can not otherwise be obtained. To achieve this result the whole world must be underbidden by the exporter and the product of home labor reduced to a lower cost than prevails in any competing country. The practical outcome of this branch of the fallacy offers little temptation except to those glittering in the rags of poverty, who already live from hand to mouth with no hope of ever doing more.

The other branch of the fallacy, to "buy where you can buy cheapest," is equally unsatisfactory, and rests on the assumption that it makes no difference in final results whether employment is given to labor and capital at home or abroad; but if we employ, for example, capital and labor in Virginia to produce a ton of iron and exchange it for half a ton of Virginia wheat, then it will be seen that we have secured the employment in Virginia of two capitals and of double the amount of labor which would be employed if the wheat was sold and the iron purchased abroad. As usual the locomotion of free trade is on one leg, and very lame at that.

BRITISH REMEDIES FOR DEPRESSION OF TRADE.

The chief measures indicated in Great Britain, so far as I have noticed, as a remedy for the extraordinary shrinkage of their export trade, or for the preservation of their manufactures, appear to be, as presented by the testimony in the "Report of the Royal Commission," on the "Depression of Trade and Industry," a repeal of the law of Parliament which prevents the employment of children between 8 and 14 years of age, and a reduction of the wages of workmen, with an increase of the hours of labor.

Doubtless the easy exit and transfer of workmen from Great Britain to the United States has gradually compelled a large advance in the wages, as well as some reduction in the laboring hours of British workmen; but the terms still prevailing there are notoriously far less favorable to workingmen than those offered in the United States; and yet the scale of wages on the continent is comparatively worse, or so much lower that British foreign trade is at many points wholly excluded. British newspapers, as well as the witnesses examined by the Royal Commission, loudly complain that their countrymen cannot compete with iron-workers in Belgium, where wages are 2*s.* 1*d.* per day of 16 hours, nor in Germany, where wages are 2*s.* 2*d.* per day of 15 hours, nor in Italy, where wages are 1*s.* 7*d.* for 16 hours; and, therefore, they seriously propose a reduction of wages for British iron-workers, and an increase in their hours of labor.

This is the stone instead of bread to be offered to workingmen, and the relief proposed for their protracted depression in trade; and it may be added that it is the only logical relief possible in the land of free trade, where those who labor must exclusively endure all the sacrifice for those who buy. British laborers must have a fiercer struggle for existence and contrive to live more coarsely. Free trade has no pity and scorns all duties, moral as well as financial. Would American workingmen consent to be placed on a level competition with the workmen of Germany or of Italy? Beyond all question nothing else awaits the end of a "tariff for revenue only," which is the Democratic euphemism for free trade; and the real but unavowed purpose here is to effect a reduction of the wages of American workingmen. Between two countries open to free trade wages can no more stand on different levels than water in two open vessels freely communicating with each other.

It is not possible that the high scale of wages, so long current in the United States, can be maintained without adequate protection against the competing products of lower-priced foreign labor. Free-traders know this quite as well as tariff men, but they keep the covers on their empty dishes, and hope to seduce laboring men to a Barmecide feast.

THE CAREER OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC MUST NOT BE UNDER BRITISH CONTROL.

Wishing no ill thing to Great Britain, and fully desirous to preserve the most amicable relations, as we must ever take a profound interest in the future as well as in the past history of the stock from which the American Republic derives its origin, yet Great Britain must be content with the guidance of her own great empire, and can not be permitted to dictate and control the career of the American Republic. We no longer borrow from her example. The time has come when we are able both to lend and to lead. Bismarck, the leading statesman of Europe, seems proud to openly declare that he would copy the American example of protection.

To borrow the recent words of our most charming of living poets, with reference to our British ancestors—

> We love, we honor the maternal dame,
> But let her priesthood wear a modest name
> While through the waters of the Pilgrim's bay
> A new-born Mayflower shows her keels the way.
> Too old grew Britain for her mother's beads—
> Must we be necklaced with her children's creeds?

I should answer, no! There is little in the present British financial policy that we could wish to transplant; and certainly we do not propose to play second-fiddle to her in the tune of free trade, to which all of her colonies refuse even a "tinkling cymbal."

What is there in the condition of her people, as the result of her financial economy, that Americans should envy? No country has recently suffered more from the depression of trade and industry than Great Britain. Her landed estates, overwhelmingly encumbered, have immensely diminished in value; her farming interests, if we may credit their own testimony, are nearly ruined; and, if we may believe Mr. Parnell, the fall there in the prices of their chief agricultural productions within the last two years has been extraordinary. Butter, he says, is down 27 per cent., beef 15 per cent., pork 20 per cent., mutton 18, wool 27½ and stock 20 per cent. This shows the gloomy condition of British farmers. Taxation there is largely direct and oppressive upon all classes, but especially so upon laboring men. In 1883 the revenue collected amounted to $13.75 per capita, while that of the United States was only $4.81. The interest charged upon her public debt was $4.21 per capita, while that of the United States in 1885 was only 83 cents. Great Britain supports over a million of paupers, not including vagrants and casual poor. Their police force in 1884 was 53,648, or more than twice that of the whole Army of the United States.

At one point, however, they appear more economical than we do, and that, possibly, not much to their credit. Notwithstanding the drumbeat of a British war seldom everywhere ceases, Great Britain annually doles out her gratitude to all of her scarred veterans in pensions and annuities only $1,958,715, while our latest appropriation for pensions amounted to $76,075,200. The great difference between the two countries in the annual accumulation of wealth—that is to say, the increase of the total product of a single year over that of the preceding one—is sufficient to justify the rejection of all theories of free trade. The amount of that annual increase, as derived from the highest authority, for Great Britain is $325,000,000, while that for the United States is no less than $825,000,000. Is not that the Alpha and Omega of the whole argument? This large surplus, annually earned, enables our people to make general progress in intellectual culture and in all the refinements of a higher civilization. Literature, philosophy, science, and the arts have in all ages radiated from the material prosperity of the community.

A GREAT WAR A STRAIN UPON COLONIES.

Any great war on the part of the British Empire will be a formidable strain upon the loyalty of their distant colonies, which then will be called upon to decide how long and how much they are to suffer for a cause beyond their control and for a quarrel with which they are wholly unrelated. The colonial system long ago made England great, but ran her deeply in debt. Free trade, once the strong navel-cord by which Great Britain held to her infant colonies, was cut and sundered by the latter when they got old enough to find that it carried no more nutrition to them than to the subjects of all other empires.

They are still colonies, but seem irrevocably determined no longer to be subject to all the spasms of maternal indigestion.

The Canadian Dominion is unlikely to seek admittance or to be admitted to any share in the imperial Government of Great Britain. Whenever any such national ambition, of which the germ is inherent in the Anglo-Saxon race, shall be asserted, the Canadian Dominion can be more largely gratified nearer home, where political, commercial, and social interests would more harmoniously blend and expand with a grander continental connection. Unity of interests largely control great events.

The economy and prosperity of the Dominion everywhere notably hinge upon friendly and closer relations with us. Time will make this more and more evident to each succeeding generation. Whether we or they now want it or not, a union with our northern brethren, however remote, is as inevitable in the fullness of time as the southern trend of a polar glacier, and, whenever offered, can not be resisted. It is a contingency which the future statesmen of both countries must be prepared to meet, and which the Dominion, hanging through the ice-bound half of the year on our skirts, will not forever postpone. They have been eager for free trade with us, but they will be not less eager for the fullest protection elsewhere. In defiance of the effervescent dogmatism of the mother country, they have witnessed, and to some extent tasted, the positive advantages of a protective tariff, and will not be likely to go where its advantages are mocked at and refused.

The Canadas may soon be constrained by events and by their late expensive experience, to abandon forever any further petulance and pouting designed to obtain—without practical compensation—by the sham of a reciprocity treaty, the world's most valuable market. Favoritism in foreign politics has forever ceased, and all nations must be treated with absolute equality. Reciprocity with Canada, in a truckle-bed with our grandmother, is not to be endured. We have once, nay twice, escaped from the reciprocity snare, and "Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird."

IN TIME OF WAR FREE TRADE A FAITHLESS ALLY.

War may not forever be avoided even by nations the most peacefully inclined. If it should ever come, let us not be found wholly unprepared, but promptly—to meet it with courage, joined with the complete outfit of a great and puissant nation. It is now evident to even the juniors among statesmen that any great nation, inspired with the generous hope of transmitting its institutions and independence to future generations, must be prepared from its own domestic resources to furnish and to refurnish at a moment's notice all that is necessary in a great war to meet the most formidable foes. Modern warfare has made the whole range of manufactures and the mechanic arts indispensable to its successful prosecution. Every minutiæ, and all the colossal paraphernalia, must be fore-ordained, and something more than flint-locks, something more than wooden gunboats, now make up the essential enginery for military and naval conflicts. Home supplies for any emergency must be at all times ample, even redundant, and instantly available. Free-trade, as our Southern brethren will testify, is a treacherous foreign attachment, and, in time of war, a wholly untrustworthy auxiliary.

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,

War is also frequently a practical embargo upon foreign supplies of all sorts, and when the mass of the people of any nation are long deprived of ordinary comforts, or perhaps of accustomed luxuries, they are apt to become impatient, and can not be so thoroughly relied upon to endure taxation and service in the support of even a just and patriotic war. Superiority in manufactures not only restores much of the terrible waste of modern warfare, but it gives to one belligerent prodigious advantages over the other, as it gave to France in Algiers, and to England in India.

FIFTY MILLIONS OF THE COLORED RACE.

By the middle of the coming century our colored population, based upon the percentage of increase from 1870 to 1880, will number more than fifty millions. What shall they do? What shall we do with them, or they with us? This is a problem to be seriously pondered. The race is entitled to our sympathy, to our pilotage, and its improvement can alone tend to remove future anxiety concerning its prolific growth. If this vast multitude shall have no other available branches of labor opened to them but that of untaught "field hands," the excessive aggregate products will bring profitless harvests and general ruin upon all those who may be engaged in kindred agricultural pursuits, whether near or remote. If, however, a reasonable portion of this race can be trained and employed in the mechanic arts and manufactures, made consumers of farming products instead of producers, the threatening competition with farmers may not only be avered, t but some measure of intelligence and thrift will have been secured to that portion of American citizens most in need of higher training and most exposed to pauperism. It is vain to deny that a protective tariff promotes a diversity of labor, or that such a diversity not only contributes to the prosperity and happiness of the greatest number, but like the summer rain and genial sunshine promotes even the fertility and increased value of land and its products.

FREE TRADE HAS NO CONCERN FOR THE GENERAL WELFARE.

The doctrine of free trade holds out no more good-will for the welfare, no more concern for the sorrows, of our people than for the welfare and sorrows of the inhabitants of Tonquin or of the Soudan, and encourages neither effort nor ambition among the lowly to climb up higher. The hewers of wood and the drawers of water must be content to remain hewers of wood and drawers of water forever. The foremost leaders in trade and capital are always to be foremost. Nations unskilled and unequipped with machinery, under the guidance of free-trade theorists must remain unskilled and unequipped, and submit to the invasion and vassalage of foreign manufactures as their fixed and inexorable destiny.

Free trade is the shibboleth of a "do-nothing" party, whose beatitude is to be free from all work, with freedom to buy and not to earn the necessaries of life. Its world is to be

As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean.

It does not seek to better its condition; is not courageously bent on absolute independence, and has no charioteers rushing to the goal of a higher destiny. Wherever free trade is written upon the walls, it is to be interpreted "God has numbered thy kingdom and finished it."

IMPORTING CITIES.

Cities, in the days of Jefferson, were held by him to be great national sores, and while it may be true that they are often the seats of science, of eloquence and of the elegant arts, it is equally true that they are seldom the seats of political health, and not always the abodes of all the virtues, but, along with shining lights, there is a superabundance of dark shadows. The growth of cities during the nineteenth century throughout the world has been phenomenal—that of many American cities the most resplendent of all; but this growth unfortunately appears to have been made too frequently at the expense of the rural districts, or by drafts upon the surrounding country. Free trade necessarily builds up a sect in large importing cities that contributes little or nothing to the growth of the interior portion of the country or to the life and health of the rural districts, and, to use the words of Cobbett, "If all other sects were to act like them the community must perish." Such cities, as fertile in millionaires, wealth, and grandeur as they may be, and as attractive in their elevated regions to society and culture as they may be, too often create only a stinted fertility outside of their own restricted boundaries. But they furnish without stint the funds of Cobden clubs to peddle revenue reform or free trade, and the peddler as well as the ass knoweth "his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."

As is well known, fully three-fourths of our importations of foreign merchandise are no longer in the name and hands of American-born citizens, and much of this business is adroitly done through foreign consignments to branches of foreign houses temporarily located in our cities, and defying all other competition. They have found more tempting profits from the sale and distribution of foreign merchandise than that which accrues from American products, subject as the latter must be to nearer, constant, and sharper competition. Insignificant as these foreign imports may be when contrasted with the larger amount of actual home manufactures in many cities, it is natural for those engaged in the trade of foreign merchandise to magnify its importance, and seek to perpetuate the dominance of their special line of business. The splendor of great warehouses overtops the show of many dust-covered workshops. An importer exclusively of foreign merchandise in our large cities, distributing the products of foreign labor only, may be almost as confidently counted a theoretical free-trader as a native of Bagdad may be counted as a Mohammedan. "Great is Haroun-al-Raschid and his prophet!"

A great importing metropolis, too often having officials with a trained rapacity for spoils, and leaders pushed by the ambition of personal and local aggrandizements, may be expected to espouse a policy that leaves the interior of the country wholly tributary to its monopoly of trade. But large importing cities, always the dumping places for foreign tramps, subject to great and frequent calamities, can only be prosperous while trade is prosperous; and when that is prostrate, filled with contagious panics, many bubbles burst and many fortunes vanish. The more permanent prosperity of cities, of which we have also many conspicuous examples, is based upon the stable industries and handicraft of those who, by their own labor, daily add to the wealth of the country and furnish home products instead of foreign to swell the volume of trade. These are truly American cities. Our pride, however, in the stateliness of great cities suffers serious abatement whenever they dominate and depopulate the country districts.

EXTINCTION OF THE PUBLIC DEBT, AND REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

It is apparent that the extinction of the public debt has proceeded so rapidly that no part of what remains can be paid, after the redemption of the "Windom 3 per cents," at the option of the Government; and, therefore, a temporary surplus of revenue may then be inevitable. The question arises, What shall be done with it? This is a fair question, and seems to point to a difficulty of easy solution. Some part of the surplus must unquestionably be used for the new navy and for seaboard defenses, and after that the fraction of internal-revenue duties on tobacco, being one of the only two articles still subject to any war duties, may be wholly surrendered. The consumption of tobacco adds much to the cost of living of workingmen; and to them the repeal of this tax would be a substantial boon, however desirable we may think their total abstention from its use might be. Such a repeal would also relieve the Government from the expensive support of a large corps of revenue officers.

Another subject worthy of national consideration is that of sugar, one of the foremost necessaries of life, and, though never cheaper than to-day, we must remember that it has been cheapened solely by the protection given to the product abroad. We are the largest consumers of sugar in the world, and, like Great Britain, pay the highest prices for it. The cost of 45 pounds of sugar for each one of our inhabitants should be reduced. We ought to have the skill and courage to find for all this a comprehensive remedy. It may be said that sugar is only the product of the tropics; but sorghum and beets certainly are not. The annual drain upon the country for 2,428,541,191 pounds of foreign sugar is too great. The domestic production of more sugar should somehow be liberally and, for a time, even extravagantly, encouraged, and its cost to consumers at the same time largely diminished. To this end the duties on raw sugars might be either wholly removed or cut down to the lowest point from all countries which do not impose export duties; and then a generous bounty granted to all domestic sugars from whatever produced.

Such a bounty has secured to the greater part of Europe not only cheap sugar, but so cheap as to offer a considerable surplus for exportation. In the past year we have received from Germany beet-sugar to the amount of $4,000,000; and in the same year we have gratuitously surrendered $4,200,000 of duties on sugar to Hawaiian adventurers, who have destroyed all present hope of beet-sugar culture in California.

Some measure in accordance with these suggestions, without abandonment of protection to domestic sugars, could not fail to reduce "the cost of living in every family of the land." We may also not forget that most of the countries from which we now obtain sugar sweeten us with little else, for they offer a very limited market to any American products.

A proper revision of the tariff at an early day will be eminently desirable; but the work should not be intrusted to those who are color-blind, and who can see nothing but reduction or abandonment of all duties, when it is equally clear that a revision should respond to all the exigencies of trade and industry, and include the re-enforcement of some of the provisions of existing law known to be ineffectual or erroneous according to present executive interpretation. An excessive reduction of duties one year which forces their reimposition the next year would be nothing else than a calamity. The removal of the duty on wool to-day, and a duty on tea and coffee to-morrow, would seem to be a part of the tariff-reform programme, while I would suggest a tariff revision which would leave our industries and labor unharmed and prosperous.

A DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION AND A REPUBLICAN.

After a Democratic Administration, long in power, had destroyed the credit of the Government, leaving it in 1861 with an empty treasury, and with a broken-backed Democratic tariff, which was found incapable, even in time of peace, of furnishing revenue for the ordinary support of the Government, the Republican party was intrusted with the control of the country, and for a quarter of a century, confronted by unexampled difficulties, during one of the greatest epochs of our history, won enduring fame, in addition to its patriotic achievements, by the integrity, skill, and success with which it conducted the financial affairs of the nation.

On the 4th of March, 1885, the Republican party handed over to Democratic successors the administration of the Government in a condition of unequaled credit, with an overflowing treasury, and with a tariff so invulnerable that its free-trade opponents propose to change it because it is only too fertile in producing revenue, wholly unmindful, as they appear to be, of their own prodigal aptitudes as national spendthrifts.

In 1860 the revenue from customs was $52,692,421, and the cost of its collection was 6.27 per cent. In 1885 this revenue amounted to $178,151,601, and the cost of collection was only 3.58 per cent.

From 1855 to 1860, inclusive, the excess of coin and bullion exports over imports was $298,607,884; but from 1880 to 1885, inclusive, this was reversed and the excess of coin and bullion imports over exports was $128,807,687. For the large stock of gold the country now holds, of over five hundred and fifty millions, we are wholly indebted to our present tariff; and for the rapid reduction of the public debt, the lion's share must also be credited to the tariff.

In 1860 the amount of both imports and exports of merchandise was $687,192,176; but in 1885 the amount of both imports and exports had increased to $1,319,717,084, with an excess of exports of over $165,000,000. The student of political economy will not fail to observe the significance of these remarkable figures, or the contrast of the former unsound with the later healthy condition of trade; and no more infallible proof can be offered of the national utility and efficiency of a protective tariff. It may be truly said to have touched the heads of our people only as a benediction. The paramount credit for the financial measures which have been so long and are now so closely identified with the growth and prosperity of the country, unquestionably belongs to the Republican party, and there is no other party—

Whose yesterdays look back with a smile.

The Executive Department of the Government early officially proclaimed its policy on civil service and on the silver question; but it is to be feared they at once let it be understood that these were only Pickwickian declarations, or that the administration dropped its eggs, like the ostrich, with no subsequent care whether they hatch or not, and that their friends were at liberty to favor or to oppose any action upon either subject, to win on "heads" or "tails," with no fear of diminishing their personal shadows in any future applications for the places of "offensive partisans," provided they maintained true allegiance at the polls to the present administration. On the tariff question, however, the official declarations are supposed to be enforced with greater rigor, and rebellious recusants seem to have seats at the lower end of the table.

If the Democratic party shall fully accept the leadership of the second-hand retailers of free trade, whose economic theories, almost throughout the universe, have won the contempt of legislators, and shall ignore the inspiration and prestige which a protective tariff has afforded to our country, as illustrated by all of the progressive records of the past, it will be greatly regretted; but no one need despair of the Republic so long as there is any party visible which honestly and firmly strives to bring into full play the intelligence, genius, invention, and industry of a great people—a party not ashamed to uphold a tariff as the sure presage of victory, which offers some protection, first, last, and forever, to the honor, welfare, and prosperity of our own native land.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the regular order may be laid before the Senate, so that it will be the pending business, and then I have no objection to its being informally laid aside for the further consideration of the pending resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EUSTIS in the chair). The Senator from Connecticut asks that the regular order be laid before the Senate. It will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 789) granting a pension to John S. Williams.

Mr. PLATT. No; the regular order for to-day I suppose to be the special order relating to executive sessions.

Mr. BLAIR. The regular order is the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. The unfinished business, I think, of yesterday was the resolution reported from the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. BLAIR. That was agreed and ordered to be the unfinished business; but it is not so printed on the Calendar this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. If that is the unfinished business it is the regular order to be laid before the Senate, if anything is laid before the Senate at this time.

Mr. PLATT. What I desire is that the special order——

Mr. BECK. I shall not occupy ten minutes, and in the mean time it can be ascertained what is the regular order. Ten minutes will be all I care to occupy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. PLATT. I withdraw the request for the present.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not propose to make a speech on the tariff. It will be a relief to the Senate to know that; therefore I announce the fact; but as I have been specially noticed by the Senator from Vermont, I must be allowed to say a few words. The chairman of the Committee on Finance has evidently spent his vacation with great pleasure and profit to himself, and I hope also to the edification of the country. He has laid before us his annual essay, full of tropes, figures, jokes, and puns.

I was a little afraid that the page boys—but they are very well behaved—would ring their chestnut-bells on him several times; they did not. He has shown this time, as an adjunct to his usual investigations, that he has studied the Bible somewhat carefully; that no doubt has been both profitable and agreeable to him. His quotations from Holy Writ constitute the most edifying and interesting parts of the elaborate essay which he has just read to us. I have no doubt that it will be sent, as it has been at the beginning of each session, by the hundred thousand in pamphlet form, by the protective leagues of the country to every household to prove that all so-called free-traders have been annihilated, that the Cobden Club and its emissaries can not be trusted, and it will be quoted to prove how extensively British gold is being used in the Senate and elsewhere in corrupting all who differ from their champion. All that will be very edifying to the honest yeomanry, and the gentlemen who are so much benefited by these periodical essays will take care that this last and greatest effort is widely and judiciously circulated.

As to all that, I have no particular complaint to make; but what I desire to know, and the main object I have in saying anything, is to ask whether the Senator from Vermont proposes to advise his friends here and in the other House (because I take that to be the scope of his resolution) to resist all efforts which may be made toward the consideration of a bill looking to the reduction of taxation. We all know, and the country knows, that when a bill is once legitimately before the other House, where it must originate, it can be modified and changed and put in such shape as the wisdom of the two Houses of Congress, whatever that is, may think the good of the country requires. If this essay has been read for the purpose of encouraging his friends at the other end of the Capitol to resist all efforts looking to the reduction of taxation in any form, then the country may as well understand that we are to be forestalled and prevented from considering any measure having that object in view.

At the last session of this Congress a vote was taken to determine whether Congress should be allowed to consider the question, and one hundred and thirty-six Democrats voted in favor of the right to consider, and they were supported by only four Republicans. The particular bill presented was of course subject to all sorts of modifications, yet only four Republican Representatives were willing to consider the question. Now, I ask, is it proposed that nothing shall be done at this session, and that the majority here shall again, under the leadership of the Senator from Vermont, resist the bringing up of any bill proposing reduction of taxation in any form for consideration?

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator could not have listened to my speech.

Mr. BECK. I thought I listened carefully.

Mr. MORRILL. If he had he would have heard what I proposed and what I am ready to accede to. I only desired to show that I was opposed to such propositions as I have seen presented from Democratic sources, and should of course continue to be opposed to those; but I am quite ready to unite with any party that will take hold of the subject in the spirit which I suggested toward the close of my speech.

Mr. BECK. Then, the first thing, of course, to be done, in order to have any proposition considered, is to advise your friends to vote for the consideration of some measure which can be debated. When any measure seeking to reduce taxation is once up it can be modified to suit the views of the Senator from Vermont if the majority agree with him, and it can be modified to suit my views, assuming that I will differ with him if a majority agree with me. It is obvious that as long as there is successful resistance to the consideration of any proposition that is the end of all effort looking to the reduction of taxes in any form.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator will see at once that we are not the originating body of a tariff bill; it must come from the other House, and is only to be criticised and amended by us.

Mr. BECK. When the leader of the Senate on financial questions, the chairman of the Committee on Finance of this body, announces in advance in resolutions and by speeches that nothing ought to be attempted to improve existing conditions, and opposes everything that is suggested anywhere for fear that some measure will pass which he does not favor, his speech, of course, rallies his friends in advance to oppose any bill which does not embody his views. Does he propose to do that? I insist that this condition of things is made apparent by the message of the President and by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury; that by legislation heretofore had, when the distinguished Senator from Vermont was chairman of the Committee on Finance and the present Presiding Officer of the Senate was his chief supporter and at one time chairman himself, the debt of the United States was so arranged that after the present 3 percents are paid not one dollar of the public debt can be paid at par until 1891, and then only $250,000,000. When that sum is paid no more can be paid off as a matter of right until 1907, when the balance of $738,000,000 matures.

We all know that under the system of taxation which has been maintained in order to protect the pets of Congress, that every dollar that can be paid before 1891 has been paid, except $64,000,000; that the surplus now collected under the present rate of taxation amounts to $125,000,000 a year; that the balance of the 3 percents, of which only $64,000,000 remain unpaid, will be paid, indeed must be paid, before the end of the present fiscal year; therefore, four years must elapse from the time the last dollar that can be paid is disposed of before we can pay another dollar on our debt, unless we buy the bonds at any premium the holders see fit to ask. Therefore the Democratic President and Secretary of the Treasury, and, I may add, the great mass of the Democratic party, insist, indeed demand, that the taxation now imposed on the people during Republican rule shall be reduced. There is no way to get clear of a constantly increasing surplus in our revenue honestly except by reduction of taxation.

Of course we could lock it up in the Treasury, but that means bankruptcy by contracting much-needed circulation. We could, by Congressional action, make extravagant appropriations; that means corruption. We could pay premiums of 20, 30, 40, or 50 per cent. to bondholders in order to induce them to part with the bonds they hold before they are due; but that is extortion and swindling of the tax-payers to benefit a few men who hold our obligations. Therefore we are compelled, if we are honest representatives and intend to deal honestly with the people, to reduce the taxes now imposed to the point needed for an economical administration of the Government. That does not involve any question of free trade any more than it involves questions of prohibition of imports from abroad. All our public officials insist, and I agree with them, that we shall collect by internal revenue and tariff taxation all that this Government needs for its proper administration. Beyond that no Senator will venture under existing conditions to demand or even justify the collection of any surplus, because we have, as I have already said, either to pay any premium demanded on the bonds not due, or waste the money in extravagant appropriations, or, worse than either, lock it up in the Treasury.

Now, what I want to know is, does the Senator from Vermont oppose giving us a chance to make an honest effort to reduce taxes? The whole scope and burden of his speech is in that direction. If he means anything, the meaning of his speech is to advise his followers to stand where they are now, let the consequences be what they may. His plea is, do not reduce taxation, or if you do, he mildly suggests at last, take taxes off such articles as tobacco. I do not know whether he included whisky or not, but those are the only two articles now paying an internal-revenue tax. He knows that every dollar collected from whisky and tobacco goes into the Treasury, less the cost of collection, which is very small. Nobody needs to pay a tax on whisky or tobacco unless he wants to do so, as nobody pays the tax but the consumer of either. But the Senator prefers that all that shall be given up by the Government in order to keep a 90 per cent. tax on blankets, 69 per cent. on the clothing of the people, an average of 46 per cent. on all the raw materials that our manufacturers need in order to open foreign markets. The Senator's policy is to build up and enrich, by legislation, a few men out of the taxes thus collected, to the detriment of the great mass of the American people.

He admits, and the mass of his party seem to be willing to admit, that Congress should close the American market against foreign importations, upon the ground that they are protecting American labor, when in fact they are starving American labor by limiting production, which is now largely the work of machinery, and excluding our people from competing with the citizens of other countries in the markets of the world, where there are fifteen hundred millions of people to supply. The Senator from Vermont is sustained in his position by his equally distinguished compeer, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. In a speech, which he was kind enough to send me in pamphlet form, made at Portsmouth, Ohio, on the 29th of September, he used substantially the same language. I shall read only an extract from it to illustrate. He said:

> You might ask me what rate of duty I would impose. My only answer is that I would give to every article for which we have in this country the raw material and facilities for manufacture such a rate of protection as would give to the American producer the American market, leaving free competition among Americans to reduce the price and finally to give a foreign market through home competition. This rule I would apply impartially and justly without distinction as to the sections of the country, or as to the nature and character of the production, whether of the farm or of the workshop.

In other words, his proposition is to exclude all imports, even if purchased with the proceeds of our agricultural exports. All the surplus products of our farms have to go abroad. Six hundred million dollars' worth of wheat, tobacco, cotton, provisions, beef, and the other produce of American farms has to go to foreign markets and there be sold in competition with like products raised by the pauper labor of the world at starvation wages. Yet we are told that our farmers, or those to whom they sell, shall not with the money they get for American-raised goods buy what they need where it is offered to them for 50 per cent. less than is demanded here, but shall bring the money they get home and pay whatever prices combinations of manufacturers may ask, even though no revenue shall be obtained by the Government, which gets nothing unless the exporter finds it cheaper to pay this foreign price and the tariff tax than it is to buy here. Each sale abroad is made on individual account, and each man does the best he can for himself. Government is only a toll-gate keeper. Prohibition produces no revenue; free trade produces none. Our proposition is to have the revenues needed for the Government collected by tariff taxes in such a way as to do our own people the least harm, because all taxes in any form hurt the home producer and consumer. We seek to bring up some measure to see if we can not produce that result. That seems to be what the Senator from Vermont is afraid we will accomplish, and that apprehension is perhaps the excuse for the lecture he has so elaborately prepared and so solemnly uttered in our hearing to-day.

Perhaps the Senator from Vermont may think that what I am about to read was spoken by a member of the Cobden Club, or by somebody bought with British gold. He can ascertain whether that is true or not by inquiring of one of his colleagues. There is a great deal of common sense in it, and I commend it to the Senator from Vermont:

Every advance toward a free exchange of commodities is an advance in civilization. Every obstruction to a free exchange is born of the same narrow, despotic spirit which planted castles upon the Rhine to plunder peaceful commerce. Every obstruction to commerce is a tax upon consumption; every facility to a free exchange cheapens commodities, increases trade and production, and promotes civilization. Nothing is worse than sectionalism within a nation, and nothing is better for the peace of nations than unrestricted freedom of intercourse and commerce with each other.

What member of the Cobden Club does the Senator from Vermont think uttered that? Whose gold bought the man that dared in the Senate to utter such a heresy? It was uttered by Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, of Ohio, in a very elaborate and able report made by him on the 9th of June, 1868, being report of committee, No. 117, second session, Fortieth Congress, when he was struggling to have gold, and gold alone, adopted as the measure of value of our commodities.

I was about to read somewhat extensively from the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury, but I will not. I commend it, however, not only to the Senate but to the country. We are, says the Secretary, compelled to reduce taxes. No Senator dare assert that we can keep up the present rate of taxation without damage to the country. Among other things the Secretary says, and no one will venture to deny the truth of the assertion—

It is actually the war rates of the war tariff of the last generation under which we are now living; for the undebated, unsifted law of 1883, made by a conference committee, did but keep alive the body of the tariff of 1864.

The average percentage of the taxes on, to the values of, imported commodities has been as follows:

Morrill tariff of 1859–'61 (before the war) was	18.84 per cent.
War tariff of 1862–'64 (in 1866 was highest) was	48.35 per cent.
Present prolonged war tariff (was in 1885)	46.07 per cent.

The Secretary does not misstate the facts when he says that the tariff under which we are living was made by a (one-sided, packed) conference committee, because we all know, and the country knows, that many of the important provisions were changed by that conference committee against the known will of both Houses. In many instances rates of taxation were imposed higher than either House had proposed or agreed to, and paragraphs were inserted covering whole classes of goods that neither House ever saw. That conference report brought on a controversy between the two distinguished Senators from Vermont and Ohio, in which each went to his friendly party newspaper and charged the other with getting more than his share, or not standing up to the bargain alleged to have been made in the secrecy of their conference. We have a right to have the doors opened by a new bill in order to look into the truth of these charges and counter charges. I hope these distinguished gentlemen will urge their friends to aid us. Again the Secretary says, and the statement is not only true but full of wisdom:

But no foreign nation taxes raw materials. Such taxes injure home industries, in which those materials are worked up and increased in value by home labor. Such taxes on raw materials, instead of excluding foreign competition from the home market, put our own employers of labor at a great disadvantage in the home market, and a greater disadvantage in every foreign market, compared with the foreigner employing labor upon untaxed raw materials.

"Protection" is also a misnomer. It implies superiority elsewhere. That superiority over any great industry of ours does not exist upon the globe. It implies infants here and adults elsewhere. Such is not our reputation. It implies that amid competition universal, where the fittest survive, we shall perish. But it is everywhere else believed that whenever we shall release ourselves from bad laws and enter that competition unmanacled, rivals will be distanced, and our primacy established in the markets and commerce of the world.

Knowing that direct taxation is neither attainable nor desirable, I believe in reasonable tariff taxation. I only ask that it be reduced to the point which will produce the revenues required by the Government. That done, I believe we can, as we have in times gone by, control our full share of trade in the markets of the world, and that our laboring men can be employed twelve months instead of five or six in the year, as they are now. With extended markets they will not be locked out by strikes, which are too frequently organized by manufacturing companies because of an overproduction of goods needed in this limited market, until scarcity resulting from non-production will increase the price of the stock on hand, the goods of the world being excluded from competition by prohibitory tariff taxation.

There are many other things in the report of the Secretary to which I should like to call attention, but, as I said, I do not propose arguing these questions now.

All the pretense of aiding American labor will, I feel assured, be exposed whenever the tariff question is open to debate. Intelligent investigation has exposed that plausible humbug. It will be shown that the men who are clamoring so loudly for the protection of American labor have been systematically importing the cheapest labor they could find from all parts of the world, and driving out the American workmen from the factories in which they were once employed, because they can get foreigners at a lower rate than American laborers will work for; and that, too, after they had obtained increased protection for the avowed purpose of giving the home laborer additional pay. Pools and combinations to diminish production is the rule rather than the exception, all to enhance prices and charges, while labor is starving. I have heard it stated that in the State of my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] factory after factory had given up American laborers and employed foreigners, after having the tariff bounty enlarged in order to protect American labor. We all know that it is a common occurrence.

I do not know that the hypocrisy of the manufacturers was ever better illustrated than by the old story (told, I believe, in the campaign of General Hancock), when a protected employer was driven to the polls by one of his operatives, and asked him, "How are you going to vote?" when the employé answered, "I am going to vote for General Hancock." Said the employer, "If you do, and these free-traders obtain possession of the Government, your wages will be reduced 25 per cent." The man looked at him and said, "I do not believe a word of that, and if you did you would vote for him yourself." That was a true statement of the case.

The protected pets of Congress have hunted cheap labor everywhere at home and abroad. They never pay a penny more than they are compelled by the competition of laborers with each other, but they are content with a monopoly of this market and with the power Congress gives them to compel the American people to pay 50 per cent. more than any other people pay for like goods in any other country in the world. They have given up all effort to trade with foreign nations. The Senator from Vermont in reading his Bible might have looked further. I observed from his quotations that he had been studying it, and I thought perhaps he had failed to notice a very instructive chapter in 2d Chronicles, where Solomon, who had the reputation of being a wise man, sent to Huram, King of Tyre, asking him to swap work. I will read it for his edification. I think I read it once before.

3. And Solomon sent to Huram, the King of Tyre, saying, As thou didst deal with David my father, and didst send him cedars to build him an house to dwell therein, even so deal with me.

* * * * * * *

5. And the house which I build is great: for great is our God above all gods.

6. But who is able to build him an house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens can not contain him? who am I then, that I should build him an house, save only to burn sacrifice before him?

7. Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and in crimson, and blue, and that can skill to grave with the cunning men that are with me in Judah and in Jerusalem, whom David my father did provide.

8. Send me also cedar trees, fir trees, and algum trees, out of Lebanon: for I know that thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon; and, behold, my servants shall be with thy servants.

9. Even to prepare me timber in abundance: for the house which I am about to build shall be wonderful great.

10. And, behold, I will give to thy servants, the hewers that cut timber, twenty thousand measures of beaten wheat, and twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil.

11. Then Huram, the King of Tyre, answered in writing, which he sent to Solomon, Because the Lord hath loved his people, he hath made thee king over them.

12. Huram said moreover, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, that made heaven and earth, who hath given to David the king a wise son, endued with prudence and understanding, that might build an house for the Lord, and an house for his kingdom.

13. And now I have sent a cunning man, endued with understanding, of Huram my father's.

14. The son of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was a man of Tyre, skillful to work in gold, and in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber, in purple, in blue, and in fine linen, and in crimson; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him, with thy cunning men, and with the cunning men of my lord David thy father.

15. Now therefore the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, which my lord hath spoken of, let him send unto his servants.

16. And we will cut wood out of Lebanon, as much as thou shalt need: and we will bring it to thee in flotes by sea to Joppa; and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem.

Mr. MCPHERSON. That was reciprocity.

Mr. BECK. It was free trade, fair trade, reciprocity—a common-sense way of dealing. Call it what you like. I would commend it, as I have commended it before, to the Senator from Vermont. Instead of requiring us to build glass houses to enable him to raise oranges and lemons in Vermont, and sell them to this people at ten cents apiece, and keep everybody from interfering with him, let him content himself with raising potatoes, which he can raise by the grace of God with the natural heat of the sun, send the potatoes to Cuba and buy oranges in return, and let the people have them at one cent apiece instead of ten, and the people of Vermont will be better off, the people of Cuba better off, the whole country better off. I protest against his drawing himself into his shell and protecting American labor, as is often done under the existing tariff, in fields where it is neither profitable nor fair that our people ought to be required to work.

But, as I said, ten minutes were all I cared to occupy. I may conclude to answer the essay of the Senator from Vermont some day. In the mean time I hope the country will take notice whether the Republican gentlemen here and at the other end of the Capitol propose to give us a chance to bring up any measure which will enable us to discuss these questions, or whether they are going to ally themselves with a few of our party friends who will not vote with the body of the Democrats, and thus prevent us from bringing it up and prevent discussion altogether. That course would leave the present great surplus to be used for the purpose of buying bonds at any premium their friends, the bondholders, may demand; for that, I suppose, will be the ultimatum. Again, I would like to know whether Senators are going to keep up the so-called sacred sinking fund we have heard so much of, when we have paid all we were required, and have applied over $500,000,000 more than anybody pretends we promised, when there is no bond that we can buy, except at a premium, until 1891.

I may as well call attention to the fact now that I have pending before the Committee on Finance a bill, which I hope the Senate will consider, to repeal the existing sinking-fund law, as we have not only done all we could be asked to do, but infinitely more, for the interests of those whom the gentlemen have held themselves up as the special guardians of. To illustrate: By collecting so much under the pretense of needing it for the sinking fund, our bonds have been bought more rapidly than they ought to have been, because, having adjusted the time of their payment so that we can pay no more after the 3 percents are paid until 1891, when the four-and-a-halfs become due; and then no more until 1907, when the 4 percents become due, in order to get the money out of the Treasury we have been forced to take from the national banks, which have grown up to be part of our monetary system, and which have been furnishing very much of the circulation to the country, bonds which were the basis of their circulation, until in the last three years the national banks have been compelled to contract their circulation $100,000,000 at a time when the people were demanding and needing expansion to at least that amount over former years, instead of ruinous contraction not only because of the growth of the country, but because of its extending commerce; yet by the system of taxation which has been maintained and by the pretended necessity for a sinking fund (which, as I said, is now over $500,000,000 in excess of all its requirements), these bonds had to be taken up, and the banks are unable to-day to buy the fours and four-and-a-halfs, because of the excessive premium which is being demanded for them. Thus the country has been deprived of $100,000,000 of bank circulation in the last three years, $56,000,000 of it in the last twelve months, and yet no step is to be taken to give any relief from any of these evils. But, Mr. President, if I go on I will be tempted to make a speech sure enough, and I agreed not to do that, and therefore will say no more just now.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Kentucky is so excited over a resolution introduced by me and made up bodily from the Democratic platform. My only purpose was to show the great difference between the promises of the Democratic party and the execution of that party, and to show also the unwisdom and folly of accepting any projet that has yet been presented for the reduction of the revenue, the wrong and the injustice it would do to the country to adopt any such proposition as we have heretofore seen presented. Of course we can not consider anything here until it comes to us from the other House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, as I entered the Senate Chamber after a temporary absence, I heard the familiar voice of my friend from Kentucky begging in the name of the Democratic party for a chance to reduce taxation.

Since the opening of the present Congress, I watched for over eight months of a long and weary session for a proposition by the Democratic party to reduce taxation.

I believe that the revenues collected by the Government of the United States are too large, and that the public safety and the public interest demand a wise and careful reduction of taxation. There is no dispute between parties on that subject. There is no man of ordinary information who, upon the face of the returns sent to us from the Treasury Department, does not feel that we are now collecting more taxes, internal and external, than are necessary to carry on the operations of the Government. That fact is patent upon its face, is not disputed anywhere; but where is a plan to reduce taxation? Who has the power to propose that plan? The Democratic party. They have been trusted with this power by the people of this country upon a promise that they would reduce taxation, and in such a way as not to affect injuriously the industries of the country. That promise is stated in the platform of the Democratic party, stated in the language of its President, stated in the stump speeches of its orators, but the trouble is they have not proposed a plan—they can not propose a plan, they can not agree among themselves.

When the Republican party had both Houses we did propose a reduction of taxation, and did bring about a reduction of taxation. In the Congress before the last a reduction of taxation of some fifty or sixty millions of dollars was made; but since the Democratic party came into power with a promise to still further reduce taxation they have not been able to propose a plan. Indeed, the propositions made in the House of Representatives—we may consider them now, or speak of them as matter of public debate—have been so diverse and various and some of them so absolutely ruinous to the industries of our country that the party itself revolted from the measure proposed. And let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that if the plan proposed by a majority of the Democratic party in the other House had been sanctioned by the Congress of the United States and been carried into effect it would have been the overthrow and destruction of the Democratic party. While its scheme might have reduced taxation, it would destroy many industries of our country and thus defeat the very object supposed to be had in view.

Why, Mr. President, how idle and foolish it is for the Senator from Kentucky, high in the favor of the Democratic party, to talk to us about a chance to reduce taxation. They have the House of Representatives by a majority of I do not know how many; they have had it for ten years out of twelve. The only reduction of taxes that has been made in that time was made by the Republican party during the two years it had power in both Houses out of the last ten years. Then we did reduce the taxes and did give an enormous relief from needless burdens. Although some of the provisions of that bill in my judgment were wrong and injurious, yet I voted for it in spite of the evil provisions of the bill, for the reason that it did reduce taxation.

Now, here we have a party in power, and a great and leading member of that party talking to us as if we were responsible for a failure to reduce taxation.

The Senator from Kentucky voted against the only proposition for the reduction of taxes that has been pending in the Senate for ten years because he did not have it in his own way, because he did not have it in a way that according to the opinion of the majority would be absolutely ruinous to the industries of the country, to the laboring men of the country, to the manufacturing and commercial classes. The only bill that was offered to reduce taxation and that did accomplish a reduction of taxation to the extent of fifty or sixty millions of dollars was voted against and opposed to the bitter end by that Senator.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say that I voted for the bill, as the RECORD will show, but when it was changed and manipulated in a conference committee I voted against their act.

Mr. SHERMAN. So far did the Democratic members of the Senate go in their opposition to that bill that they refused to allow their members to serve on committees of conference, and for the first time, I believe, in the political history of this country that party refused to allow and disallowed one after another of its leading members to serve on a committee of conference, where the matter might have been rectified if there was any wrong.

No, sir; in the only attempt that has been made to reduce taxes in this country for ten years, when the Republican party had a bare majority in both Houses, a reduction was made of $60,000,000, and that reduction was opposed by the Senator from Kentucky. Not only was it so opposed, but it was opposed in violation of the ordinary parliamentary law, which requires members of the Senate to serve on committees of conference and others. By their refusal to serve it was necessary to organize the committee of conference of Republicans alone on the part of the Senate, in order to bring about an agreement on a bill reducing taxes $60,000,000. True, there were Democratic conferees on the part of the other House.

Now, if they want to reduce taxes, where is their proposition? None has been made. One was made by a majority of the Democratic members of the other House at the last session, but, as I will show hereafter, if I allude to it at all, that bill had provisions in it which would have been utterly destructive to great industrial interests, and therefore the people of this country were opposed to it. Another proposition was made by another branch of the Democratic party, having in view another line of reduction, which the people were opposed to. That is the proposed reduction of the tax upon whisky and tobacco, to which there is more or less opposition, and on which there is more or less division of opinion.

Until the Democratic party, having a large majority in the House of Representatives, can send to us a bill, we have no jurisdiction here. It is true we have the liberty of debate; but we have nothing to debate about except the resolution of my friend from Vermont. What is that? A simple expression of his opinion that upon the basis of the propositions that have been made in the House by the Democratic party, it is better to do nothing than to do what they propose. That is what I understand my friend from Vermont to say, and I say so too. That is the proposition. But upon the main question that there is an absolute and imperative duty resting upon Congress to reduce taxation, I have proclaimed here year in and year out, and I do now, that when I have a chance to reduce taxes, I will do it. I return the cry to my friend from Kentucky give us a chance, you have the power; the House of Representatives is the sole organ of the people of the United States by whom taxes can be levied or taxes can be reduced.

The Senate at one time contended that we had the power to reduce taxation, although we had not the power to propose taxes, but the House of Representatives refused to grant us that power. They said the power to reduce implied also the power to increase, and therefore we have no power to introduce any bill whatever either to repeal or to raise taxes. So we awaited the action of the House of Representatives for eight long months at the last session, and we waited in vain. The propositions, quarreled over by our Democratic friends, when carried before the people of this country, and now pending in the House of Representatives, created a revulsion in public opinion in large portions of the country, especially in the Northwest, that has reduced the large majority of the Democratic party somewhat, but not so much as it ought to have done; but if they had been able to carry their measures through, their majority would have disappeared into thin air.

Therefore, Mr. President, until some proposition is made to us from the House of Representatives it does not lie in the mouth of the Senator from Kentucky to complain of us, or to scold us, or to chide us, with a failure to reduce taxes. Give us a chance. I make to him the same appeal that he has made to us. He asks for a chance. Let him give us a chance. Let him go and lecture the members of the House of Representatives, call his brethren together and get them to unite on some platform, and I venture to say that when they do agree on a plan for the reduction of taxes it will be a plan for the destruction of American industry, not for the purpose of reducing taxes.

Sir, look at the report of the Secretary of the Treasury which has been laid on our tables and which I have read. What does he say there about the proposition to reduce taxes? His first measure is to wipe out of existence the greenback currency of the United States, to redeem and cancel it by applying the surplus revenue in that way. How many votes would that proposition get among the people of the United States?

The Democratic Senators and Members do not, any of them, seem to act upon the same principles that control the executive branch of the Government now in power. The Senator from Kentucky is opposed to calling in the greenbacks. How does he propose to reduce taxes? In general terms, he is in favor of free trade, free trade in its broadest sense, free trade in its almost unlimited extent, the reduction of duties on all those articles that we can make in this country, and that we ought to make in this country, and can make as cheap in this country if we choose to reduce the wages of our laboring men and measure their labor by the wages paid in Europe. That is what they mean.

But not only that; the Secretary takes up two items particularly to comment upon and to illustrate his argument. Here he finds that we are collecting the enormous sum of $5,000,000 of duties on wool. He wants that duty abolished at once. Five million dollars will be an enormous relief by abolishing the tax on wool! Why, Senators, that touches the industries of more than a million of farmers, who believe they have a right for their industry the same degree of protection that is meted out to any other branch of production. That we have the power and the means and the facilities in this country to raise all the wool of certain grades necessary for domestic manufacture, and for foreign manufacture as well, is true. But now, owing to the provisions of our tariff law, we import wool enough, mainly as carpet wool, to yield $5,000,000 of revenue. That he would abolish, and make wool free, and thus bring our farmers into sharp and hard competition with wool grown all over the world, on the pampas of South America or the plains of Australia, he would do that in order to give relief to the people from $5,000,000 of taxes!

But then, when you turn and show that we import an article upon which we levy fifty-odd million dollars of revenue, the repeal of the duty on which alone would wipe out nearly all the surplus revenue that is now complained of, with the exception of that portion known by the sinking fund—the whole balance estimated by Mr. Manning is about fifty or sixty million dollars—we levy that on sugar alone; and when the mere suggestion is made that it is better, under the circumstances, to repeal the duty on sugar and make that article free, and place it where coffee and tea now stand, that is met with a loud cry of dissent.

Why is that? Is there any local influence, any sectional motive, any party interest there involved? If so, let us face it and meet it. Is the Senator from Kentucky in favor of the repeal of the duty on sugar—to make that free? I have not heard him answer that question yet. Here is an opportunity, if they will only give us a chance, by which we could at once wipe out this large unnecessary surplus revenue. But no; that is not what is wanted. It is not to reduce taxes.

The Senator from Kentucky and I could sit down and in five minutes we could select two or three articles now taxed and make them free, by which we would be able to strike off from the people a direct burden of taxation, and thus relieve us from this surplus revenue. In doing so we would relieve our people from a direct and oppressive tax. Sugar in all its forms should be as free as tea and coffee, and for the same reasons. If sugar could be produced in this country by any skill or aid whatever that industry could give to it—if we had the soil, the climate, and the means of producing sugar in this country—then I would be in favor of maintaining the system of protection in order to build up our sugar industry. If we had so developed our sorghum production, if we had so developed our beet-root sugar, or other means of raising sugar in this country, I should be in favor of maintaining this duty in order to build up a domestic industry wherever it might be carried on; but a long experience of thirty or forty years shows that we can not produce sugar and we have not been able yet to produce it.

In Germany and France they a e already producing sugar, although their climate is less favorable than ours, because they give high bounties to the producers of sugar. In this country there is a prejudice against building up industries by bounties, and therefore no one is bold enough to propose it, no one does propose it; and the result is that we do not raise in this country, with all the high protection that is given to it, a rate equal to 60 per cent., more than one-eighth part of our domestic consumption. It varies between one-twelfth and one-eighth. That is all we produce. Why not wipe out this tax? They say it is an injustice to the sugar planters of the South. So say I, and I should be willing, even if it is unpopular, to declare that I would give to the sugar planters of the South a fair and reasonable bounty, say 2 cents a pound on what they can produce. But it is shown by long trial that they can not produce enough to even make the sugar-candy of our country, much less to supply the great body of our people with that article of prime necessity in every home and family. If, therefore, the object is the reduction of taxes, why not take such an article that yields enormous sums and repeal the duty on it? But that is not the object.

All this is a subterfuge—not intended as such. I do not use the term in an offensive manner, but it shows the effect of local spirit, of party spirit. If the object is to reduce taxes we can reduce them at once by a few strokes of the pen. But that is not the object. The object is to tamper with that great industrial system which has built up in this country a growth of manufactures without parallel in the history of mankind, a system that has raised our production in manufacturing industries from $1,800,000,000 in 1860 to $54,000,000,000 in 1880, and now a great deal more than that. It is to repeal those duties which have fostered and built up the industries of our country so that now we are beginning to compete even in foreign markets with some of the older countries of Europe. How is it that we are now competing in England with Sheffield cutlery? Because by a system of protection followed by domestic competition our home industry has been defended against foreign importations until it has been built up, and now our home product is as cheap as the article made in foreign countries, made so by domestic competition and by increasing skill and art.

Mr. President, it is against the modification of these duties that the Republican party stands like a wall, not only to-day, but will at all times. We are in favor of a reduction of taxes. You take the $650,000,000 of imported goods, and what are they? More than $220,000,000 are admitted free of duty, of which over one hundred millions are articles of food—tea, coffee, and the like. Suppose you add to the free-list about $90,000,000 of sugar brought into this country. Then you have over $300,000,000, or about one-half of the importations of this country, that will be absolutely free of all tax. These are mainly articles that can not well be produced in this country, that experience has shown can not profitably be raised in this country, and they are such as are in use by every man, woman, and child here.

Take that large class of articles that are the base of our manufactures, all articles that can not be produced in this country are now practically free. If there is any one in the whole list that pays a duty, I would like to know it. I know of no article now, I can not recall any, which enters into our manufactures as the base of manufacturing, that can not be produced in this country, which pays any duty at all. If any, name it, and I will vote to put it on the free-list. Where we have not the power by reasonable protection and domestic competition to produce any article, I say let it be free from all taxation. In that way our free-list can be greatly increased, and we have free trade with all the world for more than one-half of all foreign importations.

But there are now about $300,000,000 worth of goods imported into this country that directly or indirectly compete with our domestic productions. They compete with our domestic growth. We have the raw materials and facility for the manufacturing of all these articles. Why should we not make our own woolen goods? Why should we not make our own cotton goods? Why should we not make our own machinery, our own cutlery, and all the various articles which enter into the ordinary employments of human life? We can do it. We can not start these industries without protection; we can not produce them at once; but in a little time and by reasonable protection we can build up all those industries. Experience has shown that whenever we have fairly started in this kind of competition, and have been protected for a time against the changes and oscillations of foreign competition and the low wages of foreign labor, we have been able to reduce the price of the domestic article, so that we are now able in the markets of the world upon the principles of free trade to compete with foreign countries in many branches of industry.

Sir, the theory and doctrine of the Republican party which we represent is this, that we will maintain the system of duties on foreign goods, not to the extent of a prohibition, not at such rates as would relieve our own people from reasonable competition, but such as will induce home competition, and thus reduce the price to a reasonable rate. We will levy such duties on foreign goods, to the extent that they are imported, as will induce their production here. And now, sir, it so happens in the progress of this system that nearly every article necessary for ordinary human life consumed in the homes of the families of our country is of American growth and production.

There are $300,000,000 of foreign goods imported, manufactured abroad, which compete with ours. There are more than $3,000,000,000 manufactured in our own country out of the $5,500,000,000 altogether, the production of which has been caused by this protective policy. Now, we have built up this system of industry. We do not want it tampered with except with great care and by men who are disposed to foster and favor it. The Senator from Kentucky is not in that position; he never was. He has a theory of free-trade. It is true he denies that he is a free-trader, and I suppose he would deny that he was a free-trader as long as we ever laid any import duties and did not throw our ports open to all the world. But whenever it is proposed to reduce any tax which tends to foster or benefit any American industry, then my friend from Kentucky is sure to vote yes and fight it to the bitter end.

I did not intend to get into this argument. I do not want to go into it any further. I wish to say to our Democratic friends there are three months yet left in their lease of power, conferred two years ago. If you can propose a scheme to reduce taxation, that will bear the test and promise of your Democratic platform, that is, to reduce taxes without injuring the industries of this country, you will find on this side of the Chamber that we are ready participants and partakers with you in that great and glorious work; but when you strike at the industries of our people, and seek to derange that which is now well, and tamper with these protective duties which foster and diversify and have built up our great industries, then we are opposed to you, first, because we do not want to see the labor of our country brought down to a hard and grinding competition with the illy paid labor of Europe; next, because we want to see a diversified production in this country, so that the United States may be absolutely independent, not only in a political sense, but in a financial and a commercial sense, and so that we can make in this country every article essential to ordinary human want and employment. This is what we believe in, and until the Democratic party can agree among themselves and present to us a plan which they will be willing to stand up by, they have no right to chide us, and no right to complain of us. When they send us a bill we will show them that we have the power to reduce taxes, and will propose a method by which taxes may be reduced without crippling our industries or decreasing the ordinary wages of labor paid to our workingmen.

Mr. DAWES obtained the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield, that I may move an adjournment. This is a very important question, and I think we can spend a few days in discussing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Iowa to withhold the motion to adjourn, that he may lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9183) for the relief of James R. Marr was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; and

The joint resolution (H. Res. 220) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1886, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and asking a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, it was

Resolved, That the Senate still further insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House, and agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. GORMAN.

ALABAMA COAL AND IRON LANDS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to inform the Senate of the state of facts upon which the coal and iron lands in Alabama have been withheld from sale, contrary to the requirements of the Act of March 3, 1883; and that he communicate to the Senate any evidence on the files of said Department which discloses the existence of any conspiracy, or combination, to unlawfully affect a sale of lands under said act, if any such evidence exists.

BEAUFORT SCHOOL-FARMS.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report of George B. Clark, revenue agent, in regard to the school-farms in Beaufort, S. C.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service; and

A bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes.

PRINTING OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, ETC.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing instruct me to ask for the passage of the resolution I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form, for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies of the annual message of the President, and the reports proper of the heads of the Departments, Comptroller of the Currency, Director of the Mint, and Treasurer of the United States, without the appendices.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to inquire whether that is the usual number.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can explain the matter in a moment. This has never been ordered in this form but once. It was done last year. I will state in a moment why it is necessary, in my judgment.

Of course the message and accompanying documents have been ordered to be printed, as usual, in accordance with law. That means twelve or fifteen octavo volumes which you will begin to get in a year to eighteen months hence. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] commented on one item this morning, the Report of 1885, which is of no use to us now.

Besides that, the law provides for the condensation and compilation of all messages and reports. That compilation makes one octavo volume. The theory of the act providing for it was that if the Departments would send in their appendices early a condensation could be made so as to be ready within a fortnight for the use of Congress. It takes about a year to get that volume through. Last year's volume is not here yet.

Now, if a Senator desires a copy of the report of the Secretary of Treasury, or of the Navy, or of the Army, or of the Attorney-General, or any one of those officers mentioned in the resolution, he must send to the Department and get one out of the few they print for themselves out of their own printing fund. There is no other copy of any one of these reports to be got in this building.

Last year we tried what I propose, and found that it worked well. The resolution asks for a thousand of each of these documents in pamphlet form. The type is up already from which the copies were printed which have been sent to us, one each.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to suggest whether it would not be better that the usual number be printed for the Document Room. These will go to the Folding Room, as I understand. They will not go through the regular Document Room, I think.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think they did last year.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think not. That is the point I want to call the Senator's attention to. I do not think they came through the regular Document Room; I think they came through the Folding Room, and the effect was that when they were sent off Senators would send up to the Document Room and there would be none there. It is a great inconvenience not to have them filed in the Document Room, and I suggest that the resolution be amended so that the thousand will be in addition to the usual number and for the Document Room.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me suggest to the Senator that if printed under that form, "the usual number," there are about 1,900 printed and several hundred of them are laid aside for special use.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand; but we ought to have these copies in addition to those upstairs in the Document Room.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are several hundred provided for under the law ordering what is called "the usual number" that we do not want; and you may not have them in a year.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true; but they would get into the Document Room after a year or more.

Mr. HAWLEY. These can all be put in the Document Room perfectly well at your command. It does not make any odds to which room you send for them.

Mr. COCKRELL. It makes a great deal of difference if you send to the Document Room and none of them are there. If sent to the Folding Room they will all be sent off by us before we think about it, thinking there is the usual number in the Document Room.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Smith had these to dispose of before, and they were ordered just in this manner. I know that Mr. Smith was able to respond to a Senator when he sent upstairs for a Treasury report. I think the Senator from Missouri will find it all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think they were in Mr. Smith's room at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

A bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service; and

A bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes.

COLUMBIA RIVER STEAM-RAILWAY.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have printed and laid on the table. At some future time, when it is the pleasure of the Senate to listen to me, I shall briefly submit some remarks as to the project foreshadowed in the resolution—the construction of a steamboat railway around The Dalles of the Columbia River.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to examine and report as to the necessity for the improvement of that portion of the Columbia River known as "The Dalles," by the removal of obstructions so as to permit the free navigation thereof; and as to the practicability and probable cost of overcoming such obstructions to navigation by the construction of a steamboat railway around The Dalles and Celilo Rapids, and removing obstructions at Three-Mile and Ten-Mile Rapids.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and laid on the table. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has the floor on the resolution submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], which has been under consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me that I may move an adjournment.

Mr. DAWES. With the understanding that I have the floor when the resolution of the Senator from Vermont comes up again I yield.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned to Monday, December 13, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

WILLIAM H. FORNEY,	H. L. DAWES,
Managers on the part of the House.	Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask that the report be accepted, and that a further conference be asked.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be accepted and a further conference with the Senate will be asked. The Chair appoints as conferees the same gentlemen as have hitherto acted on the committee—Mr. FORNEY of Alabama, Mr. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. BUTTERWORTH of Ohio.

ADDITIONAL ASSOCIATE JUSTICE, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JOSEPH. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9642) and that the same be considered bythe House.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MILLS. I will ask the gentleman from New Mexico whether that bill has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. JOSEPH. It has; and I ask that the report of the committee, which is very brief, be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, for the present I must object to the consideration of this bill. I was not aware that such a measure was pending. I shall not object to the gentleman bringing it before the House at some later time, after proper inquiry shall have been made as to the facts.

Mr. SPRINGER. That inquiry has been already made. This bill was reported at the last session of the House. There is a large accumulation of judicial business in the courts of New Mexico; there is urgent need for the passage of this bill, and I trust that my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will withdraw his objection. In the Territory of Dakota there are five judges, while in the Territory of New Mexico, with its large and rapidly increasing population, there are only three. This bill is necessary. In fact, it is a positive denial of justice to the people of New Mexico to leave them in their present condition. I am sure that if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] were on the Committee on Territories he would not object to the passage of this bill, and I trust that he will now withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, a brief inquiry as to whether there has been such an increase of business in the Territory as to justify this legislation can certainly do no harm.

Mr. SPRINGER. But that inquiry has been made, and this bill has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objects.

TITLE TO LANDS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. MORROW. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right, title, and ownership of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, to the body of land hereinafter described are hereby confirmed, and all the right and title of the United States to said land are hereby granted and relinquished to said city and county, and to those persons, and their successors in interest, to whom portions of said land have been heretofore granted and conveyed by or on behalf of said city and county, to the extent of their interest in said land. Said land hereby granted is described as follows: Situated within the corporate limits of said city and county; bounded on the north by the southern boundary line of the land granted by the United States to said city and county by patent dated June 20, 1884; on the west by the Pacific Ocean; on the south by the line surveyed by Deputy United States Surveyor James T. Stratton, in 1867 and 1868, as the southern line of the land granted to said city and county by act of Congress approved March 8, 1866; and also bounded on the south by the northern boundary of the Rancho Laguna de la Merced, granted by the United States to J. de Haro and others, September 10, 1872, wherever said northern boundary of said rancho is north of said line surveyed by said Stratton; on the east by the western boundary of the Rancho San Miguel, granted by the United States to J. de J. Noe, March 30, 1857.

SEC. 2. That upon the approval of this act the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall issue a patent for said land to said city and county, and said patent shall inure to said city and county and the grantees of the same, and their said successors in interest, as a confirmation of said city and county's grants of said land.

SEC. 3. That all laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby declared inapplicable to the lands hereby granted and relinquished.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the title to this land is in the United States, what reason is there for relinquishing it?

Mr. MORROW. A very brief statement will disclose the reasons for the legislation proposed in this bill. The city of San Francisco is located on a tract known under the Mexican law as a "pueblo," containing four square leagues of land. The title to this pueblo was confirmed by judicial decree in 1865, and confirmed by act of Congress in 1866. Later on there was a survey of the pueblo, under the act of Congress and the judicial decree. That survey established the southern boundary line, a line running east and west across the peninsula. Subsequently controversy arose between claimants and the Government respecting some portions of the northern boundary of the land, in connection with the presidio of San Francisco, and also concerning the line crossing Mission Creek. In consequence of that controversy, and the decision of the Secretary of the Interior in 1883, the boundary of the grant was extended north so as to increase its extent to more than four square leagues. This made another survey necessary, which survey placed the southern line about 981 feet north of the former line, making a strip of land 981 feet wide to which no title has been conveyed, although, under the original survey, the city of San Francisco conveyed to the occupants this particular land. That land has been cut up into blocks and streets; it has paid taxes, and the people in possession were, until the last survey, under the impression that they were within the line of the pueblo. Now the city of San Francisco, by proper resolution, asks that this grant be made, that the title of its grantees may be confirmed. It is recommended by the Interior Department, and there are no adverse claimants.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Are there any persons there taking title from other sources than the city or county of San Francisco?

Mr. MORROW. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

There being no further objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES R. MARRS.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9183) for the relief of James R. Marrs, and that the House now consider the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James R. Marrs, of Boyle County, Kentucky, the sum of $126, to reimburse him for money paid by him to the Post-Office Department of the United States because of money unlawfully taken from the post-office at Danville, Ky., of which James R. Marrs is postmaster, and for the taking of which he was in no respect blamable or responsible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY]?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I should like to hear the report in this case.

Mr. McCREARY. I will make a brief statement about the bill. On the 17th of February, 1886, James R. Marrs was postmaster at Danville, Ky., and the office was broken into by burglars, the safe opened and Government property amounting to $293.13 taken therefrom without any fault on the part of the postmaster. Credit was allowed him for $96.13, money-order funds, and for postage-stamps in stamp-drawer to the amount of $71; but he was compelled to pay out of his own money $74 for postal funds taken from the safe and $52 for box-rent funds. An investigation of the whole matter was made by an officer sent to Danville by the Post-Office Department, whose report exculpated Mr. Marrs from all blame and declared that he was in no respect at fault. In view of these facts, I introduced a bill for his relief, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, allowing him $126, the amount which he was compelled to pay from his own funds. This bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9933) for the relief of George W. Lawrence, and that the House now proceed to consider the same.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Maine for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think that we should hear the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. This bill, which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims, simply refers the subject to the Court of Claims. I think there can be no objection to the proposition.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is the report long?

Mr. DINGLEY. No; it is very brief.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let it be read.

The report was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EDEN. I object.

THEODORE W. TALLMADGE.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1905) for the relief of Theodore W. Tallmadge be taken from the Speaker's table for immediate consideration. This amendment, which has been suggested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, is merely formal.

The SPEAKER. This bill was returned from the Senate with an amendment during the last session, but for some reason not now remembered by the Chair it was not referred to any committee. It is therefore still on the Speaker's table. The Clerk will report the amendment of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 17, 1886.

Resolved, That this bill pass with the following amendment:

After the words "United States," in line 6, insert "subject to military bounty-land-warrant location."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this subject?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was impossible to hear what the proposition was.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The bill proposes simply to authorize the issue of land scrip to this gentleman in lieu of a bounty-land warrant, of which he was defrauded by an agent of the Government. The bill, after passing the House, was passed in the Senate with a slight amendment, adopted upon the suggestion of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amendment?

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the House bill be read as amended.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue and deliver to Theodore W. Tallmadge land-scrip by which the said Theodore W. Tallmadge, or his assigns, upon the presentation thereof to the proper officers of the Land Department, shall be entitled to enter one hundred and sixty acres of the surveyed public lands of the United States subject to military bounty-land warrant location, not mineral or otherwise appropriated, granted to him in lieu of bounty-land warrant numbered sixty-nine thousand six hundred and fifty-one, misappropriated by an employé of the United States land-office at Stevans' Point, Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the amendment of the Senate; which was concurred in.

Mr. OUTHWAITE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas states that he rises to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. REAGAN. I send to the Clerk's desk a copy of the New York World of December 4, and ask that the article marked be read, with the accompanying head-lines.

The Clerk read, as follows:

REAGAN REBUKED—SCENE AT A COMMITTEE MEETING ON THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE BILL.

[Special to the World.]

WASHINGTON, December 3.

There was a lively scene at the meeting of the conference committee on the interstate commerce bill to-day, which for a time made it look as if the struggle over the two bills under consideration would end in a high old row. But the storm blew over and cleared the atmosphere, so that the committee made fair progress afterwards towards an agreement. The members of the committee are trying to keep it quiet, and are pledged to secrecy about the affair, which makes it all the more interesting. The venerable Mr. REAGAN, who has been laboring in season and out of season during the fifteen years he has been in Congress to secure the passage of his bill to regulate the railroads, can not be made to see that there is any other method than by the measures he proposes, and while the Senate committee are willing to concede many things to him, they will not take his bill as it stands.

This morning he made the speech that is familiar to all who have been watching this legislation, for he has delivered it every session in the House for a dozen years and every week in the committee-room. He had reached that point where he declares that every man who will not accept his bill is a friend and defender of the grasping monopolies, and was going on to say that the Senate bill was a sham and intended to humbug the people, when Senator CULLOM interrupted him. The Senator said he did not propose to listen to any more such talk. The gentleman from Texas had made that same speech the day before, and had uttered similar reflections upon himself, the author of the bill, and the Senate, which passed it unanimously. He was willing to hear it once, but did not propose to sit there and have REAGAN reiterate every day that the Senate bill was intended to deceive and humbug the people. The Senate committee had spent three years in studying the question, and believed they understood quite as much about it as the gentleman from Texas, and were quite as honest in their efforts to secure proper legislation as he. It was an insult that he resented when the gentleman from Texas declared that he and his colleagues were the tools of monopolists. He gave notice that the remark could not be repeated in his presence.

Mr. CULLOM was very angry, and Mr. REAGAN was very much surprised. He had made the same assertions so often that they flowed from his lips naturally, and he did not realize what they meant. As soon as he had recovered from his surprise he said he did not intend to reflect upon the honesty of the Senator from Illinois or any of his colleagues. "Then withdraw your words," replied CULLOM, "and don't repeat them here again." Mr. REAGAN did so, and the committee went on with its work.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Clerk to read Senator CULLOM's letter in the New York World of December 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

A CARD FROM MR. CULLOM.

To the Editor of the World:

My attention has been called to a Washington dispatch in the World of Saturday which purports to give an account of "a lively scene" that is alleged to have occurred between Judge REAGAN and myself at a meeting of the conference committee on the interstate commerce bill. I deem it but just to Judge REAGAN to say that no such dispute as is described in the dispatch referred to has taken place in the committee, and that the proceedings of the conference committee have been conducted in the most friendly spirit on the part of all those participating and with no more friction than naturally occurs when men honestly differ in their opinions and are called upon to express them.

S. M. CULLOM.

WASHINGTON, December 6.

Mr. REAGAN. Let the Clerk also read the World's article of December 8, which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAPITAL NEWS NOTES—MORE ABOUT THAT CULLOM-REAGAN ROW OVER COMMERCE.

WASHINGTON, December 7.

Senator CULLOM, of Illinois, in a card in to-day's World tries to create an impression that there was exaggeration in a report in the World giving an account of a recent set-to between him and Congressman REAGAN in a conference meeting over the interstate commerce bill. Senator CULLOM did check Mr. REAGAN in his speech and protest against the character of the Texan's remarks. Senator CULLOM would not venture to make oath to the contrary. Other members of the committee have confirmed the report. It was agreed to suppress the story of the difference in the interests of an agreement on the bill. Mr. REAGAN thought that the story might injure his Senatorial chances, and so demanded that Mr. CULLOM should write the card, as part of the pledge of secrecy, and Mr. CULLOM wrote it to secure an agreement on the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Senator CULLOM's letter shows that no such scene occurred as is described in the World's first article. He states the truth.

The only possible foundation I know of for the statement made in that article may be that in considering the bills before us I said the commission would serve more as a buffer between the people and the railroads than to promote the ends of justice. Referring to this, Senator CULLOM said, with some warmth, that my statement was a reflection upon Senators, and he did not wish it repeated; to which I rejoined that I was speaking of the effects of the bill and had no reference to the motives of Senators.

We then proceeded without further remark with the consideration of the bills before us.

I made no speech on that occasion; no such scene occurred as is described in that article; no injunction of secrecy was made; nothing was said about my remarks being an insult to be resented; no such language was used to me as "then, withdraw your remarks, and don't repeat them here again."

The World's second article is an aggravation of the falsehoods and slanders contained in the first by assuming that Senator CULLOM was "trying to create the impression that there was exaggeration in a report in the World giving an account of a recent set-to between him and Congressman REAGAN in the conference committee over the interstate commerce bill." It then impliedly admits its false statements in the first article by saying "Senator CULLOM did check Mr. REAGAN in his speech" and "would not venture to make oath to the contrary." It also aggravates the former offense by reaffirming that "it was agreed to suppress the story of difference in the interest of an agreement on the bill," and by stating that "Mr. REAGAN thought the story might injure his Senatorial chances, and so demanded that Mr. CULLOM should write the card." I made no demand of Senator CULLOM to write his card or for any other purpose.

I can have no quarrel with a creature base enough to invent and send for publication the falsehoods and slanders contained in the World's articles. But I think it my duty to say that they appear in a newspaper owned, controlled, and published by Joseph Pulitzer, who was lately honored by the people of the city of New York with a seat in this House, and who, during a part of last session, was my associate as a member of the Committee on Commerce. By publishing those statements he shows himself capable of prostituting his paper to create sensation, increase its sale, and make pecuniary profit out of the pain and injustice wantonly inflicted upon others.

Mr. Pulitzer can not excuse himself, inasmuch as he has made no apology for these wrongs, by assuming that these scandalous papers were invented and published by his employés and not by himself. A just and honorable man would not employ or retain in his service men capable of such conduct.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed, as the regular order, to call committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Pensions.

The call of committees was proceeded with.

Mr. DUNN. I move the call be suspended, as it is evident there are no reports to be made.

The motion was agreed to (more than two-thirds voting in the affirmative), and the further call of committees for reports was suspended.

TAXATION OF PARTS OF A GALLON OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MORRISON. The Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits, have directed me to report the same back with the amendments of the Senate, and to move that the amendments be non-concurred in; and further, that the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the amendments of the Senate demanded? If not, the question will be put to the House upon non-concurrence and upon agreeing to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in, and the request for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the managers of the conference on the part of the House some time during the day.

PRINTING OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the resolution providing for the printing of the President's last annual message, with an amendment filling the blank with "20,000;" so the resolution will then read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 20,000 additional copies of the President's last annual message, for the use of the House.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESTRICTING OWNERSHIP OF REAL ESTATE IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. PAYSON. I call up as a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3280) to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, &c., and to move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in; and further that the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses be agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EXTENSION OF THE FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the regular order is the consideration for one hour of bills reported from committees, and the hour begins at 5 minutes before 1 o'clock. The unfinished business is the bill coming over from yesterday, reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, a bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes, reported from that committee with amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent, if the pending bill be not disposed of in the hour allotted to it, the time shall be extended for at least thirty minutes, when it is expected we shall be able to get through with it.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is the bill for the extension of the free-delivery system reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. CALDWELL. I wish it to be distinctly understood that unless the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads gets through with its bill in this half-hour extension, the House shall then proceed at once to the consideration of the regular order, which is the bill relating to the election of President and Vice-President.

The SPEAKER. That is, thirty minutes after the expiration of the hour?

Mr. CALDWELL. I wish it distinctly understood that they are not to have more than half an hour of extension of time; that if they are not then through they shall give way to the electoral-count bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1990) to provide for the adjustment of matters connected with certain judicial proceedings in Pennsylvania in which the United States was a party.

EXTENSION OF FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill pending at the expiration of the hour on yesterday, for the extension of the free-delivery system; and move that all debate upon the first section of the bill and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

It was so ordered; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. HATCH in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, after consulting with the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and understanding that they propose to offer an amendment which substantially covers the same ground, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to offer the amendment I send to the desk as a substitute for all of the first section after line 6, and down to and including the word "dollars" in the twentieth line.

The Clerk read as follows:

And may be so employed at every place containing a population of not less than 10,000 within its corporate limits, according to the last general census taken by authority of State or United States law; or at any post-office which produced a gross revenue for the preceding fiscal year of not less than $10,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not at this time wish to discuss the measure, but will reserve that portion of the time to which I may be entitled under the order of the House, until I can hear such suggestions as may be made by gentlemen who may oppose the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to welcome the amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from Missouri just read. That amendment is in the right line, but it might go further. The amendment which is now offered goes to the matter of revenue as well as the matter of boundary of the town or city for which the free-delivery service is proposed.

It is more significant and pertinent to this bill to care for this system with reference to the cost and income of the service than with reference to the mere question of geographical boundary of such city or town. I was prepared yesterday to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, as well as to welcome the amendment now proposed by the committee.

This free-delivery system is not thoroughly understood either in the country or the House. May I, therefore, take the liberty, sir, to say—as one who has had what I may call some maternal solicitude over the letter-carrier system—that it is a paying business. It brings a surplus to the Treasury. The surplus by this system began in 1874-'75. It amounted then only to $67,517.55. It has grown steadily, until to-day it amounts to over $1,500,000 and more, or to be accurate, $1,526,936.27. This represents the excess of postage on local matter over the cost. The cost of 1885-'86 was $4,312,306.70. The postage was $5,839,242.97. The 181 letter-carriers carried nearly two billions of pieces—or 1,949,520,590. There is an increase of the business of 11.75 per cent., and an increase of the number of carriers of only 11.08 per cent. The cost is less per piece, less by one-tenth of a mill. The gain of the past year is equal to 17.93 per cent. There is a good surplus, as will be seen. It amounts to nearly a million and a half dollars.

Where does this surplus come from? It comes, the great bulk of it, from the city of New York. This I am proud to say. The letter-carriers of that great city—the Knights of the Letter—day after day have worked at this business and have produced $1,263,339.62 more than it has cost for the service in that city. In other words, the cost in that city has been $642,396.09; the return of this hard-worked and poorly-paid service in that city is $1,905,735.61.

What becomes of that magnificent surplus? Only 18 other cities pay the cost of the service in the United States. Out of the 181 offices which have the free-delivery system, only 19 of them pay the expenses. Of this 19, with a saving of $1,500,000, and more, New York provides over $1,263,000, and therefore when it comes to the question of the disposition of this money, New York should be allowed a voice as well as Philadelphia, Saint Louis, and other cities that combine to produce the surplus.

The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri on the committee should be welcomed; but I should like it to go further. I shall introduce an amendment at the proper time showing wherein this revenue may be utilized even to a greater extent.

The Postmaster-General has said in his report that he desires the bestowal of this grand system of free delivery to the extent of the "utmost privileges of our people." What are the utmost privileges? How will you limit them? They should not be limited to the boundary lines of the city. That is foregone. If the delivery can be made even outside of such lines and give a service that pays, it should not be limited to the amount of revenue, $10,000, as proposed in this bill. True, some limit must be fixed. The committee undertake to do that. But why not go further and allow the Postmaster-General in his discretion, between the decennial periods, or between the periods of State censuses, which are infrequent and irregular, to ascertain by data outside of the census what the populations of these growing cities and towns are from time to time, so that this large surplus, this one and a half millions of dollars set aside by the industry of the letter-carriers and a good administrative system, shall go in the interest and for the "utmost privileges" of the people?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize any gentleman who desires to speak in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I follow up what I have suggested with the amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 2, after the word "law," insert the following: "or according to any other data satisfactory to the Postmaster-General."

Mr. PETERS. The portion which the gentleman desires to amend it is proposed shall be stricken out.

Mr. COX, of New York. To give some little unity to my remarks I will proceed to say that that amendment is intended to reach those cities and towns which may within the decennial period reach 10,000 population. We cannot always tell by the census how our towns in the West and the Southwest may be growing. We had an illustration of it yesterday, stated by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

In the vicissitudes of our astounding growth there is room for general congratulation, so that if one State or section seems laggard in the race of progress, it is only in seeming. The whole body develops and grows. In the last apportionment for members of this body which I had the honor to propose, I bid the politicians prepare for the inevitable changes made by the census. In the relative strength New England fell from 28 per cent. in 1790, to less than 10 in 1870; the Middle States from 1820 to 1860 fell from 32 to 23 per cent.; the Southern States only fell from 45 per cent. in 1800 to 34.8 in 1860, while the West and Southwest bounded from 3 per cent. relative increase in 1810 to 31 per cent. in 1870. The general increase was 30.07 per cent. At this rate, in 1910 we will have 100,000,000. Where will they be located? The census of 1880 will show. In relative strength Texas mounted to 94, South Carolina to 41, Arkansas to 65, while the New England and the Middle States fall below the relative average. California leaps up to 54, Iowa to 36, Michigan to 38, Minnesota to 77, Oregon to 92, Nebraska to 268, and Colorado to 388. This increase seems decennial, but really it is year by year. A town of one thousand to-day, next year it is five, the year after seven, and the year after that ten thousand. New York would neither stint their growth nor limit their privileges, and out of the profits of one million and a third of the one million and a half dollars made in New York by the system, she would be glad to see the advancing element of every State and town recognized in our practical legislation. It is not in our power to stay the orb of power or eclipse its glory by discriminations based on little town-boundaries. The star will continue to keep its western way for new conquests over the mines and fields of the great heart and extreme border of our land. Along with it arises out of its long trial the Southern Cross, to add its symbolic cluster to the constellation. Let us take a pride on every feasible occasion to foster this advancement by legislation. This amendment is on the line of that principle.

I make this statement, as the committee will see, for the purpose of showing that we can not properly regulate this matter to run by any census returns to the Department or elsewhere.

Now, shall those cities lie out of the privileges—"the utmost privileges," to use the language of the Postmaster-General—to which they would be entitled out of this vast surplus, accumulated by our free-delivery system? I hold, sir, this is a great trust fund. The greater part of this surplus has originated in New York city; but I do not think New York city to-day, through any of her representative men, either in or out of Congress, would object to having the privileges of this most valuable system extended to the new cities and towns that are springing up in the South and Southwest with such marvelous rapidity. Therefore, though I may not expect the adoption of this amendment, yet while I favor the great advance made by the committee in adding, first, forty-three to the number of these delivery cities, and then agreeing to make the addition to the number, under the pending amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, amount to some one hundred and ninety, I would suggest that this additional amendment would only involve a cost of half a million dollars, while there is a surplus of a million and a half of dollars, out of which our country's interests in this matter may be properly subserved.

Mr. DOCKERY. I fully appreciate the interest of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. COX] in the marvelous growth and development of the West and Southwest. I hail from that quarter, and have personal knowledge of the rapid progress that is being made in the increase of our wealth and population. While that is true, I would not desire to carry the advantages of this free-delivery system to any city the population of which is ascertained by the warp and bias of a local enumeration. The custom and practice of the Post-Office Department have usually been, as I am advised, to base the extension of this service upon an enumeration taken under the authority of Federal or State laws. I know, sir, that in many of the cities of the West and Southwest there have been marvelous strides in the increase of population; but this growth of population is amply provided for by the amendment of the committee, which authorizes the extension of the system to cities the post-offices of which have produced for the preceding fiscal year a gross revenue of $10,000. There are now but eleven cities in the United States that have 10,000 population and do not produce $10,000 gross postal revenue. Therefore, it will be observed that the amendment of the committee does not deny to the growing cities of the West the benefits of this system.

I sincerely hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will not be adopted. I trust that the House will stand by the action of the committee, which, by the proposed amendment, will extend this system to 179 cities of the American Union. Every State in the Union is benefited under the provisions of this bill; and I do not believe it wise to extend the system any further for the present. Now, Mr. Chairman, allow me a word of explanation in regard to the second and third sections of the bill. These sections make no changes whatever in the salary account of the carrier service, but simply classify it. As the law stands at present there are first and second class carriers and auxiliary carriers. These sections of the bill provide for first, second, and third class carriers, the third class taking the place of the auxiliary carriers. The Attorney-General has decided that where an auxiliary carrier is appointed there must be a principal, either a first or a second class carrier; so that the effect of this bill, if it has any effect at all (and it does affect the salaries to this extent), will be that for the first year of a free-delivery office the Postmaster-General will be authorized to inaugurate the system with third-class carriers, thus saving the difference between the salaries of first and third class carriers.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is substantially the recommendation made by the Postmaster-General in his report to Congress at the last session. The same recommendation—a repetition of it—is contained in his last report. During the last session of Congress, with the view of enlarging the operations of the free-delivery system, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, apprehending that so large a proposed increase of the service might result in no increase at all because of the defeat of the measure, adopted the proposition contained in the bill to which this amendment is now offered. That was the sole reason. The committee at that time felt that it was important that the service should be extended, probably to the extent desired by the Department.

At a meeting of the committee held this morning—the first opportunity they have had to consider the subject this winter—the committee were encouraged to take the forward step proposed in this amendment, first, by repetition of the recommendation in the report of the Postmaster-General; second, by the recommendation of the President, and third, by the additional fact which the report of the Postmaster-General discloses, that the net increase of revenue during the last fiscal year is over $200,000, equal to one-half of the increased expense that would be occasioned by carrying out this proposition, even if the service were all put on by the 1st day of July next, which can not possibly be done, and the increase during the next fiscal year will probably be as great as the proportionate increase of expenditure. For these reasons I think the House will not feel that the committee have been hasty or careless in proposing this measure.

One word more. I trust that the proposition of my friend from New York [Mr. COX] will not be adopted, because it has already been considered by the Department, and has been there regarded as not a wise measure, but as likely to bring in patched-up returns, prepared under the influence of local interests, and calculated to mislead the Postmaster-General and Congress. If it be said that every ten years is not often enough to ascertain the population of our cities, and that it is a hardship that a growing city should be compelled to wait for the next census before it can get the benefit of this service, the answer is that the hardship is greatly ameliorated by the other provision that where the post-office yields a gross revenue of $10,000 this service may be put on. I trust that the Committee of the Whole will see fit to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from New York and to accept that of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and then allow us to go forward to one or two other matters which we desire to have disposed of with as little delay as possible.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, as the committee have acted so handsomely in regard to the amendment proposed yesterday, I will not stand in the way of their disposing of this bill promptly. I therefore withdraw my amendment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired for debate upon the section and amendments. The Clerk will read the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after line 6, down to and including the word "dollars" in line 20, and insert: "may be so employed at every place containing a population of not less than 10,000 within its corporate limits according to the last general census, taken by authority of State or United States law, or at any post-office which produced a gross revenue for the preceding fiscal year of not less than $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee as amended was then adopted.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, line 26, section 1, was amended by striking out the word "and" after the word "population" and inserting "or."

The next section of the bill was read as follows:

SEC. 2. That there may be in all cities which contain a population of 75,000 or more three classes of letter-carriers, as follows: Carriers of the first class, whose salaries shall be $1,000 per annum; of the second class, whose salaries shall be $850 per annum; and of the third class, whose salaries shall be $600 per annum.

An amendment reported by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to strike out in line 5, after the words "eight hundred," the words "and fifty" was agreed to.

The next section of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. That in places containing a population of less than 75,000 there may be two classes of letter-carriers, as follows: Carriers of the second class, whose salaries shall be $850 per annum, and of the third class, whose salaries shall be $600 per annum. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1886.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am instructed by the committee to move to strike out in lines 6 and 7 of the section just read these words:

This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCADOO. I move to amend the pending section by adding, after the word "annum," in line 6, the following: "All carriers shall not be employed over eight hours in any day without extra pay for each hour over eight they may be kept at work."

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will not press that amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust it will be withdrawn. Our committee has but little time, and there are several matters of importance which we desire to bring up. To press the amendment which has been read will amount to a defeat of this bill, which I know the gentleman from New Jersey does not desire.

Mr. MCADOO. I will ask my friend from Missouri whether that proposition will come up in a separate bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCADOO. I withdraw the amendment.

The last section of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That all laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the committee rise and report back to the House the bill as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes, had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the previous question upon the amendments, and on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that the question on the amendments be taken in gross.

There being no objection, the question was taken upon agreeing to all the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Ought we not to have the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I shall vote against the bill, but I will not insist on the yeas and nays.

The bill was passed.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD].

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Public Lands are now entitled to call up business for consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads no time remaining?

The SPEAKER. The bill just disposed of came over as unfinished business from yesterday, and the time of the committee has been exhausted. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], representing the Committee on Public Lands, is recognized.

Mr. PAYSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to call up for present consideration——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The bill just passed did not occupy a full hour yesterday, but only part of an hour. Is not the Post-Office Committee entitled to further time?

The SPEAKER. The bill just passed came up for consideration during the hour yesterday, and was unfinished busines at the expiration of that hour. Under these circumstances, the committee was entitled to the remainder of the hour to-day, if necessary, to complete the consideration of that bill, but for no other purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. Would it be in order, with the consent of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], to make a request at this time for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It would be.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield for a moment that I may make such a request. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD], on behalf of the Post-Office Committee, desires to call up a bill authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service—a matter at present unauthorized by law, although indispensable to the business of the Post-Office Department. I think there will be no objection to the passage of a bill legalizing such employment, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana be allowed to bring up that bill now for consideration.

Mr. PAYSON. Will it provoke any discussion?

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. DOCKERY. None.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

MAIL MESSENGERS.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. If in order, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ such mail-messenger service as may be necessary for the carriage of the mails in connection with railroad and steamboat service, transfer service between depots, over bridges or ferries, between post-offices, post-offices and branch offices or stations, in cases where by existing laws and regulations of the Post-Office Department railroad companies, steamboat companies, and the masters of vessels are not required to deliver into and take from the post-offices the mails carried on their lines or vessels.

An amendment reported by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was read, as follows:

In line 8, strike out "existing" and insert "the."

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, which has the approval of the Post-Office Department, is obvious on its face, and in view of the necessity of the measure, I think there can be no objection to its immediate passage. Unless some gentleman desires to be heard upon the subject, I will ask the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I notice from the reading of the bill that it refers to rules and regulations of the Post-Office Department, as to the transfer and delivery of mails within the distance, I believe, of a quarter of a mile of post-offices.

Mr. DOCKERY. Eighty rods.

Mr. HOLMAN. That matter, I understand, is regulated by law, not by a mere rule of the Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is a rule of the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it will be found to be a law.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. There is no law authorizing this messenger service at all, although the service has been performed for the last fifteen years. This bill is designed to make lawful what has thus been practiced for a number of years under regulation of the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been practiced for more than twenty years past.

Mr. DOCKERY. But under no law.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been the practice for more than ten years. If there is no law, then what the gentleman proposes may be proper.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCRAE demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 112, noes 12.

Mr. MCRAE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. MCRAE and Mr. WARD, of Indiana.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the hour be regarded as closed after the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. If the hour shall expire during the pendency of the bill, it will resume its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the call of the Committee on Public Lands go over until the next morning hour.

Mr. MCRAE. Very well, then; I will withdraw my point of no quorum.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER. The House resumes the consideration of the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, which is an act (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, recognizing the impatience which has been manifested at the delay, by early adjournment, of the consideration of the electoral-count bill, I gave notice, yesterday, when we resumed its consideration I would ask the House to order the previous question after twenty minutes had been taken up in debate. I propose to stand by that announcement, and now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration proposes to carry into execution a power conferred by the Constitution, section 8 of Article I, which provides that Congress shall have power—

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

It is conceded that the language quoted is a delegation to Congress of power to provide for carrying into effect the power to open and count the votes of the electors lodged in the President of the Senate.

By section 1 of Article II it is provided by the Constitution that—

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in Congress; but no Senator or Representative or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector.

Also, that—

The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

The bill before us proposes:

1. To fix a day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President;

2. To provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President; and

3. The decision of questions arising thereon.

If, by appropriate enactment, Congress can provide against a recurrence of the vexed questions that once threatened the welfare and peace of our country; if we shall be able to legislate so as to enable the execution of the constitutional provisions and powers governing the selection of the chief magistrate of the nation, so that the possibility of dissension and strife shall be avoided, this Congress will do much to merit commendation.

In legislating upon this important subject it must be remembered that the power is now vested by the Constitution in the President of the Senate, who "shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all of the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted." That by the action of the very first Congress at its first session, April 6, 1789, as we learn from the Annals of Congress, volume 1, pages 16 and 17, the two Houses of Congress, having organized in accordance with constitutional requirements, "the President elected for the purpose of counting the votes declared that the Senate and House of Representatives had met, and that he, in their presence, had opened and counted the votes of the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States." That the practice and precedent thus inaugurated and established have ever since governed.

That Congress had in it many of the men who had participated in the deliberations of the body which framed the Constitution, or who had been members of the conventions of the several States by which the instrument had been considered and ratified. Their judgment, thus expressed, has been commented upon and approved by both Kent and Story. The former says:

The Constitution does not expressly declare by whom the votes are to be counted and the result declared. In the case of questionable votes and a closely-contested election this power may be all-important, and I presume in the absence of all legislative provision on the subject that the President of the Senate counts the votes and determines the result, and that the two Houses are present only as spectators to witness the transaction, and to act only if no choice be made by the electors.

The latter, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, says:

In the original plan, as well as in the amendment, no provision is made for the discussion or decision of any questions which may arise as to the regularity and authenticity of the returns of the electoral votes, or the right of the persons who gave the votes, or the manner, or the circumstances, in which they ought to be counted. It seems to have been taken for granted that no question could ever arise on the subject, and that nothing more was necessary than to open the certificates which were produced, in the presence of both Houses, and to count the number and names as returned.

The pending bill, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] decides, first, that the power to count the vote is not in the President of the Senate. I submit that my friend is in error in that respect. Precedent and the opinions of learned commentators seem to differ with him. If the Constitution, then, does, as I believe, by fair implication, vest in the President of the Senate the power and duty not only to open, but also to count, the votes, then Congress can not, by this or any other legislation, take away or transfer to any other person or officer that power and duty. It has been well said that Congress can not take upon itself any of the power granted to the executive and judicial departments of the Government; that it can not assume unto itself a duty which is imposed upon an officer of the Constitution. Prior to 1804, when the new twelfth amendment was formally adopted, Congress had enacted legislation for the purpose of providing for the execution of the Constitution regarding the election of electors. Again, after the adoption of the twelfth amendment, Congress legislated upon the subject, but at no time does there appear to have been expressed any doubt as to the power to count the votes being lodged in the President of the Senate.

The twelfth amendment reads:

ARTICLE XII.

The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each; which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 4th day of March, next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list; the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

It appears that the Constitution prescribes the duties and powers of the electors when appointed or elected by the several States. Congress can not abridge or enlarge such powers, nor can Congress in any manner interfere with their constitutionally prescribed duties. Such duties are to vote, list their votes, sign and certify such lists and transmit them sealed to the seat of Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. When these duties have been discharged, then, at the time fixed, they are to be opened and counted, and the result announced in the presence of the two Houses of Congress by the President of the Senate, the only officer recognized by the Constitution or authorized to do any act in relation to the subject, and who is required to perform his duties in the presence of the two Houses, upon whom no duty seems to be imposed, no power conferred, unless it appears that no person has a majority of the votes of the electors; in which case the House of Representatives shall immediately, and by ballot, choose as President one of the three persons having the highest number of electoral votes; and in case the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them before the 4th day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President. A failure of the electors to elect a Vice-President confers, under the Constitution, the power on the Senate to elect that officer.

Does the proposed bill enlarge the powers or duties of the Senate and House of Representatives? Does it interfere with the full expression through the electors of the people's preference? Can we conclude that the framers of the Constitution, when they conferred upon the respective Houses of Congress the extraordinary powers prescribed by the Constitution, intended to invest them with the still more extraordinary power of rejecting and thereby creating by themselves and for themselves the contingency which alone gives them the right and power to elect a President and Vice-President? Can the reasoning of a learned Senator be resisted when he says:

The mere statement of such a proposition is its own refutation, and if no such power rests with the two Houses for concurrent action, how much more preposterous does it seem to be to claim that it rests with either House alone, and especially with the House of Representatives, with which body the power to elect a President abides in the event of a failure of the electors to elect.

Such a doctrine would stand as a perpetual menace to the peace of this country. It would establish an ever-present temptation to Congress to intermeddle with the elections of Presidents. When the framers of the Constitution expressly prohibited Senators and Representatives from appointment as electors, they clearly indicated their purpose to exclude them from all power in or over the matter of the election of a President by the electors appointed by the States.

This was the understanding which the members of the First Congress had of the Constitution, as is evidenced by their proceedings in the ascertainment of the results of the first Presidential election. For a long period of time the practice then adopted was followed without substantial change. All through the period when the minds most active in the formation of our Constitution and those of forceful action in the early affairs of our governmental movements controlled or influenced Congress with respect to the ascertainment of the results of Presidential elections the precedent of the First Congress was in all substantial respects followed.

In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, the pending bill is clearly in conflict with the Constitution. This is an effort honestly conceived to remedy what seems to be a defect in that instrument by congressional enactment. I believe our Constitution in the respect indicated is not in the best form. We can not correct it by our act. We can not confer on ourselves power not authorized by the Constitution.

Let us do now what should have been done some years ago—inaugurate a proceeding for the necessary amendment of the Constitution. Fifteen times the people in the method pointed out by the fundamental law have amended the Constitution. It were far better to do what has been done so many times in the past, secure in the proper method the necessary amendment to the Constitution, rather than incur the risks and dangers incident to the doubtful expedient now under consideration.

Mr. CALDWELL. I now yield for fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, this bill has come over to us as I understand by a practically unanimous vote on the part of the Senate, Democrats and Republicans. That body has four times passed and sent to this House this bill, or one very similar to it. I hope the time has come when the House is at last ready to pass the bill in some shape or other.

No question has been more thoroughly and ably discussed in the last ten years than that involved in this bill—the counting the electoral vote. Eleven years ago the country was on the eve of civil war because we had a disputed Presidential election and no law provided under which the count could be made. The Electoral Commission was resorted to. The country submitted to the result, but was never satisfied with it. It was the natural, and perhaps the inevitable, result. The country never will be satisfied in any political case with a temporary expedient or device under a law passed at the moment, after parties had taken sides on the question. The party losing under such circumstances will naturally believe it has been cheated. The people of this country are law-loving and law-abiding, but they want laws passed before cases arise, and not with reference to any special case that may have arisen. When a party loses a suit under a law passed beforehand, without reference to his particular case, even though he may believe injustice has been done him, has no feeling of personal wrong or personal indignation against the law-making power, because he knows that human laws must be imperfect. Like the upright judge, when he is compelled to decide what his conscience does not approve, he says: "This, indeed, is very hard, but so the law is written." And therefore it is that an unjust law, an imperfect law, is better than no law at all. Let the people know beforehand what the law is and what they are to expect.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, provides in effect that the President of the Senate shall not count the vote but that it shall be counted under the direction of the two Houses. That construction of the Constitution I understand to be agreed upon by a large majority of the able men who have considered the question in the last ten years. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] who has just taken his seat contends that the President of the Senate has that power. Once and only once in the history of the Government did the President of the Senate count the vote, and that was in 1789.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The first time?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, the first time; but the question had never then been debated or discussed as it has been since, and if the precedent was set then it was abandoned immediately afterward, and never from that day to this has it been adopted or followed.

I think it is an open secret that in 1876 the President of the Senate, Mr. Ferry, was ready to count the vote, believing that he would be sustained in this action by the administration; but his party, at that time in control of the Senate of the United States, after a thorough and exhaustive examination of all the precedents which were compiled and collated, decided that he had not the power. The claim was not insisted on, because it could not be sustained.

The ablest speech made, I think, on that question was that of Senator Conkling. It would be impossible to condense his splendid argument or for me to repeat it, but his position, unanswerably maintained, was this: The sole provision in the Constitution touching this question is this: "The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted." Here is a duty imposed upon the President of the Senate. He shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open the certificates. Then the first person is dropped and the third person is taken up; there the sentence changes its construction; there the duty imposed upon the President of the Senate ceases, and afterwards a new part of speech is used—the third person is adopted, and a verb relating to a noun in the third person, "the votes," employed, and a new duty imposed by the words "and the votes shall then be counted."

Again, to quote consecutively the words imposing a duty on the presiding officer—

The President of the Senate shall open all the certificates—

there the duty ceases—

and the votes shall then be counted.

Counted by whom? Let us examine. The provision is that the opening of these certificates shall be in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Why are they present? They must have a duty to perform, and they can be there but for one purpose, the purpose of superintending the counting of the votes after the President of the Senate shall have opened the certificates. Now this construction has been agreed upon, I think I may say, by nine-tenths of the Democrats in Congress, as well as by nine-tenths of the Republicans.

They have discussed the question over and over again in the Senate; and this bill, as I have said before, has come to us practically in the same shape, and practically by the unanimous vote of both parties in that body, four different times. If this bill is correct, then in its first proposition, that the vote is to be counted in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives by and under their superintendence and direction, it necessarily follows that it is to be done in the presence of the Senate as an organized body, and in the presence of the House as an organized body.

The words are not in the presence of the members of the Senate, or in the presence of the members of the House of Representatives, but in the presence of the Senate, which can only mean the organized Senate, and the House of Representatives, which can only mean the organized House of Representatives.

Here, then, we have, according to the construction agreed upon by such great weight of authority, two distinct bodies that are to be present and take part in the count of the votes. Just there arises the difficulty this bill proposes to provide for. If two organized bodies, two persons, are to count, there will be no count if they disagree, because counting is an affirmative act. If one says count this vote and the other says no, then there can be no count of that vote. To provide, as far as possible, against such disagreements, the bill provides that the States may appoint tribunals by law enacted before elections take place, and that by these tribunals each State for itself may decide who are its regularly chosen electors.

I have not time to discuss this proposition, but it seems to me fair and reasonable; and if no one has a better plan—and during ten years no more acceptable plan seems to have been suggested—then it does seem that the House of Representatives ought to agree to this proposition. I understand the House Committee having this bill in charge are practically unanimous, nearly all being in favor of decisions by State tribunals; but the minority say they want to reserve to the States the right to pass a law even after an election.

Mr. Speaker, to me this proposition seems mischievous in the extreme. It would simply give the power to any State, after an election was held and a dispute had arisen, to trump up in that State an electoral commission to decide that question according to rules to be made for the occasion, which would enable it to reach precisely the decision desired by the majority in the State Legislature. This is the first objection. The second is equally as strong. Unless you provide beforehand that State laws establishing these tribunals or conferring jurisdiction on tribunals already established shall be passed in advance of the election, no State will take the trouble to pass such laws. If the States know that they can, whenever a case arises, convene the legislature and pass a bill to dispose of each electoral question, you remove all probability of the passage of such laws. I do not know, not having heard distinctly the arguments on the other side, but presume that gentlemen adopt the theory that this is a violation of the rights of the States to prescribe any such condition. Now, to me it seems there is nothing in this argument, because here the Constitution vests in the Federal Government the power to count the votes; and the exercise of that power is a Federal function, to be controlled by the Federal Government. The rules of evidence we have the right to prescribe, because the Constitution is silent upon the question. A power has been given, and it is perfectly plain that the Constitution vests in Congress the power to enact what legislation is necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of the provision granting the power.

One argument used by the gentleman on the other side, who has just taken his seat, is drawn from the writings of Chancellor Kent. In that quotation Chancellor Kent says that while it is his opinion the President of the Senate has the right to count the vote, that it is only "in the absence of legislation," clearly implying that, according to his idea, the right exists in Congress to legislate on the subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find that my time is about to elapse and that I am not able to go on with the argument which I had proposed to offer in connection with this bill. Let me say, however, that I hope the principal amendment recommended by the majority of the committee will prevail. I am for this bill with that amendment, or I am for it without the amendment; but I think it provides one further safeguard that ought to be enacted into law.

In conclusion let me say that a grave responsibility will rest upon us if we fail to provide some mode of counting the electoral vote. We witnessed the peril into which the country was drawn in 1876; we heard the murmurs which followed the decision of the Electoral Commission; we remember how for hours and days the country trembled two years ago at the thought that another disputed Presidential election was at hand and no law providing for its settlement. We have heard the demand coming up from all quarters of the land, and I do hope the House will not refuse to pass some law on the subject.

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. I desire to offer an amendment striking out of section 4, in lines 20 and 21, these words:

And the names of the persons, if any, elected.

So that it will read:

The result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote; which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that unless there is some other understanding on the floor the amendments proposed by the committee, which are always considered as pending, must be disposed of first.

Mr. OATES. I only ask this to be considered after the amendments proposed by the committee are disposed of. I desire to offer it at this stage because the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] has notified me he was about to move the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Tennessee asks the previous question he can indicate on what amendments he desires it to operate.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. It is whether the amendment I proposed will be cut off by the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes, unless there be some understanding to the contrary, that no amendments are considered as pending at this stage except those of the committee.

Mr. EDEN. I will ask the privilege of offering that amendment, so that it may be covered by the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that all gentlemen who desire to offer amendments send them to the Clerk's desk before the previous question is demanded, so that gentlemen representing the committee may hear what they are and decide as to whether they shall be covered by the previous question.

Mr. EDEN. My amendment was sent up at the beginning of the remarks I made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. But it is not pending unless there is some understanding to that effect.

Mr. EDEN. I will ask the privilege of offering it now so that it may be considered as pending after the previous question shall be ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks consent that the amendment he sent yesterday to the desk shall be considered as pending.

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

Mr. DIBBLE. I simply rise for the purpose of offering formally the amendments contained in the views of the minority of the committee which the Clerk has at the desk.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection they will be considered as pending.

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. I now ask the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. FINDLAY. Before the question is taken on ordering the previous question——

Mr. CALDWELL. I insist on my motion.

Mr. FINDLAY. I desire to offer an amendment to correct what the committee themselves, I think, will recognize to be a defect in the verbiage of the bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] for a moment that I may understand what he proposes; but in doing so I do not abandon the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland will state what he proposes.

Mr. FINDLAY. I have reduced my amendment to writing. I propose to strike out in line 14 of section 3, on page 2, the words "the same," and insert the word "similar." I do this on the principle of simile non est idem. You say "the same certificate," and you have already provided that that is to go to the Secretary of State.

Mr. CALDWELL. The language is "the same certificate in triplicate."

Mr. FINDLAY. It is not the same, but similar. And then, in line 15, you should change "certificate" to "certificates," making it plural; so that it will read:

Similar certificates in triplicate under the seal of the State.

I also want to add in line 28 of the same section the words:

And shall also transmit a similar certificate to the President of the Senate.

That is a certificate of the determination which has been made in any case of a controversy or a dispute. The bill does not provide that the President of the Senate shall have the determination certified to him where there has been a dispute or controversy in the State. You provide that it shall go to the Secretary of State. It seems to me the President of the Senate, who has all the other papers, should have certified to him the determination where there has been a controversy or dispute.

Mr. CALDWELL. I decline to yield for those amendments.

Mr. FINDLAY. I send up my amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee declines to yield and has demanded the previous question.

Mr. FINDLAY. What is the effect of ordering the previous question?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered it cuts off all amendments except those which have been reported by the committee and those which by unanimous consent are considered as pending.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first of the amendments proposed by the majority of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 38, after the word "one" insert the word "lawful."

Mr. CALDWELL. I call the attention of the Clerk to the fact that in the report he will find a verbal amendment which comes before that one. It is to insert on page 3 of the bill, line 22, after the words "State of," the word "a;" so that it will read:

And if there shall have been any final determination in a State of a controversy, &c.

This was omitted in the Senate bill; but I find that in the print I have before me the article is inserted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection that correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 38, after the word "one" insert the word "lawful."

Mr. CALDWELL. The committee have determined to abandon that amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 5, lines 38 and 39, after the word "rejected" strike out the words "except by the affirmative votes of both Houses."

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 72, noes 70.

Tellers were ordered, and the Speaker appointed Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, to act as tellers.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 86.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Strike out in lines 61, 62, and 63, after the word "which," in line 61, the words "the two Houses acting separately shall concurrently decide to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State."

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the minority of the committee propose to amend that amendment by their amendment No. 3, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The minority amendment was read, as follows:

Amend the amendment proposed by the majority of the committee by striking out from the said amendments the words "unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State."

The amendment of the minority was rejected—ayes 7, noes 89.

The amendment of the committee was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. These are all the amendments proposed by the committee. The minority propose certain amendments, which will now be read.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I offered comes in, I think, before the minority amendments. It was offered with the consent of the majority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The minority has pending an amendment to section 2, and the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] is to section 4. That fact, however, would not control the question of priority in considering the amendments.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In section 2, lines 1, 2, and 3, strike out the words "laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors," and insert the word "law;" and in line 8 of the same section strike out the words "so existing on said day."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In section 2, lines 5, 6, and 7, strike out the words "and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors;" and in line 9 of the same section strike out the words "at least six days," and the word "said" in the same line.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] comes next in order.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend section 4 by striking out of lines 20 and 21 the following words: "and the names of the persons, if any, elected;" so that the provision, if amended, will read: "who [the President of the Senate] shall thereupon announce the state of the vote; which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States."

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 27, noes 37.

Mr. OATES. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 90; no quorum voting.

Mr. CALDWELL. I call for the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 141, nays 109, not voting 72; as follows:

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. DOWDNEY with Mr. BRUMM, until Saturday next.

Mr. STORM with Mr. LITTLE, until further notice.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. MATSON with Mr. GILFILLAN.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. LIBBEY.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. BURNES with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. CURTIN with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. HALSELL with Mr. WADSWORTH.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "State," in line 37, of section 4, insert "which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been certified to according to section 3 of this act;" so that the clause will read as follows:

"And the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit such objections to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been certified to according to section 3 of this act, from which but one return has been received, shall be rejected."

The amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 30, noes 26.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] calls up for consideration the special order, the bill he has indicated, and moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to resume its consideration.

The motion of Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that general debate on this bill has been limited by order of the House and that the time has all been occupied with the exception of some forty minutes. I ask the Chairman to turn to the record, and by so doing I think it will be found that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is now entitled to the floor, and has remaining some thirty or forty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor for thirty-seven minutes.

Mr. HATCH. What further time for general debate remains under the order of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not advised at present, but will look at the record to ascertain that fact. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is now entitled to the floor for thirty-seven minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like to know before the gentleman proceeds exactly how much time remains for debate on this question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the time remaining is one hour and fifty-four minutes, of which the gentleman from Iowa is entitled to thirty-seven minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the Chair say the one hour and fifty-four minutes are to be consumed by one side only?

The CHAIRMAN. The discussion on this bill took place at the last session of Congress, and the Chair is not now advised as to what was the division of time.

Mr. REAGAN. It would seem strange that nearly two hours on one side should be taken up in closing the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time seems to have been disposed of under an order of the House, for which the Chair is not responsible.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill is to give to the industrial interests of the country an executive department whose head shall be a member of the President's Cabinet, on equal footing with every other member of that body. It may be claimed that it is a new departure. So it is; and so was the bill that established the Department of the Interior at a recent period in the history of the country.

Now, if this bill shall become a law it will give the united industrial interests of the country a status which they have not had during the first century of the Republic. It will give the united labor interests a voice in Cabinet councils, in shaping the policy of administrations, and in criticising laws and policies. They have been excluded for a century. It is time for a change.

To my mind, sir, this is a proper bill. It is an important step toward the solution of the controversy now going on between associated capital and organized labor.

The head of this department will be authorized to make separate reports to Congress, one concerning the condition of labor in the country, and the other concerning the condition of agriculture, to be bound separately, inasmuch as they go to different constituencies.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, comes before the House, and it is unusual, with the sanction of two committees.

I had the honor during the first week of the first session of this Congress to introduce a bill to organize a department of labor. The honorable chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HATCH] introduced a bill at the same time to organize the department of agriculture, and the pending bill is a union or combination of all the substantial provisions of both those bills. Wage-workers and agriculturists are associated by the same law, subject to the same vicissitudes, and ought to be represented in the Cabinet councils. I hope the bill may pass and become a law without serious objection.

I reserve the remaining portion of my time.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas for ten minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I examined this subject to some extent during the last session, but for some time have had my mind withdrawn from the subject. I desire to state, however, the committee's bill has for its effect to make the Commissioner of Agriculture an executive officer, and is limited to such provisions as relate to the interests of agriculture and labor. For the House bill I have offered a pending substitute, which was prepared very carefully by Mr. KENNA, now a Senator from West Virginia. That bill, which I introduced, is a bill (H. R. 8674) to establish the department of industries; and it is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be at the seat of Government an executive department to be known as the department of industries, and a secretary of industries, who shall be the head thereof.

SEC. 2. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of agriculture, and to superintend said division a commissioner of agriculture, who shall be a practical agriculturist, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be entitled to receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of collecting and disseminating all important and useful information concerning agriculture, and also concerning such scientific matters and industrial pursuits as relate to the interests of agriculture, the secretary of industries shall organize the following bureaus in the division of Agriculture, namely:

First. The bureau of agricultural products, which shall include divisions of botany, entomology, and chemistry; and the chief of which bureau, who shall be a practical agriculturist, shall investigate the modes of farming in the several States and Territories, and shall report such practical information as shall tend to increase the profits of the farmer; respecting the various methods; the crops most profitable in the several sections; the preferable varieties of seeds, vines, plants, and fruits; fertilizers; implements; buildings; and similar matters.

Second. The bureau of animal industry, to be in charge of a competent veterinary surgeon, who shall investigate and report upon the number, value, and condition of the domestic animals of the United States; their protection, growth, and use; the causes, prevention, or cure of contagious, communicable, or other diseases; and the kinds, races, or breeds best adapted to the several sections for profitable raising.

Third. The bureau of lands, the chief of which shall investigate and report upon the resources or capabilities of the public or other lands for farming, stock-raising, timber, manufacturing, mining, or other industrial uses. And all powers and duties vested in the commission now known as the Geological Survey, together with all clerks, employés, and agents, and all instruments, records, books, papers, &c., are hereby transferred to the department of industries. And the secretary of industries shall institute such investigations and collect and report such information, facts, and statistics relative to the mines and mining of the United States, and facilities for their ventilation and general operation, as may be deemed of value and importance.

SEC. 4. That in addition to the duties imposed by chapter 10, title 7, of the Revised Statutes, the secretary of industries shall cause to be collected and report the agricultural statistics of the United States; and, in addition, all important information or statistics relating to industrial education and agricultural colleges; to markets and prices; to modes and cost of transporting agricultural products and live stock to their final market; to the demand, supply, and prices in foreign markets; to the location, number, and products of manufacturing establishments of whatever sort, their sources of raw material, methods, markets, cost of transportation, and prices; to such commercial or other conditions as may affect the market value of farm products or the interests of the industrial classes of the United States. And the secretary is hereby authorized to establish such divisions in this bureau, and to make such monthly or other reports, as he shall deem most effective for the prompt dissemination of such reliable information respecting crops and domestic and foreign markets as will be of service to the farmers, miners, mechanics, laborers, or other industrialists of the United States.

SEC. 5. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of labor, which shall be under the superintendence of the commissioner of labor; and the bureau of labor, as provided for in chapter 127 of the acts of the Forty-eighth Congress, with its officers and duties, shall be transferred from the Department of the Interior to the department of industries.

SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of commerce, and to superintend said division a commissioner of commerce, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 7. That all divisions and subdivisions, bureaus or parts thereof, heretofore attaching to the Treasury Department by virtue of the provisions of chapter 10 of title 7 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the Bureau of Statistics, which shall hereafter be known as the bureau of external commerce; title 48, relating to commerce and navigation; title 49, relating to the regulation of vessels in foreign commerce; title 50, relating to the regulation of vessels in domestic commerce; title 52, relating to the regulation of steam-vessels; title 56, relating to the Coast Survey; title 55, relating to lights and buoys; sections 4801, 4802, 4803, 4804, 4805, and 4806, of chapter 1, title 59, relating to hospital relief for seamen; and chapter 265 of the acts of the Forty-fifth Congress, second session, relating to the Life-Saving Service, or by virtue of any law amendatory of said several provisions, or regulations in pursuance thereof, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be parts of the division of commerce in the department of industries; and the secretary of industries shall establish in said division of commerce a bureau of internal commerce, to be organized and governed as other bureaus in said division.

SEC. 8. That all duties devolving upon the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of the several provisions mentioned in the preceding section shall, from and after the passage of this act, be performed by the secretary of industries. The authority conferred and the duties imposed by said several provisions upon the Register of the Treasury shall, from and after the passage of this act, be exercised and discharged by the commissioner of commerce. All bonds authorized by any of the provisions aforesaid to be made payable to the Register of the Treasury shall, from and after the passage of this act, be made payable to the commissioner of commerce.

SEC. 9. That section 158, title 4, of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the words: "Eighth. The department of industries."

SEC. 10. That this act shall not be construed to interfere with the present organization of the various Departments, divisions, subdivisions, and bureaus embraced herein, except with reference to the transfer thereof to the department of industries, subject to the general provisions of law relating to regulations in the various Departments of the Government and appointments to office therein.

SEC. 11. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

I have felt, Mr. Chairman, that I could occupy the time of the House to much better advantage by reading the provisions of this substitute, to show that it is a carefully prepared measure, the result of some years of labor on the part of Senator KENNA, with what labor I could give to it myself, and after full conference with the Departments of the Government.

As will be observed by the reading of the substitute, it makes a transfer of these surplus bureaus from the Treasury and Interior Departments to another Department of the Government, to be called the department of industries, with the necessary officers at its head. You will see also, by reference to the bill, that it is thoroughly perfect and matured, and if this bureau shall be created it will result in the transfer from the other Departments of the Government of everything relating to agriculture, to labor, and to commerce.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time yielded to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. This is a very important measure, and I would be glad to be indulged for a few minutes longer.

Mr. HATCH. I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. Pursuing the same line of thought, it will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that this proposed substitute makes the head of this department of industries a Cabinet officer of the Government. In this it provides that the two interests of greatest possible importance in this country, the great industrial interests, agriculture and commerce, are given a place in the Departments of the Government as well as the benefit of an officer at their head who may be selected on account of his intelligence and ability to take care of and make suitable recommendations in relation to these important subjects.

A bare glance at the provisions of the bill for which that is offered as a substitute, and which I would read if I had the time, will show how much more perfectly drawn are the provisions of the substitute than are those of the original bill. While the original bill does not give a separate head to the department of agriculture, it gives a head to a department covering both agriculture and commerce, and makes the amplest provisions for officers with high salaries at the heads of both agriculture and commerce, so that we may thus collect all the information necessary with reference to the interests of agriculture and with reference to the interests of commerce——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The trouble with the substitute of the gentleman from Texas, in my judgment, is, that it overlooks the great body of wage-workers entirely in this country. It provides a department for agriculture and for commerce, but it leaves out the labor interests of the country entirely.

Mr. REAGAN. I think my friend from Iowa has not paid attention to the reading of the substitute. It provides for a bureau of labor, incorporating the present labor legislation into it; and gives all the officers and powers necessary to collect information that the committee's bill gives on that subject.

In addition to that, while covering all in connection with labor, it covers also the interests of agriculture, providing a detailed organization for the department of agriculture, and also for the interests of commerce, with a detailed organization for the interests of commerce, with provisions, as I have already shown, for transferring the various bureaus from the different Departments of the Government which are properly connected with the department of industry. I feel satisfied that if the House had both bills before them, and could examine and compare them, they would not hesitate to determine that the substitute bill is in every respect preferable to that of the committee; and in order that you may see the force of this assertion, I will venture to read the committee's bill. It provides—

That the department of agriculture, established at the seat of Government of the United States, shall be an Executive Department, to be known as the department of agriculture and labor, under the supervision and control of a secretary of agriculture and labor, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and section 158 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to include such department, and the provisions of title 4 of the Revised Statutes are hereby made applicable to said department.

SEC. 2. That there shall be in said department an assistant secretary of agriculture and labor, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall perform such duties as may be required by law or prescribed by the secretary.

SEC. 3. That the secretary of agriculture and labor shall hereafter receive the same salary as is paid to the Secretary of each of the Executive Departments, and the salary of the assistant secretary of agriculture and labor shall be the same as that now paid to the Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws relating to the department of agriculture now in existence, as far as the same are applicable and not in conflict with this act, and only so far, are continued in full force and effect.

SEC. 5. That there shall be in the department of agriculture and labor a division which shall be under the charge of a commissioner of labor, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The commissioner of labor shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed, unless sooner removed, and shall receive a salary of $4,000 a year. The commissioner shall collect information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity, and the best means to protect life and prevent accident in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry.

Which it seems to me is going to a very much greater length than Congress is warranted in going.

The secretary, upon recommendation of said commissioner, shall appoint a chief clerk, who shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum, and such other employés as may be necessary for said division. The commissioner shall annually make a report in writing to the secretary of agriculture and labor of the information collected and collated by him, and containing such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the division.

And I call attention especially to this provision—

The secretary of agriculture and labor shall be empowered to inquire into the causes of discontent which may exist between employers and employés within the United States, and he may invite and hear sworn statements from both such parties concerning the matters in controversy.

Which is going far beyond any power which the House has, in my judgment.

The secretary shall make a report annually to Congress upon the condition of labor in the United States, accompanied by such recommendations as he may deem important; and said reports, with accompanying documents, shall be printed and bound in a volume separate and apart from the reports on agriculture.

SEC. 6. That the act approved June 27, 1884, establishing a bureau of labor, is hereby repealed.

Mr. HATCH. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, when this proposition was first broached in public discussion, I thought it was a good one; but subsequent reflection has satisfied and convinced me that it is bad both as regards the best interests of agriculture and as a question of public policy. In the first place, we propose to change the present industrial department of agriculture into a great political department of the Government, and when that is done we shall proceed to load it down with all manner of work other than that which is strictly germane to agriculture. Agriculture cannot fail to receive far less of practical attention from the Government under this proposed change than it receives at the present time. We now have our Commissioner, reporting only to the President and to Congress, and not liable to be loaded down, as this bill will load him down, with many other different kinds of work.

Then, sir, there is another consideration, and that is that for the first time in the history of this Government it is proposed to establish a great political division of government upon a basis that is not a function of the Government.

This is class legislation, so far as the title and aspects of the bill go, and of decided and vicious character. One of the great functions of government is to conduct operations of war, and hence we have a War Department and a Navy Department. One of the great constitutional functions of government is to deal with matters of taxation and to keep and pay out the public money, and hence we have the Treasury Department. And so you can go on through all the great divisions of public labor and you find that every one of the great political departments of the Government is predicated by name on what is a constitutional function of the Government. Our Government can constitutionally give certain aid to science; it must conduct certain public works, and it has a great commerce power. So, if it were proposed to have a department of science, or a department of public works, or a department of commerce, it would be in exact accord with the divisions of public labor and of public policy which we have followed in the past, and it would be logical and constitutional.

But now it is proposed to have a department of agriculture. The Government does not carry on agriculture. That is a pursuit and function of the people, and not of the Government. We might just as well have a department of surgery; we might just as well have a department of mines and mining; we might just as well have a department of any other pursuit of the people if we are not going to be invidious in our treatment of the various pursuits and classes of the citizens; all of which would be against the Constitution as it is, and as it ought to be. Sir, we want no favors. We want justice. We want no class legislation. We are fighting class legislation. We reject this delusive offer, fraught, as it is, with present injury to agriculture, dragging the present department of agriculture into politics to be presided over, with divided attention, by some politician, instead of, as now, by a practical agriculturalist, with nothing but this business to engage his time. We give away our refusal to be treated as a class in the making of laws, consenting to the creating of new and unnecessary offices and to the increase of expenses that we must pay. We consent by this to an abhorrent breach in the Constitution and in our best political traditions. We sell our birth-right for a mess of pottage; for that which is sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. We turn aside from our great purposes, and from the true path of relief.

Sir, what we ought to do is to pay proper attention to the commerce of the people, and to render that aid to science which is constitutional and proper; and when the great classes of the citizens in their personal and civil divisions of industry in this country come to Congress for relief, see to it, if they have grievances, that they are properly removed by making the laws of this country such as to apply with absolute equality and without distinction upon all classes of the people alike. Agriculture is not to be benefited by a name. Agriculture is not to be benefited by mere tinsel and frippery. This is but a deception. What agriculture needs is a repeal of those laws which have dethroned her from the imperial position which God gave her and which she ought to occupy in this land to-day.

Sir, it is not the lack of a department of agriculture which made the agricultural State of Indiana in the last decade, when the average increase of wealth in this country was $90 per capita, increase her wealth by only $3 per capita. It was not the lack of a department of agriculture which made the State of Missouri, when the average increase for the whole country was $90 per capita, go back $40 per capita from her estimated actual wealth at the beginning of the decade. It was not this that made my own State of Arkansas lose $16 per capita when the average gain of the nation was $90 per capita. Who got our share and more than their own? It was not so once. In God's name reduce your taxes. Cease making the farmer pay subsidy to privileged classes. You are crushing the people. Away with this delusive bill. You point to it as something done, and it increases burdens. Let us keep our real purposes in full view, obscured by nothing, holding fast to the doctrines of the fathers, and contend for repeals and not for new enactments.

Mr. HATCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It is to be hoped that those members on this floor who profess to be advocating the interest of agriculture will deal fairly and squarely with this bill. If they do they will tell you that the object of this bill is not to promote the agricultural interests of this country, but that its purpose is to subserve the interests of what they call the wageworkers of the land. In other words, if they deal honestly with the people they will admit that their purpose is to destroy and smother the agricultural interest of this country by blanketing it with an interest directly in opposition to it.

There is no man on this floor but knows that the wageworker demands cheap breadstuffs; that the wageworker demands that that which the farmer produces shall be sold to him at whatever he can buy it for. And at the same time the agricultural interest of this country is complaining that all the legislation tends simply to help those who are engaged in the protected interests, while those engaged in agriculture have no protection whatever for their labor.

If gentlemen desire to protect the agricultural interests of this country, let them break off the shackles of trade and allow the agriculturist to go into the markets of the world and sell his grain. Let them pass laws that will curb the monopolies and the extortion of railroads, so that there will no longer be five or six millions of dollars worth of grain rotting every year in our Western granaries.

But there are other objections to this bill. It undertakes not only to create a department of agriculture, but when we deny to the great Department of War an Assistant Secretary, when we deny to the great Department of the Navy an Assistant Secretary, this bill puts the department of agriculture ahead of either one of these Departments, and creates not only a secretary who shall be equal to the members of the Cabinet, but an assistant secretary also. Not only do they create an assistant secretary, but the bill goes further and creates a commissioner of labor, whose powers shall be as great as the powers of the Commissioner of Agriculture are now.

There is nothing in the world in the necessities of this case demanding such an advance in the creation of a department. If we desire a Department of Agriculture there is no reason why there should be two secretaries in that and only one in the War Department; no reason why there should be two secretaries in that and only one in the Navy Department; no reason why in addition to these two secretaries there should still be a commissioner of labor with the powers now exercised by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The bill is top heavy. It creates officers for whose services the country has no use. It loads down the civil list of the country, adds to the taxation, and is only one of the many artifices now being used to get rid of that surplus taxation that is drawn from the people.

I want to repeat again that this bill is not in the interest of agriculture. It will not help one solitary farmer in all this land, but, like the much vaunted oleomargarine bill, it will only injure those whom it pretends to benefit.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, to the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; agreed to a further conference, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. GORMAN.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair).

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] for the remainder of the time which he has reserved.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I can see no force whatever in the suggestion of the honorable gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that this bill proposes to create a great political department. The same may be said of the Treasury Department. The same may be said of the Interior Department. Those are Executive Departments, but they are not necessarily political departments, nor were they created with that view. That they may have political significance is certainly no argument why they should not exist, and that this proposed department might have such significance is no argument why this bill should not pass, if it has intrinsic merits. The Secretary of the Treasury is nothing more nor less than a secretary of capital—capital is the product of labor. It is strange indeed if we may not have a department of labor.

No law can be passed relating to financial matters, no law can be passed affecting the public domain, no law can be passed relating to taxation that does not bear directly upon labor. But for the first hundred years in the history of the Republic labor has had no voice and has not been consulted. Labor has not been present and has had no friend at court.

It is high time that they should claim their rights and demand equal privileges and equal laws. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] thinks there is no warrant for this in the Constitution. We already have the very provision that he criticises in the bureau of labor now under the control of the Interior Department, and the only additional power proposed to be given to the commissioner of labor is the power to inquire into the causes of discontent which may exist between employers and employés, and to make recommendations in regard to remedies for such evils. He may invite the attendance of witnesses and receive the sworn statements of both parties to the controversy. This is a power greatly needed.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] concedes that the Government has great power over the commerce of the country. So it has. But what are the sources of commerce? Labor and agriculture. Without them this country would be a barren waste. Without labor and without the agricultural pursuits we should have no commerce. Now, this bill simply proposes to give these great sources of wealth a position commensurate with their dignity and importance; a position where they can make themselves heard and felt; where their criticisms upon policies and upon laws can be given effect, and where they can command the respect of the people and of the law-makers. How any evil can possibly result from this is more than I can comprehend. It will be productive only of good. This bill is demanded by the great body of wageworkers in this country. It is indorsed by the leading labor organizations and by the leading agriculturists of the country, and it has received the unanimous indorsement of the Committees on Labor and on Agriculture. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, as regards the objections to this bill on constitutional grounds just presented by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], I am not one of those who are limited by constitutional interpretations, either in a desire for legislation or in voting for legislation, which shall protect the working people of this country against such oppressions as may by circumstances be placed upon them; therefore I care nothing whether heretofore executive departments have only been organized upon the basis of a constitutional function of government or not. We have to-day a Department of Agriculture; and the practical question now presented by these bills is whether we shall include in that department commerce and agriculture, according to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], or, on the other hand, adopt the committees' bill, which includes in this department labor as well as agriculture.

As to the first proposition, for one I am opposed to combining commerce and agriculture in the same executive department, for the simple reason that it means an attempt to combine the interest of the railroad companies with the interest of the farmers; and those two things are in practical effect to-day as dissimilar and antagonistic as are gunpowder and a coal of fire. Hence I do not want the two brought together. The farmer is oppressed and robbed enough now by railroad corporations, without having the department which for years has been given to him alone, that of agriculture, turned over practically into hands that may be subjected to railway manipulation.

Coming to the other proposition, that of uniting labor and agriculture, we find a natural affiliation between these two great groups. There is a mutuality of interest; and if this is to be a "political department," as has been alleged in the debate, though I do not so understand it, then certainly there are no two classes in this nation that should more properly combine because of a mutuality of interest—I do not mean formally—in securing their rights as against corporate oppression. In my judgment, the sooner and the more completely they act together in common defense the better will it be for them and the whole nation. For this reason, if there must be a union of interests in this executive department, I would very much rather have the union of labor and agriculture than the union of commerce and agriculture.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, referring to an objection made, I think, by my friend from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], that there is something more proposed by this bill than a mere "name." If it is simply proposed that the present Commissioner of Agriculture shall be called a secretary, and be only the figure-head of a department, if that is all, then let the whole thing fail.

But back of that there is something more. You have to-day represented in Cabinet meeting the financial and manufacturing interests of the country, the interests of our Army and Navy, of patentors, Indians, and railroads. Why shall not the material interests of seven-tenths of our people be represented in Cabinet meetings by a secretary of agriculture and labor? Why not thus do for them whatever it may be possible to do in the way of shaping the policy of an administration when matters are in plastic form? Why not let the men who labor, whether in the furrow or in the shop, the farmers, the mechanics, the day-workers, these great masses of our nation, have a representative at that table—have there at all times some one competent to express their opinions and requirements, and charged with the duty of maintaining their interests as against conflicting interests in a Cabinet meeting?

More is proposed than a "mere name;" more is proposed than simply to have a secretary who shall be called the head of the department of agriculture. It is proposed to have a department, which, by its action month by month, shall give to the farmer and the laboring man of our country such information as shall be of specific advantage to them. In other words, it is proposed to collect from different quarters of the globe information as to the prices of wheat, the condition of crops, the effect of transportation rates—to give this intelligence promptly to the farmer; and equally specific and valuable intelligence for the benefit of the wageworker. What harm can come from this? What is there wrong in it? Why not educate the masses in this way? Why not give to them that exact and special information which will make their labor more profitable to them, and thus enhance the general prosperity?

It does seem to me that the time has come when it is fair and reasonable that a nation like ours, a nation which has its whole power in the people, and from the people, should, under that broad constitutional power and duty to "promote the general welfare," not only establish the department of agriculture and labor, but enlarge it, fully equip it, and give it special direction, so that the laboring men of this country, whether in shops or on the broad prairies, where are to be found to-day the great mass of those who constitute the nation and its power, shall have an intelligent representative in a Cabinet meeting who has direct access to the Presidential ear.

I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] for the five minutes yielded me.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the fact that the present bill is no new measure in the House of Representatives. The propositions embodied in the first section of this bill, except that embraced in the words "and labor," have been before the House for its consideration and action in the past three Congresses. In the third session of the Forty-sixth Congress, on the 7th of February, 1881, Mr. AIKEN, from the Committee on Agriculture, moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill similar to this, the bill (H. R. 4909) on which motion the yeas were 164, the nays 83, not voting 45; so that the measure failed by only one vote to receive the necessary two-thirds. Again, in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress a bill (H. R. 4429) was reported to the House by Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Agriculture, was made a special order, and, after full consideration and discussion, passed the House on the 10th of May, 1882, by the overwhelming vote of yeas 183, nays 7, not voting 101.

Again, in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress, on the 15th of December, 1884, Mr. AIKEN, from the Committee on Agriculture, moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 1457); which, after consideration under the rules, passed the House by the decisive vote of yeas 166, nays 69, not voting 88.

The opposition made to this bill on the part of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKIN-

RIDGE], and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] I have heard ventilated on this floor during the past three Congresses. Every time this measure has been before the House of Representatives certain members have attacked it on the ground that there is no specific warrant in the Constitution for the establishment of a department of agriculture.

They can find abundant warrant in the Constitution for the establishment of a War Department, with a Secretary of War who has charge to-day of the forces of our little Army, top-heavy with officers, and numbering less than twenty-eight thousand men, I am told! And yet it is perfectly unconstitutional to erect a great department of the Government, having the interest of more than thirty millions of people in charge, more than half of the people of the United States who engage in agriculture!

It is unconstitutional to place a representative of that great interest in the Cabinet of the President, but it is constitutional to have a Secretary of the Navy, with a few boats, not one of which ever dares to get four miles from shore, and which never meets one of these coal-scows, and happens to come into collision with it, without going to the bottom of the sea. [Great laughter.] Yet it is perfectly constitutional to have a Secretary of the Navy with a little navy which you can hide between here and the mouth of the Potomac River. [Laughter and applause.] It is perfectly constitutional to make a Secretary of the Navy, with all the tinselry and tomfoolery round that Department, and place him at the Cabinet table; but thirty millions of people engaged in agriculture are not to be entitled to the same consideration! It is perfectly constitutional and legitimate to erect a Department of the Interior, and let the land question and a few Indians be represented in the Cabinet of the United States, but the great labor interests of the country, agriculture and labor, must be driven out into the cold and insulted on the floor of this House year after year by the charge it is nothing but a seed bureau for the distribution of pumpkin-seed, and for that purpose a Commissioner of Agriculture is enough. [Laughter.]

So long as I hold a seat on this floor my voice will be raised in behalf of that great body of people who have demanded through every authorized organization known to agriculture in this country this bill should pass the Congress of the United States. Agriculture has in the United States a few organizations. We have an organization in this country known as the Grange. It has a national organization, and it has State, county, and local organizations. For the past ten years it has spoken at every one of its meetings in behalf of the passage of this bill. Yet the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] undertakes to say that agriculture does not need it. Who authorized him to utter that sentiment on this floor? Every organization of farmers in the State of Arkansas which has met in the last ten years has declared to the contrary. The rooms of the Committees on Agriculture of the Senate and of the House to-day are filled with petitions from your State in favor of the passage of this bill. Every labor organization in the United States to-day has indorsed the provisions of this bill. We are asking for agriculture and labor simply the recognition of the Congress of the United States, which they have been demanding for the past ten or twelve years, and demanding through every organization known to agriculture and labor.

Why should they not have it? Why should not one-half of the people of the United States engaged in that great industry which is the foundation of your financial and commercial prosperity, why should they not have it? What would you do for commerce if it were not for agriculture? How much commerce would you have in the United States if it were not for that commerce which grows out of the agricultural products of the country? How much finance would you have in this country if it were not for agriculture? Who produces the balance of trade which has to-day made the credit of the United States better than that of any other nation upon the face of the globe? [Applause.] What use would we have for an interstate-commerce bill if it were not to take charge of the products of agriculture? [Laughter and applause.] Take out of the commerce between the States, wheat, corn, cotton, tobacco, rice, cattle, and hogs, and there is not a railroad in the United States to-day upon the roadbed of which grass would not grow inside of six months. [Applause.]

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman inquire what we would do with our agricultural products and with our manufactured fabrics if we had no commerce and no means of transportation?

Mr. HATCH. I do not propose to get rid of commerce. I am in favor of commerce. Agriculture is in favor of commerce. The agriculturists of the country indorse your bill; and yet every time the agriculturists of the country come in here and ask for the measure of justice you roll yourself in front of its car and attempt to stop its progress. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman misrepresents my position, and he knows he misrepresents it. He knows he misrepresents my position. I have introduced a bill which I have presented and urged for two or three years, and which I reported from my committee, embracing the subjects of commerce, agriculture, and labor.

Mr. HATCH. But that is not the agricultural bill. I am simply talking of the obstacle put in the way of the passage of the bill. I know what you have put in the bill to which you refer, and I know two-thirds of its provisions are taken from the bills introduced in the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses establishing bureaus which are now in existence under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has not consumed all of his time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has twenty-six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HATCH. One of the sections of the proposed substitute contemplates the creation of a bureau of animal industry, and yet a Bureau of Animal Industry has been established under the law, and is now in existence, through the medium of a bill passed in the Forty-sixth Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. And this provides for transferring it into this new department.

Mr. HATCH. But it is already in the department, and does not need to be transferred. The trouble is, that you drew up your bill some years ago, and have not studied your question since, Judge. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. REAGAN. The difference between us is that the gentleman from Missouri is a little in advance of the legislation on the subject. He is talking of a department that does not exist.

Mr. HATCH. But the Department of Agriculture is in existence.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes; but not as this bill provides for it. It is a very different thing as it exists from what you would make it here.

Mr. HATCH. Ah! but it is a department to-day, separate and independent, and the law declares it is. It is now the Department of Agriculture, and what we want to do is to take it out of the rut of former legislation and place it where it ought to be, make it what it should be, a department in fact as well as in name, and place a secretary over it who shall have a place in the Cabinet councils of this great nation. We have a right to demand it, and these substitutes that are offered, each of them containing some good provisions, will only obstruct and hinder the perfection of legislation upon this subject, although the time will come, after this measure has been adopted, when I will advocate on this floor the adding to this great department of some of the propositions or bureaus embraced in the substitute; but now is not the time. Our proposition is to first establish the department of agriculture and labor; and let me tell you, my friend from Texas, that thirty millions of farmers of this country will not be satisfied to establish a bureau for that purpose that does not name agriculture. [Applause.] Not a department of industries, but a department of agriculture and labor. They do not intend that that department of agriculture shall be floated on any other department, or that its name shall be blotted from the statute-books of the United States. It is there to stay as long as this country exists. [Applause.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will not the effect of this bill be to blot it out?

Mr. HATCH. Not a bit of it; and you are the only gentleman on this floor that I have ever heard give utterance to such a sentiment. [Laughter and applause.] The fact that we want to dignify and give larger powers and scope and influence to it, is not to blot it out. If it is, it is a singular way of blotting out a great department of the Government.

No, we will not blot it out; and if your President is as wise as I take him to be, if you had the confidence in him that I have, if you gentlemen on this side of the House had a broader appreciation of your President [laughter], you would not only pass this bill, but you would pass it with a rush; you would be glad to pass it, because it would give the President of the United States the opportunity of calling into his Cabinet councils one more of the great representatives of the people of the United States as a safe counselor and guide; and I believe he will make as wise a selection as any President has made within the last twenty-five years. It does not matter to me whom he selects. It is not the man; it is the office, it is the position I contend for. It is the power that a representative of this great industry will have in the Cabinet councils of the country, the power he will have as a member of the Cabinet of the President of the United States. Do you suppose that his counsels will be confined simply to agriculture? The agriculturists of this country are interested in something else as well as in tilling the soil and in selling its products. They are interested in the tariff question; they are interested in the silver question, in finances; they are interested in the proper administration of the powers of the Government; they are to-day the foundation upon which rests not only your prosperity but the hope of the perpetuity of the Government of this Republic. [Applause.]

How long do you suppose free institutions would stand if they rested alone on the rotten boroughs of the cities of the country? How long? It is the fresh blood of the country districts that keeps the cities from becoming like the ancient Sodom and Gomorrah. [Laughter.] It is the healthy political sentiment of the country that keeps to-day the political status of this country up to the high position it occupies. All the complaints about corruption, and the outrages upon the ballot, come from the cities of the land, not from the country; and the country people, the agricultural people, are interested in a proper administration of the affairs of the Government.

Now we have added, as has been stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], a new section to this bill, transferring from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture the Bureau of Labor, enlarging its scope, its dignity and powers, and placing it where it belongs, side by side with agriculture in the country; and the secretary appointed will be the secretary of labor as well as of agriculture. He will be secretary, under this bill, of agriculture and labor, a prouder distinction than any Secretary of the American Government has ever yet borne; and the man who first receives his commission under this act will wear the proudest title that any man ever wore in America, except that of President of the United States. [Applause.]

Is it such a great thing simply to be the head of the War Department, or of the Navy Department, or to have charge of the few Indians and the lands of the country, or to run the post-offices of the country? I know my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has an idea that the greatest position in trust and responsibility upon this earth is the control of the mail service of this country. He made a magnificent postmaster-general. [Laughter and applause.] I had a high admiration for him then and I have never lost it. The fact of it is he did almost as well with the few materials he had at hand during the war in organizing the great postal service in the South as has been done even since the close of the war. I give him great credit for it. But it is nothing in comparison with the representation of thirty millions of our people who to-day are engaged directly in the pursuit of agriculture. And, my friends, let me tell you that for the first time in the history of this country the agriculturists of the country are not only well posted and advised as to the progress of these measures in the House of Representatives and the other branch of Congress, but they are posted and well advised upon all the great material interests of the country. I undertake to say not a gentleman in this House who, during the recent campaign conducted his canvass in the agricultural districts, can say he addressed an audience where more than two-thirds of them were not well posted, as well posted on these material and economic questions of the day as the speaker himself was. They are reading the papers. They know to-day what they want. They demand it through the Committee on Agriculture by all the agricultural associations of the country, and they are going to have it. This bill has passed this House twice before, and they demand its passage now; and I hope when it comes to a vote these gentlemen who have criticized the provisions of this bill will withdraw their opposition and let the vote be taken without further delay. [Applause.]

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HATCH. I ask for a vote on the substitute.

Mr. TUCKER rose.

Mr. HATCH. I yield back to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] that portion of his time of which he has control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for general debate has not expired.

Mr. HATCH. I return to the gentleman from Iowa the balance of the time which he so kindly gave me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER].

Mr. TUCKER. What amount of time remains for general debate?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER]. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Of the time allowed for general debate forty-five minutes remain, of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has fourteen minutes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] yielded the floor and called for a vote; but the time allowed for general debate not having then expired, the Chair was in duty bound to recognize any gentleman who rose for the purpose of general debate.

Mr. TUCKER. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-one minutes of the time allowed for general debate, and there are fourteen more controlled by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TUCKER. I am much obliged for the odd minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, this bill has come up unexpectedly to me to-day, and therefore what I shall say will be without any preparation. I hardly know whether there is any use in raising my voice again in this Hall, as I have often done before, in behalf of an instrument nearly a hundred years old, which I find derided sometimes, and, as I fear, contemned on this floor: I mean the old Constitution of the United States.

When I had occasion some time ago to make remarks upon some other bill, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] was kind enough to say that I always stood in the Hall in this central aisle, to call out "unconstitutional" when any such measure was proposed. Mr. Chairman, I know no higher functions a man who claims to be a representative of the people can have than to defend the Constitution of the United States even against the proclamation that thirty millions of farmers demand our votes for a bill that we disapprove. [Applause.] I will not vote for that bill, though thirty millions of farmers demand it, because I believe the whole tendency of the bill is unconstitutional in its character.

Gentlemen say that we have a War Department, yet we can not have the agriculturists represented in the Cabinet. Why, have gentlemen read the Constitution? Not lately, I think. [Laughter.] The power is given to Congress to raise and support armies, and to the President of the United States to command them; to declare war and to carry on war. The constitutional function is prescribed in express terms in the Constitution, and that is the reason we have a War Department. The gentleman speaks of the Navy Department. The power is given in the Constitution to provide and maintain a navy, and that is the reason there is a Department of the Navy. Gentlemen say you have a Post-Office Department. The power is given to establish post-offices and post-roads, and that is the reason you have a Post-Office Department. The power is given to lay and collect taxes and make and regulate appropriations, and that is the reason you have a Treasury Department.

Why do you have a State Department? Because the Federal Government regulates foreign affairs and the relations of this country with all foreign powers. That is the reason you have a State Department.

What else? There is a Department of the Interior. I remember, sir—I was young then, but I remember it—that when the Department of the Interior was established it was said, "You are making a reservoir, empty now, into which men will be pouring power for years to come." What was the effect? The gentleman asks why do you have the Interior Department?

It is a proper department because the public lands are to be regulated by the Government of the United States; because Indian affairs are within the compass of its powers; because pensions and patents are within the powers of the Government—the express powers of the Government. For these reasons you have the Interior Department. But, as the late Senator Carpenter once said, either on the floor of the Senate or in private conversation with me, "If you can find the word 'agriculture' in the Constitution of the United States, I will give it up." But gentlemen say we can regulate commerce. What kind of commerce? Look at the decision of Chief-Justice Marshall in the case of Gibbons against Ogden. There you will find that commerce strictly internal to the States you can not touch. It is interstate commerce, commerce with foreign countries, commerce with Indian tribes, that you can regulate—none other. What would this bill do? It proposes to regulate agriculture. Is agriculture interstate or foreign? Does the land travel from State to State?

Mr. RYAN. A good deal of it does. [Laughter.]

Mr. TUCKER. Well, we will regulate the dump which passes from one side of the river to the other, if you choose to call that an interstate matter. [Laughter.] But gentlemen say "cattle are one of the products of agriculture, and we regulate the cattle trade." How and when do we regulate it? Never, except when it passes from State to State, or from this country to some foreign country, or from some foreign country to this country. Everything that is strictly internal to the State is exclusively reserved to the power of the State. Everything that is interstate or connected with foreign commerce is for the Federal Government to regulate.

A MEMBER. Do not cattle travel from State to State?

Mr. TUCKER. When they do so travel we regulate their transportation; but when they do not travel we have nothing to do with the matter.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is said that the Department of Agriculture already exists. Very well. Let it stand. Do you want a top-heavy concern? A secretary and an assistant secretary? What for? To advise the President? What about? About agriculture? What has the President to do with agriculture? Now, Mr. Chairman, the fallacy of my friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is in this. The executive power of this country is vested in the President of the United States. This is not a Government by a Cabinet.

The President may call his Cabinet together, the heads of the Departments under the Constitution, and require their advice or their opinions in writing, but there is nothing constitutional in the power of the gentlemen who are at the heads of the several Departments to make them a cabinet entitled to regulate, or even to advise, the President. The President appoints those gentlemen to the heads of their several Departments to regulate the special matters belonging to those Departments, and they are intrusted with that power because the Constitution gives to the Federal Government the regulation and control of the matters with which those Departments deal. I say again, there is no reason to establish a Department of Agriculture, because the Constitution gives to the Federal Government no power over agriculture. I hear somebody ask, sotto voce, what do I do with the bureau of agriculture.

Sir, that is the trouble about establishing a bureau. A bureau always longs to grow into a cabinet. [Laughter.] That is the reason that a bureau officer claims now to be grown into a cabinet officer, and my excellent friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is the best cabinet-maker that I know of in this Hall. [Renewed laughter.] Gentlemen say that the bureau of agriculture is for the collection of information, and that it is part of the larger Bureau of Statistics. To that extent it may be constitutional. Gentlemen ask me then, or may ask me, how do I find it constitutional to have a bureau of statistics. How do I find it constitutional to have a great library, and a great library building, for which I voted with very great pleasure when it was brought forward by my venerable friend from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON], whom I see now in his seat.

Why, sir, it is the right, it is the duty of this Government, to furnish us all the means by which we can secure intelligent legislation. All that has ever been written, which is the accretion of ages, and which will give information to you and me as to the mode in which we should conduct our business here, is proper to be piled up in a Congressional library for the benefit of the representatives of the people. I voted to provide increased accommodations for that library in order that it may be as large as we need it to be.

Mr. PETERS. Do you do that under the "general-welfare" clause?

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir, not under the "general-welfare" clause. I will come to the "general-welfare" clause directly. I do it under the power to pass laws "necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof." I have not the power to do my duty here unless I have the means provided by a library. The Library is a necessary means to the execution of the powers vested in the legislative and other departments of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how about the Bureau of Statistics? That is a most valuable adjunct to Congress and to the whole Government. It collects information from the world at large to aid us in managing these great questions taxation and revenue, of foreign and interstate commerce. I believe in the power to establish a bureau of statistics; and so far as your statistics go into the mere question of labor and agricultural products, I have no objection to your having everything that will fulfill the informing function to this House or to the other House of Congress, or to any branch of the Government. I believe in that. But what is the necessity of establishing a Cabinet officer in order to do that. Why should you not have a department of statistics and a secretary of statistics if you have a secretary of agriculture and labor? If we are to have a secretary of agriculture, let us have a secretary of tobacco agriculture, a secretary of cereal agriculture, a secretary of cotton agriculture, because people engaged in each one of these branches of industry frequently know very little about the others; so that at last your Cabinet may be as large as the body at the other end of the Capitol.

No, sir; the only thing we have to do in making Cabinet officers and departments is to find out what are the proper business functions of this Government, and to put somebody in charge of those business functions in the Executive Department. I insist that the mere matter of the conduct of agriculture has nothing to do with this Government, because it is strictly internal to each State—does not belong to interstate affairs or to foreign affairs nor to any other granted power in the Constitution.

A friend on my right [Mr. PETERS] asked me a while ago something about the "general welfare" clause. Mr. Chairman, in the first speech I ever made in this hall, I defined, as I thought was proper, the limitation of those words in the Constitution. I have not the time (and if I had, I would not detain the House at this late hour of the evening) to go into a full discussion of that constitutional question. Before my term is over, I shall perhaps find some other opportunity to leave as a legacy to my countrymen, upon my retirement, my views on the "general welfare" clause. [Laughter.] I will insert a codicil in my will for the benefit of my friend on my right [Mr. PETERS], which will be for his particular welfare, although pertaining also to the "general welfare" of the country. [Laughter.]

The words "to provide for the common defense and general welfare" are words which, I hold, not only upon authority and contemporaneous exposition, but from the very framework of the clause itself, to be clearly indicative of the purpose of the power to lay and collect taxes—not the grant of a distinct and substantive power. When it was proposed in the convention to give to Congress power "to provide for the common defense and general welfare," the proposition was rejected. When it was proposed that Congress should have power to lay and collect taxes, in order to provide for "the common defense and general welfare," that provision was voted in. As a declaration of the purpose of the revenue power, it was voted in; as the grant of a substantive power, it was kept out.

Now, what is the meaning of "the common defense and general welfare" as declared objects of the exercise of the revenue power? "The common defense" being provided for by the clauses I have mentioned, as the war clauses and the navy clauses; and the "general welfare," by the other clauses, as to post-offices and post-roads, coinage, regulation of commerce, patents and copyrights, and all such things, the modes in which "the common defense and general welfare" were to be promoted were thus specifically indicated in the several clauses of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution. Therefore, "a great father of the Constitution"—if it had but one, I would mention him as "the father of the Constitution"—I mean James Madison—in one of the articles of the Federalist, written contemporaneously with the proceedings for the adoption of the Constitution in the State of New York, and urging the adoption of the instrument upon that State, explained those words as being limited in their general phraseology by the particulars mentioned—that is to say, nothing could be done in the application of money under the words, "common defense and general welfare," which was not specifically mentioned thereafter in the several clauses of the eighth section of the first article or was not necessary to support and maintain the legislative, judicial, and executive departments. Therefore, I hold that unless you can find somewhere in the Constitution the grant to Congress of a power to regulate agriculture in the way indicated in this debate, there is no power to establish a department of agriculture as one of the business departments of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I have thus stated my views on this question, because I felt it due to myself not to sit quietly here and allow this bill to pass through without a protest upon grounds which I believe to be fundamental.

Mr. Chairman, if you will look at the details of this bill, which I have done to-day, you will find in the regulation of the business of the bureau of labor, the question is to be inquired into how labor is conducted in the mines, in the factories, in the workshops—to inquire into the relationship of employer and employed. That is all within the States—a matter which, according to my view, is entirely reserved to each State, and does not belong at all to the functions of the Federal Government. Therefore, I say, Mr. Chairman, the whole scheme of the bill, its whole frame-work, and all its details, indicate an enlargement of the powers of this Government beyond anything ever contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to direct his attention for one moment?

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I will then direct his attention to the fact that we have now upon the statute-book a law which involves every one of the matters he refers to.

Mr. TUCKER. Then why not let it be done by a bureau, and under a commissioner, and why elevate it into a Cabinet position?

Mr. HATCH. The proposition of the bill is to transfer it to the other.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, I know; that is by making a Cabinet officer out of the gentleman who is now simply a Commissioner of Agriculture. That is to say, it proposes to dignify the officers of the Department, and let the plowmen stay at home between the handles of their plows. [Laughter and applause.] There is nothing which will benefit the farmers in this thing; all the benefit will come only to these bureau officers. It is not required the commissioner should be elevated to the position of a Cabinet officer.

Now I appeal to the House on both sides. I know the appeal made on the other side, that your constituents are, a great many of them, farmers, and one of these days you will have to go back to them; and then what? [Laughter and applause.]

I may say for myself that I am in that happy condition of independence in which I will never go back to my constituents for re-election. But I will say to my friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that I was one of the seven who voted against this bill three or four years ago, and that I went back to my constituents and got back here all the same by their votes. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HATCH. I hope my friend from Virginia did not understand me to say, in any remarks submitted by me, anything about his not going back to his constituents.

Mr. TUCKER. No, I did not. I only meant to say I was one of the seven who then voted against this bill, and that when I went back to my constituents after that vote they returned me to this House all the same. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. It is a source of profound regret, not only to myself but to the members of the House very generally, that the gentleman from Virginia did not allow himself to go back to his constituents, so that we might have him with us in the next Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. I thank my friend from Missouri. I know my friend, notwithstanding our divergence of opinion in reference to the pending question, would, if he lived in that district, have nevertheless voted for me.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, with all your faults. I am like a great many Virginians. "With all your faults I love you still." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. I think I could occupy no better position upon this floor than in standing up for the vindication of the Constitution of my country. [Applause.] Let me say in all honesty and sincerity, sir, I am like one lifting up his voice in the wilderness. [Laughter and applause.] Yes, as one crying in the wilderness. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then why do you not come over to this side? [Laughter.]

Mr. TUCKER. Well, sir, if I abandoned this side as a wilderness and went over to my friend from Ohio, I might find myself in a desert. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It would be just as well, for you require but very little water. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. My friend from Ohio is trying to immerse me in his wit and divert me from my serious purpose. I was going to say, Mr. Chairman, when my witty friend from Ohio interrupted me, that repeatedly the question is asked, what harm will this do? Just raise this Commissioner of Agriculture to the Cabinet, and what will this Cabinet officer do when he gets there more than he now does in his bureau? He will assume some of the tinsel my friend referred to, and some of the toggery of a Cabinet minister, which perhaps does not belong to a Commissioner of Agriculture. But what will he do more than he does now?

Mr. COWLES. He will draw $3,000 more of salary.

Mr. TUCKER. He will draw $3,000 more per annum, somebody says. [Laughter.] That is doing a good thing in its way. [Laughter.] What would he do more then than he does now? Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have always noticed this, that if you appoint anybody to an office where there is nothing for him to do, he will hunt and nose around until he finds something to do. [Laughter.]

For Satan finds some mischief still
For idle hands to do.

[Laughter.]

The elevation of the Agricultural Bureau into an executive department is nothing but the creation of a reservoir into which new powers will be poured, thus increasing the patronage and power of the executive branch of the Government, already too overgrown. I am for economy and retrenchment, and am opposed to any increase of patronage and power of the Government at the expense of the people. This bill is the beginning of an increase of both, the end of which we can not see—but it will be disastrous.

Mr. PETERS. Then you are not in harmony with your Administration. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. May I not be allowed one word by way of benediction? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is limited by order of the House. Excepting the minute of time remaining to the gentleman from Iowa——

Several MEMBERS. Let him proceed by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can not extend the time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia for a minute for his benediction.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, when I am confronted, as I am on this and other great questions, with the assertion, "Why, this is a useful thing; what a benefit to this or that industry by the enactment of this law," I am constrained to say I think there is no benefit to the people commensurate at all with the preservation of that great Constitution, in all of its integrity, which has descended to us as the muniment of our liberties from our ancestors. [Applause.] I would rather see the Constitution of the United States restored to its perfect integrity, as gentlemen on all sides will say it may be by a fair construction of its powers, than to see power built up in the high places, and this Government become more munificent in its benefactions to everybody, and furnish the means to promote all the jobs and schemes that can possibly be devised by the wit of man. [Applause.]

I thank the committee for its kind attention.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to reserve all points of order upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The points of order will be reserved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same.

JANE THORNTON.

Mr. ELY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10075) granting a pension to Jane Thornton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. SENEY to print remarks in the RECORD upon the two bankruptcy bills on the House Calendar.

Also, to Mr. MCADOO, with reference to the bill for the extension of the free-delivery system.

PRINTING EXTRA COPIES OF THE DIGEST.

Mr. ROGERS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound 250 copies of the Digest of the present session, for distribution, under the direction of the Journal Clerk, to the committees of the House, officers of the two Houses, and heads of Departments and bureaus.

And then, on motion of Mr. HATCH (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 10, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., as follows:

Almighty and Everlasting God, again this House has been stricken by the hand of death, and another seat is made empty. Console and comfort the wife and the children thus rendered desolate, widowed, and fatherless. Be Thou the stay and the cheer of their hearts in this sudden and awful bereavement. Impress us all in the presence of this ninth death of the House during this Congress with the sense that in the midst of life we are in death; and therefore whatsoever our hands find to do, help us to do it with our might, for there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither we all are going. O God! be Thou the strength of our hearts and our portion forever. We humbly ask, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL rose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. On the 23d of July the bill (H. R. 5194) was made a special order for this day, immediately after the reading of the Journal. On account of the announcement about to be made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL], I now ask that that bill be made the special order for next Friday immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to postpone the special order indicated by him until next Friday, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DEATH OF HON. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with sorrow and regret I have to announce to this House the death of one of its members, Hon. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY, one of my associates in the representation of the city of New York. As he was entering his house last evening he was stricken with apoplexy, and died at 8 o'clock this morning. I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound regret the announcement of the death of Hon. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a select joint committee, consisting of seven members of the House and three members of the Senate, be appointed to attend the funeral, and the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. BAYNE.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORY SOUTH OF KANSAS.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas, with amendments by the Committee on the Judiciary, be considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the laws of the United States are hereby extended over the unorganized territory south of the States of Kansas and Colorado and between the Indian Territory and the Territory of New Mexico, known as the public-land strip; and that for the purpose of the execution of said laws said public-land strip is annexed to the judicial district of Kansas and to the southwestern land district in said State; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause the subdivisional lines of townships in said public-land strip to be surveyed, under current appropriations for the surveying service.

The Committee on the Judiciary recommended the following amendment:

Add to the bill the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That said lands be subject to entry only by actual settlers under the homestead laws; and that no patent shall be issued for any lands so entered until after five years' actual residence thereon, to be ascertained under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. R. M'GOLDRICK.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 960) for the relief of J. R. McGoldrick, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $77 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay J. R. McGoldrick, of Louisiana, in reimbursement of his claim for lost remittance of money-order funds mailed by him as postmaster at Coushatta, La., on the 28th of September, A. D. 1883, and directed to the postmaster at Shreveport, La., and which was robbed or stolen from the mail-pouch in transit.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLANCHARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SAINT LOUIS RIVER.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9987) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River, at the most accessible point, between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The bill was read.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether that bill has been reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; it has been reported from the Committee on Commerce, and it meets the approval of the Secretary of War. I want to say, in addition, that it is important that the company should get to work upon the construction of this bridge while the ice is in the river, and I trust that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I call the gentleman's attention to an omission in the bill. There are no penalties attached for any violation of obligations upon the part of the company. I have no desire to prevent the passage of the bill, but I do think that in every bill of this character there should be penalties provided.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM M. MORRISON.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2629) for the relief of William M. Morrison, reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to pay to William M. Morrison, of Jefferson County, West Virginia, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,120.50, the same being in full satisfaction for supplies furnished the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians under contract, and for goods stolen by said Indians from his storehouse.

The amendments reported from the Committee on Claims were as follows:

In line 6, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "upon receiving report from Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommending same."

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "one thousand one hundred and twenty dollars and fifty cents," and insert the words "one thousand eight hundred dollars."

The amendments were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the morning hour for the call of committees for reports be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

TAXATION OF SPIRITS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MORRISON, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. MCKINLEY, as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits.

OWNERSHIP OF REAL ESTATE IN THE TERRITORIES.

The SPEAKER also announced the appointment of Mr. COBB, Mr. VAN EATON, and Mr. PAYSON, as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 3280) to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, &c.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, my object being to ask the House to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. Before the motion is submitted, I desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate on that bill may be closed in one hour.

Mr. DUNHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to inquire whether the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is in order before the expiration of what is known as the second morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Ways and Means may, at the expiration of the first hour, or when that hour has been dispensed with, move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills or bills raising revenue. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, stating that his purpose is to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill; and pending that motion the gentleman asks that general debate upon that bill be limited to one hour.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he will not agree to extend the time for general debate to one hour and a half.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] is, so so far as I know, the only member on this side who desires to occupy any time in general debate; and I am ready to yield him the half hour which will belong to this side if the debate be limited to one hour. I do not propose to occupy any time in general debate, believing I can better promote a full understanding of the provisions of the bill by discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope that one hour and a half will be allowed for the general debate. I desire to be heard fifteen minutes on a question of jurisdiction. There are several matters in dispute between the Naval Committee and the Committee on Appropriations involving the jurisdiction of the respective committees; and I desire to be heard on that question. I do not think I could do justice to the matter by discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It was understood when the House adopted the rule for a second morning hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees that we should have the benefit of that hour for legislation of that class. My parliamentary inquiry is, whether it is necessary at this early day of the session for us to set aside that morning hour in order to take up a general appropriation bill, thereby preventing members from obtaining the consideration of bills reported from other committees.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry; that is a question for the House to decide.

Mr. RANDALL. I will only say that I understand my motion to be in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. Perhaps my question was not strictly a parliamentary inquiry; but it has served to get my point before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania to modify his motion so as to allow additional time for general debate. The Chair did not hear the response of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the discussion to which the gentleman alludes could be as well had under the five-minute rule as in the general debate. The amendments to be offered by myself would naturally present the question.

Mr. HERBERT. It will require at least fifteen minutes for me to discuss that question. If it is agreed that I shall have fifteen minutes when the items are reached——

Mr. RANDALL. Then we might require the same length of time.

Mr. RYAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he agree to fix two hours as the time for general debate, to be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. RANDALL. I accept that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania modifies his request, and asks unanimous consent that general debate in Committee of the Whole on the sundry civil appropriation bill be closed at the expiration of two hours. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is now upon the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 85, noes 80.

Mr. PAYSON. I call for tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. I will ask the yeas and nays at once. I would like to ask gentlemen on the other side who oppose this motion, what is their object; perhaps we can come to some agreement.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will state the object. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania we feel that we ought to have the second morning hour, and that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be willing to concede it. Only one hour is all we ask.

Mr. RANDALL. You can get it at some future time.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let us have it now.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a moment. The Committee on Public Lands is the next committee to be called during the second morning hour. That committee has reported a bill which has been pending here for six years.

A MEMBER. What bill is it?

Mr. PAYSON. The bill for the forfeiture of the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad grant. For six years that measure has been pending in one form or another; and now we desire to obtain as promptly as possible the action of the House upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. That can come up when the sundry civil appropriation bill is out of the way.

Mr. PAYSON. Then there will be another appropriation bill or something of the kind in the way.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 121, not voting 83; as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills under the rules begins at ten minutes to 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on the Public Lands.

ONTONAGON AND WISCONSIN STATE LINE LAND GRANT.

Mr. PAYSON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Public Lands to call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 391) to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, &c.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all lands granted to the State of Michigan under the act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and the lands covered thereby shall be considered and treated in all respects the same as if said grant had never been made.

The report (by Mr. PAYSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 391, having had the same under consideration, make the following report:

The bill proposes a forfeiture of a grant of lands made to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of railroads and now claimed by the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company.

The history of the grant is as follows:

June 3, 1856, a grant of lands was made by Congress to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of certain railroads named, among them (and the only ones necessary to be noticed in this connection) from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line and from Marquette to the Wisconsin State line. The provisions of the grant were the usual ones, and the condition was that if the said railroads are not completed within ten years no further sales shall be made and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

This act may be found in United States Statutes, vol. 11, p. 21, and on page 15 of the "History of the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad Grant," which compilation having been admitted by all parties in interest before us to be a correct statement of facts, we shall, for convenience, frequently refer to.

June 13, 1856, all the lands subject to the operation of the act were withdrawn from sale by the Interior Department (Hist., p. 17). August 20, 1856, the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad was organized, and on January 14, 1857, the Marquette and State Line Railroad Company was organized. It should be stated here that neither of these companies ever located, permanently, any definite line of route, nor filed any map, but were skeleton companies organized only to receive the grant from the State.

February 14, 1857, the State of Michigan conferred the lands pertaining to the proposed lines of these two roads upon the companies, respectively, and created a board of control to manage and dispose of these lands and take general charge and control of these enterprises (Hist., p. 19). March 27, 1857, these two companies consolidated with the Chicago, Saint Paul and Fond du Lac Railroad Company, a corporation authorized to build a line of road in Wisconsin, up to the Wisconsin State line, where these two roads should meet it, thus making a through line from the two points, Ontonagon and Marquette, in Michigan, south to the point of junction, about 6 miles north of the Wisconsin State line, thence south into Wisconsin toward Chicago, via Fond du Lac. (Hist., p. 27.)

The geographical position of these points should be understood fully to comprehend the disputed question to be determined, and we illustrate it in this way: The proposed line of these three roads, the Ontonagon and State Line, the Marquette and State Line, and the Chicago, Saint Paul and Fond du Lac, makes what on the map resembles closely a large capital letter Y, Ontonagon being at the end of the upper left-hand arm and Marquette at the end of the upper right-hand arm, the point of junction of these arms representing a point about 6 miles north of the Brulé River, which stream forms a part of the boundary line between Michigan and Wisconsin. From the point of junction the line runs south to Fond du Lac, Wis., making the lower and perpendicular part of the Y, the 6 miles of the line next north of the Wisconsin line belonging to the two Michigan roads in common, and the two arms, one to each, respectively, and the line south of the Wisconsin State line to the Chicago, Saint Paul and Fond du Lac Company.

The distance from Ontonagon to the State line is about 100 miles, and from Marquette to the same point about 75 miles.

November 27, 1857, the consolidated company, called the Chicago, Saint Paul and Fond du Lac Railroad Company, filed its maps of proposed road with the Department of the Interior. (Hist., p. 31.)

December 3, 1857 (p. 31), the Department accepted the map as to the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad, and April 7, 1858 (p. 32), accepted the map of the Marquette and State Line Railroad.

June 2, 1859 (p. 33), all the property, franchises, &c., of the Chicago, Saint Paul and Fond du Lac Railroad Company were sold (including its lands granted by the United States to Michigan, and by that State to its predecessors), under first mortgage given by that company, and the purchasers organized a new company, under State law of Wisconsin, by name of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company.

April 20, 1860 (p. 34), the General Land Office restored to market all the vacant "offered" lands lying outside the six-mile limit on either side of the line of the roads, as shown by the map of location filed in the townships named, and making them subject to private entry at $1.25 per acre.

March 4, 1861 (p. 37), the Legislature of Michigan authorized the board of control to transfer the grant made in aid of the Marquette and State Line Railroad, and to change the route so that the south terminal point should be at the mouth of the Menominee River, on the shore of Green Bay, instead of the former point north of Brulé River. This new proposed line ran southeastwardly and then south from Marquette, instead of a little south of west, as the old route ran.

December 12, 1861 (p. 41), the Interior Department certified by detailed description, to Michigan 142,430 acres of "clear" lands, for the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad Company, and on the same date (p. 61) certified, by detailed description, to the State 41,649 acres of the "common" lands for the Ontonagon and State Line and the Marquette and State Line Railroad Companies, and in like manner, on the same day (p. 68), certain "common" lands for the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad and Marquette and Ontonagon Railroad Company, a company not necessary to be noticed in this report, its rights not being involved.

The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, which had been organized by the purchasers of the property of the Chicago, Saint Paul and Fond du Lac Railroad Company, fearing that its title to the Michigan grants under the foreclosure sale was not perfect, secured the organization of a Michigan corporation known as the Peninsular Railroad Company, and on April 24, 1862 (p. 74), on petition of this company (p. 75), and with the concurrence of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company (p. 77), the board of control conferred the grant on the Peninsular Railroad Company, and (p. 80) requested Congress to authorize the change of route, so as to conform to the line of the Peninsular Railroad, terminating at the mouth of the Menominee River, "as if such grant had been originally intended to embrace the route so designated, and the same had been originally conferred upon the Peninsular Company."

July 5, 1862 (p. 80), Congress passed the joint resolution construing the words "Wisconsin State line" in the act of 1856 so as to authorize the location of the line of railroad from Marquette to a point on the Wisconsin State line near the mouth of the Menominee River, and reduced the price to $1.25 per acre, thus again removing the lands from private entry until a second offering at that reduced price.

March 18, 1863 (p. 83), the State Legislature confirmed the grant to the Peninsular Company.

May 6, 1863, the Peninsular Company released the lands, forfeited by the Marquette and State Line Company, to the United States.

October 21, 1864 (p. 87), the Peninsular Company consolidated with the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company.

May 26, 1865 (R. 3, 1), the Commissioner of the General Land Office withdrew from market all the odd-numbered sections in the Upper Peninsula, including the lands in question, for the protection of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Canal grant.

February 21, 1867 (p. 100), the Legislature of Michigan authorized the governor to execute surrender of lands on the line of the Marquette and State Line Railroad.

January 1, 1866 (p. 100), the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company executed a relinquishment to the State of the "clear"* lands of the Marquette and State Line Company, the "common" *lands of the Marquette and State Line and the Ontonagon and State Line; also the "common" lands of the Ontonagon and State Line, and the Marquette and Ontonagon Railroad grants; leaving only the "clear" lands of the Ontonagon and State Line unrelinquished.

May 1, 1868 (p. 106), the governor (Crapo) relinquished these lands to the United States.

July 9, 1868 (p. 109), the deeds for the above lands were transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who, on July 13, 1868, wrote to the attorney for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, calling his attention to the fact that the list of lands certified to the State for the "branch line to Ontonagon," 142,430.23 acres, was omitted from the release, and that the State and company should execute release of those lands, and that "will complete the whole matter for both branches." These lands were the "clear" lands of the Ontonagon and State Line grant.

June 17, 1870 (p. 113), after correspondence to ascertain proper description of the lands, the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company relinquished to the State the "clear" lands in the Ontonagon and State Line grant; and on August 14, 1870 (p. 118), the governor of Michigan (Baldwin) relinquished all these lands to the United States, following an opinion of the attorney-general of the State (May) of February 10, 1870 (p. 116), as to the validity of such release.

May 29, 1873 (p. 123), the lands in question were ordered restored to market by the Commissioner of the Land Office—"the same having been duly relinquished by the State will be restored to their original condition prior to withdrawal"—and that upon notice these lands would be subject to pre-emption, homestead, and private entry at $1.25 per acre.

July 10, 1873 (p. 137), Governor Bagley wrote the Department that Governor Baldwin had no legal authority to make the release of the Ontonagon and State Line lands, and July 30, 1873 (p. 129), a telegram was sent to the local land officers to suspend the restoration of May 29.

April 12, 1878 (p. 132), Secretary Schurz sent to Congress all papers relating to these lands (Ex. Doc. 77, Forty-fourth Congress, second session).

List of lands (p. 139) in odd sections sold by the Government within the grant from June 4, 1856, to November 1, 1880, 46,130 acres; and (p. 147) list of lands in the even sections sold by the Government at $1.25 per acre, between November 18, 1867, and November 1, 1880, 43,941 acres.

The time prescribed by the act of June 3, 1856, within which the Marquette and State Line and Ontonagon and State Line roads were to be completed under penalty of forfeiture, expired June 3, 1866. At that date no work of any kind or description had been done upon either of said roads, nor has any been done since that date and to the present time except as hereinafter stated.

September 8, 1880, more than fourteen years after the liability to forfeiture had arisen, a new company was organized under the laws of the State, known as the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company, for the purpose of building a road from Ontonagon to the State line (Railroad History, pp. 155–157); and September 17, 1880, the board of control undertook to declare the grant theretofore made by the State to the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad Company forfeited, for failure to build the road, and to confer said grant upon the said Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company (Railroad History, pp. 158–160).

June 7, 1881, the legislature of Michigan passed an act confirming and ratifying this action of the board, with a protecting clause in favor of homestead settlers. The grant, however, was upon three specific conditions, namely:

1. That the company should accept the grant and conditions within sixty days.

2. That the work of constructing the line should commence on Ontonagon, and that at least 20 miles south from that point should be built by August 1, 1882, the company being at liberty to construct other portions of the line during the same period.

3. That the entire road should be completed by December 1, 1886.

By section 6 of the act it was provided that whenever the company had finished and put in running order any continuous 20 miles of the road, and the same had been accepted as completed by the governor, the company might select "120 sections of land included within any 20 continuous miles of said road as originally located," the equitable title to vest in the company; but no conveyance or incumbrance to be permitted until patented by the State. And it was further provided that no such patents should issue until the entire road had been completed and accepted by the governor. (Railroad History, pp. 181-185.)

It satisfactorily appears that the company accepted the grant (whatever, legally speaking, it was) within the sixty days, and that prior to August 1, 1882, to wit, in the summer, fall, and winter of 1881 and 1882, it had built, after a fashion, a line of railroad running 20 miles south from Ontonagon on the originally located line, and that the same was in fact accepted by the governor as completed. The character of the work done was questioned before the committee, and affidavits and photographs exhibited showing that the road was not properly constructed.

Your committee are of opinion that on the question of fact as to the construction of the 20 miles of road, such construction was only colorable, and insert here a Michigan newspaper comment on certain photographs of the last three or four miles of the "constructed" road, which photographs are in possession of the committee:

"The photographer's camera has been put to a new use, and well has it done

*The words "common" and "clear" may be thus explained: The lands granted lie on each side of the road; where the roads intersect, of course the grants overlap, so that the lands granted from opposite the point of intersection of the two lines are "common" to both; outside the limits of the overlaping, where the grants do not interfere with each other, the lands are called "clear."

its work. We have been accustomed to a great variety of uses for this valuable instrument; so much so, indeed, that we can scarcely feel surprised at anything claimed for it; but it seems a little novel, to say the least, that it should be utilized to testify against a railroad land-grant steal. But this is its latest rôle, and a fine success it is. Our readers are all familiar, in a general way at least, with the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad scheme, by means of which land speculators sought to gain possession of an old land grant by virtue of building a railroad. This scheme was worked through the Legislature, and has been 'working' ever since. The railroad was built, too, so it was said, and the land duly awarded to the company therefor. But an artist 'in search of rare bits of nature' has been wandering along the line of this so-called road, and as a result we have a series of pictures, which are fine models of the art, arranged for the stereoscope, which show how the road was not built.

"This series of pictures begins at the southern end of the road, No. 1 being a view on the twentieth mile. No track. Road-bed grown up to brush and grass, and showing no intention of any railroad in that region. No. 2 shows a bridge, which was built without reference to foundation, and has settled into all the conceivable shapes, except the proper one for use, and upon which there are no rails. No. 4 shows a stretch of road with water over the track, ties covered with mud and weeds, and no sign of ballast. No. 5 shows a bunch of brush growing rank between the rails, the track settled entirely out of line, and no trace of ballast. No. 7 shows another stretch of road in even worse condition than No. 5. No. 8 shows that the ties were thrown down hap-hazard, and without spacing, and the rails spiked to only every other one. The track is without any alignment, and no sane engineer would attempt to run his engine over it. But we forbear to enumerate all the beauties which are depicted by this series of excellent photographs.

"They show conclusively that the object of the builders of this road was something very different from that of making a railroad which could be used; and it is safe to say from the results that have followed the building of this road that the only probable object was to secure the land grant. If this be so, it is a deliberate steal. Laying aside all the subsequent quarrels, and the fact that parties in interest are in Washington to secure their 'rights,' the manner of constructing this road was in direct contravention of the law relative thereto, and did not entitle them to the lands they claim. We have been and are still in favor of using the public domain to furnish our newer portions with transportation facilities, but we are not inclined to this kind of railroad building. As shown by these views taken along the line, and which from the nature of the case can not falsify, this road is a burlesque on what it pretends to be. But the animus of their whole scheme is made so thoroughly apparent that there should be no doubt on that point. The acceptance of this road by the State as being properly built should not be allowed to estop against a demand that the company should build a railroad or go out of the market."

This is a sample of the proofs in the files of the committee as to "construction:"

AFFIDAVITS AS TO THE MANNER OF CONSTRUCTION OF THE ALLEGED TWENTY MILES OF THE ONTONAGON AND BRULÉ RIVER RAILROAD.

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
County of Ontonagon, ss:

Lewis W. Bonnin, of said county, being duly sworn, says that he was engaged in the work of construction of the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad during the month of January and a portion of the month of February, 1882, and before; that during a part of said months he was engaged in placing the ties within the limits of the last 4 miles of the first 20 miles of said road built from Ontonagon; that in many places within said 4 miles the ties were placed on the top of snow to the average depth of 1 foot, so that a person could truly say that almost the entire last 4 miles was built on snow, and the rails were placed on the ties in that condition.

This deponent remembers the trip of inspection made by the governor of the State of Michigan over said road in the month of February, 1882, and was a passenger during a portion of said trip, and the track was in the condition above described within said four miles at that time; that at the time of said trip there was a heavy body of snow on the ground, so much so as to make it utterly impossible for any one to examine the ditches or drains along said road.

That about 2 miles south of Rockland, on said road, there was a big fill, and this deponent saw an immense pile of brush and logs in the bottom of said fill, and workmen were at that time covering said brush and logs with dirt and grading the road-bed. This, as deponent believes and to the best of his recollection, was in the month of October, 1881.

STATE OF MICHIGAN,
County of Ontonagon, ss:

Thomas Powell, of said county, being duly sworn, says that he was employed in the work of construction of the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad during portions of the months of December, 1881, and of January and February, 1882, being employed at track-laying during that time on the last 4 miles of the 20 miles of said road built from Ontonagon; that in many places within said 4 miles the ties and rails were laid upon snow, often to the depth of one foot and a half, or even more; that the manner of leveling the greater part of said track within said 4 miles was to raise the ties and rails, and shovel in snow under the ties, and pack the snow down with the feet. This deponent was engaged in work of that kind, and said track was in the condition described above at the time of the inspection thereof by the governor of the State of Michigan.

That in many places along said line, to the knowledge of this deponent, where there were deep fills along the line of said track, a large quantity of logs and under brush would be hauled and dumped in such fills, and dirt and snow thrown on, too, and ties and rails were laid over that.

This deponent remembers the time of the inspection of said road by the governor of said State, and at that time there was a large fall of snow upon the ground, so much so as to make it utterly impossible for any one to see the ditches and drains along said road.

John Riddle, jr., of the county of Ontonagon, being duly sworn, says that he was connected with the work of construction on the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad during the months of November and December, A. D. 1881, and for two days in the month of February, A. D. 1882, being, to the best of deponent's recollection, the first and second days thereof.

That the work of this deponent, during said month of February, 1882, was ballasting portions of the track of said railroad within 4 miles from the southern terminus of the 20 miles of said road built from Ontonagon; that the track within said distance at that time was resting in many places upon snow, sometimes to the depth of a foot and a half, the snow having been thrown off the railroad in some places to level up the track, so that portions of the track would lie on the solid ground, but the depressions in the ground would be filled up, as aforesaid, with snow; that in ballasting said track within said distance when a tie would need to be raised the workmen would jam snow under it, so as to bring it to the proper level, and said track was in that condition at the time of the inspection of said road by the governor of the State of Michigan, which occurred, to the best of this deponent's recollection, on the 2d day of February, A. D. 1882, at which time there was a great depth of snow on the ground, sufficient to make it utterly impossible to see the ditches along said track.

PHOTOGRAPHIC VIEWS.

To show the present condition of the road claimed to have been built, photographic views were taken in October, 1883, and same, from Nos. 1 to 12, inclusive, have been filed with the committees of Congress. Each of these photographs is authenticated by the affidavit of the photographer, as follows:

W. E. Hook, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a photographer and lives in Marquette, Mich.; that on the 24th day of October, 1883, he walked over that portion of the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad east of Rockland, Mich., and made the negative from which this photograph was printed from an actual view of that portion of said Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad which said photograph purports to represent, as stated in the printed matter on the margin of the other side of this card, and that same is a true photographic view of that part of said railroad.

[SEAL.] GAD. SMITH,
Deputy Clerk of United States Circuit Court,
Western District of Michigan, Northern Division.

The descriptive notes given on the margin of the respective views are as follows:

"No. 1. View on twentieth mile, showing the east one-fourth of last mile built. No track. Road-bed grown up to brush and grass, and ruined by 'washouts.' Looking east.

"No. 2. View of bridge on twentieth mile. Built on frost foundations, and ruined by settling of same. Rails and ties taken up and removed from the west end of this bridge to east end of the road, about half a mile. Looking west.

"No. 3. View of same bridge as No. 2. Looking southeast.

"No. 4. View on twentieth mile. Water standing on track. (Many small streams in this neighborhood were dry at the time this view was taken.) Ties sunk in mud. Not ballasted. Weeds and grass growing between rails. Looking west.

"No. 5. View on nineteenth mile. Two years' growth of bushes on 'hump' made by a stump under the track. Weeds and grass growing between the rails. Not ballasted. Road-bed settled out of shape. Looking west.

"No. 6. View on nineteenth mile. Road-bed embankment made of logs. Track not ballasted.

"No. 7. View on nineteenth mile. Water standing on the track. (Many streams were dry in the neighborhood at the time this view was taken.) Marsh grass growing between the rails. Ties sunk in mud. Not ballasted. Looking west.

"No. 8. View on eighteenth mile. Only half the ties spiked to rails. Many ties do not touch the rails. Not ballasted. Impossible to run a loaded train over this part of the road. Looking east.

"9. View on nineteenth mile. Showing manner of spiking, one-half the ties being spiked to the rails, the others lying loose under the rails. Not ballasted.

"No. 10. View of culvert on eighteenth mile. Ties that were spiked to the rails hang suspended 6 to 8 inches above the ground. Ties not spiked lie on the ground 6 to 8 inches below the rails. Road-bed made of logs. Track not ballasted.

"No. 11. View on eighteenth mile. Not ballasted, and road-bed settled out of shape. Rails in back-ground very crooked. Looking east.

"No. 12. View on eighteenth mile. Not ballasted. Ties sunk in mud. Grass and weeds growing between the rails. Looking east."

On the other hand, counter-affidavits and documents were filed and the governor's certificate exhibited as prima facie, if not conclusive, evidence that the law had been fully complied with.

After the road for these 20 miles had been so accepted by the governor, the company selected one hundred and twenty sections of land in odd sections within the 6-mile limits, along the south end of the located line and mainly in what are known as the common limits. This it claims was authorized by the provisions of the act of Congress of 1856 and by the Michigan act of 1881 above quoted, allowing such selection "within any 20 continuous miles of said road as originally located."

The company further claim that inasmuch as the board of control undertook to confer these lands upon them and the Legislature ratified such concession; and inasmuch as the company accepted and, as they allege, constructed 20 miles, caused the same to be accepted and thereafter made its selections, all before any action, either legislative or judicial, had been commenced to forfeit the grant, it is therefore out of the power of Congress to forfeit the same, especially in respect to the one hundred and twenty sections already selected.

In this view of the matter your committee do not concur; but, on the contrary, are entirely satisfied that the jurisdiction and power to declare the entire grant forfeited is vested in Congress and should be exercised.

At the date when the present claimants, the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company, first acquired an interest in or claim to the lands, namely, in September, 1880, the time limited by the act of 1856, within which the road was required to be completed, had expired and over fourteen years had thereafter supervened. For twenty-four years nothing had been done by the State or any of her grantees to earn this grant by complying with the condition subsequent.

Since the pretended construction of the first 20 miles of road in 1881, nothing has been done by this company toward further construction.

In the opinion of your committee, any sale or conveyance, grant or concession, made by the State, after the expiration of the ten years, even admitting her power to be otherwise ample, would necessarily have been subject to the right of the United States to at any time declare a forfeiture. A grant or assignment properly made within the ten years might be indefeasible; one made afterward would convey not the absolute and perfect title, but a title subject to defeasance at any time by an enforcement of the breach of the condition subsequent. If this were otherwise, the reversionary clause in every land grant made by the United States could be rendered utterly inoperative by a simple assignment after breach of the condition. Your committee can not for a moment suppose that such was the intent of Congress in passing these acts, or that such is the legal effect of the language used. Your committee are therefore clearly of opinion that whatever title the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company acquired from the State of Michigan, either through the proceedings of the board of control or under the legislative grant, is subject to the right of the United States to declare a forfeiture.

Your committee are furthermore by no means satisfied that the title of the Ontonagon and Brulé River Company, subject to the forfeiture, is good in law. The grant of 1856 was to the State of Michigan, in trust to accomplish certain purposes, to effectuate which she was empowered to do a certain thing, viz, to dispose of the lands. A bare right to dispose of lands would not necessarily or ordinarily embrace the right to attach conditions subsequent by means of which a reversionary interest would remain in the grantor, the State of Michigan, through which it might afterwards resume its title for another disposition. On the contrary, such language would ordinarily create a power which once fully executed would exhaust the authority of the grantee, and leave him thereafter functus officio. Hence it is a matter of grave doubt, to say the least, whether the State, having once conferred this grant upon the Ontonagon and State Line Company, could afterwards legally resume its authority for any purpose, especially to confer the grant upon an entirely new corporation.

However this may be, it is entirely clear that in 1862, at the date of the joint resolution of Congress, authorizing a change of the route of the road from Marquette to the State line, it was competent for the United States upon one hand, and the State of Michigan and her grantees upon the other, to make such changes in the then existing condition of the grant under the act of 1866 as might be mutually agreed upon. Congress, by the joint resolution, authorized the proposed change of route, with a grant to the State of a like quantity of land along the new line, upon condition that the governor of the State should file in the General Land Office "the lists of said railroad lands, in whole or in part, as now selected and certified in the General Land Office," such lists to be accompanied by "the certificate of the governor of the State of Michigan, under the seal of the State, that the said State and its assigns surrender all claim to the lands as aforesaid set forth and described in the lists thereof thus certified, and that the same have never been pledged, sold, or in any wise encumbered."

Congress in this joint resolution made no reference whatever to the State Legislature, and did not require its assent or concurrence in the contract. All that was required was that the governor, under the seal of the State, should file the list and accompanying certificates. This was done; first for the lands from Marquette to the State line, including the common limits, and afterwards, upon demand of the land office and advice of the State attorney-general, for all the residue from the common limits to Ontonagon; and the corporation then owning all the title and interest of the State in all the lands, viz, the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, agreed to and united in this release. All parties to the transaction treated the entire body of lands as falling within the operation of the joint resolution; the entire body was surrendered, and the State and her assignee, the Chicago and Northwestern Company, received in lieu thereof an equal quantity and 50,000 acres more along the new line.

Your committee are inclined to the opinion that these proceedings, even if the release from the common limits to Ontonagon was not authorized by act of the Legislature, which is not admitted, were sufficient to revest the unincumbered legal title to all said lands in the Government, and that therefore the pretended grant in 1881 to the Ontonagon and Brulé River Company was invalid. They are clearly of opinion that the State is not in a position to equitably assert anything inconsistent with her former action, even if the doctrine of estoppel does not legally apply.

These considerations apply with even greater force to the lands in the common limits, for there is but little doubt in the mind of your committee that the odd sections within these limits were included in the literal terms of the joint resolution of Congress, as well as that of the Michigan Legislature, authorizing the governor to execute the release required.

With respect to the lands already selected by the Ontonagon and Brulé River Company, your committee is of opinion that no additional right was acquired by virtue of the facts recited. If, as already stated, the right of the State to assign, after the ten years had expired, was subject to the right of forfeiture, these selections were made subject to the exercise of that privilege by the United States. So, too, if the State had no title to convey after the release of the governor, under the joint resolution of 1862, then the company had no right to select any lands here or elsewhere. And in respect to the common limits, where these selections were made, all the odd sections were quite clearly, in the opinion of the committee, within the specific language of the joint resolution of Congress and of the State Legislature.

Therefore the right of the Government to declare a forfeiture, which shall be operative upon all of the grant, can not be questioned, since no portion of the road is claimed to have been completed until fourteen years after the time prescribed by the act of 1856, and only a partial construction of a section of 20 miles since.

Therefore there is a right of forfeiture. How far does it extend?

In Sheppard's Touchstone, 154, it is said:

"It is generally true that he that doth enter for a condition broken doth make the estate void ab initio, and that he shall be in of his first estate in the same course and manner as it was when he departed with the possession and at the time of the making of the condition. And hence it is that, if there be any charge or encumbrance on the lands, as if the lessee of land upon condition grant a rent charge out of the land or enter into a statute or recognizance and the conusee has the land in execution and this charge is after the condition is made, in this case when the condition is broken and the party doth re-enter he shall by relation avoid the rent, statute, and recognizance, and hold the land freed from them all."

The same doctrine is found in other authorities. Thus in Coke's Littleton, 202*a*, it is said broadly:

"He who enters for breach of condition regularly shall have the land of his first estate."

At 201*a* it is said:

"In these cases if the rent be not paid at such time or before such time limited and specified within the condition comprised in the indenture, then may the feoffer or his heirs enter into such lands or tenements and them in his former estate to have and to hold and the feoffee quite to ouste thereof."

This is the language of Littleton. Coke says:

"Regularly it is true he that entereth for a condition broken shall be seized in his first estate or of that estate which he had at the time of the estate made upon condition, but yet this fayleth in many cases."

Coke goes on to specify the cases in which it "fayleth." They are placed under the two heads of "impossibility" and "necessity," and have no application here.

Butler and Hargreaves, in their note to this passage, say:

"It may be further observed: First, That as the entry of the feoffer on the feoffee for a condition broken defeats the estate to which the condition was annexed, so it defeats all rights and incidents annexed to that estate, as dower, &c., and all mesne incumbrances of the feoffee."

The same doctrine is in 1 Rolle Abridg., 474, 617. Comyn Dig., tit. Condition, 0.6.

So in Greenleaf's Cruise on Real Property, vol. 2, p. 25, § 10 (in Greenleaf's edition the original six volumes are bound in three, and the passage quoted is therefore in his first volume as bound), it is said:

"Where a particular time is appointed for the performance of a condition, it must be performed at or before that time."

At page 40, § 39, it is said:

"Upon the breach of a condition the feoffer or grantor, or his heir, becomes entitled to the estate to which such condition was annexed."

At page 44, § 52, it is said:

"Where a person enters for a condition broken the estate becomes void, ab initio; the person who enters is again seized of his original estate in the same manner as if he had never conveyed it away. And as the entry of the feoffer on the feoffee for a condition broken defeats the estate to which the condition was annexed, so it defeats all rights and incidents annexed to that estate, together with all charges and incumbrances created by the feoffee during his possession; for upon the entry of the feoffer he becomes seized of an estate paramount to that which was subject to these charges."

In section 53 the writer says that on re-entry a rent charge or judgment is gone; and in section 54 he says that the dower of the feoffee's wife is gone on re-entry.

Washburn on Real Property, vol. 2, § 13, says:

"When such entry had been made the effect was to reduce the estate to the same plight and to cause it to be held in the same terms as if the estate to which the condition was annexed had not been granted."

When a forfeiture is declared, the legal effect thereof is well settled. "The grantor is in as of his former estate" (4 Kent, 127), the same as if the grant had never been made, and everything done by the first grantee or his alienees is swept away. This is familiar and undisputed law. To verify it it will suffice to quote a paragraph from Greenleaf's Cruise (vol. 2, title 13, page 35, pl. 52), as follows:

"When a person enters for a condition broken the estate becomes void ab initio; the person who enters is again seized of his original estate, in the same manner as if he had never conveyed it away. And as the entry of the feoffer on the feoffee for a condition broken defeats the estate to which the condition was annexed, so it defeats all rights and incidents annexed to that estate, together with all charges and incumbrances created by the feoffee during his possession, for upon the entry of the feoffer he becomes seized of an estate paramount to that which was subject to those charges."

It is also of opinion that no special circumstances exist which equitably call for non-forfeiture. For over twenty-four years no work of any kind was done to earn the grant or any part of it. It had for fourteen years been subject to forfeiture, and was then subject to it. The present claimants acquired their title at that time, charged with that infirmity, and at best they have only constructed 20 miles of the entire line, and that quite imperfectly.

In the view of the case herein taken it has not been considered necessary or material to determine how or in what manner the 20 miles from Ontonagon south were in fact constructed, although from the evidence introduced before the committee it appears that the road was not constructed in a manner that justified its acceptance by the governor of Michigan. The evidence is conflicting, and the fact itself is considered immaterial. Even if the governor's certificate of the fact of completion be considered conclusive, it would, in the judgment of the committee, have no effect upon the legal power of Congress to declare a forfeiture.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of an act declaring the grant forfeited and the land restored to the public domain, and they report back the bill with the recommendation that it pass.

[H. R. 391, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

Mr. PAYSON introduced the following bill:

A bill to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, &c.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all lands granted to the State of Michigan under the act of Congress approved June 3, 1856, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, be, and they are hereby, declared forfeited, and the lands covered thereby shall be considered and treated in all respects the same as if said grant had never been made.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, the relief proposed by this bill has been, in one form or another, before this House for the past six years. It has been reported favorably and unanimously by the Judiciary Committee in the Forty-seventh Congress, similarly by the Public Lands Committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, and by the same committee in this Congress. The history of the grant and the literature connected with it are comprised in this collection of printed matter which I hold in my hand, aggregating nearly one thousand printed pages, but I hope to be able, if I may have the attention of the House, to state the substance of it in, perhaps, ten minutes.

The prominent features connected with it, the essential elements of the case, may be, as I think, concisely stated so they may be comprehended in, perhaps, a ten minutes' statement, and I hope gentlemen who may not thoroughly understand me as I proceed will not anticipate me in my statement of it; but, promising when I shall have concluded, if there is anything I have omitted upon which further statement is desired, either by those who do not understand it or any gentlemen who propose to oppose the bill, I shall not only not regard it as an interruption, but as a favor, if the question may be asked me then.

Mr. Speaker, as appears in the report, this grant was made in 1856 to the State of Michigan of betweecn four hundred and five hundred thousand acres of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from the southern side of Lake Superior to the Wisconsin State line in the upper peninsula of Michigan. A railroad system had been devised, by gentlemen who proposed to embark in it, which contemplated the construction of a line of railroad from Chicago north through Northern Illinois, through the State of Wisconsin and the upper peninsula of Michigan to the shores of Lake Superior, one end at Ontonagon, on Lake Superior, and the other at Marquette.

The line which is involved in this bill especially is that portion of this system from Ontonagon, on Lake Superior, southward to the Wisconsin State line, a distance of 106 miles.

This grant, Mr. Speaker, as I have stated, was originally made in 1856, and provided for the construction of the road within ten years from the date of the grant. The State of Michigan accepted the grant, and under the terms of the act a company was organized in Michigan to construct the road and receive the lands from the State. This company did nothing whatever with reference to the construction of this line of road, not even filing a map of general route or location; but a mere skeleton company was organized without the investment of a dollar of capital, simply to receive the grant from the State and vest it in this corporation. Subsequently the grant was conferred upon other companies organized as successors of the first company; and without going into the details of these various transfers at this time, it is enough to say that in 1859 the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company was organized and is still a subsisting company.

These lands were conveyed to that company; but in 1862 this plan, or scheme, which I have already stated, for the construction of this line of railroad from Chicago through this interior portion of the country, was abandoned, and the Legislature of Michigan petitioned Congress to authorize a change of the line of construction of this road, so that the old line should be abandoned, and a new line run across to the mouth of the Menominee River, then down the shore of Green Bay and Lake Michigan, and thence to Chicago, forming a continuous line between the points named by the new route. In July, 1862, Congress passed a joint resolution which authorized this change of location and permitted the construction of a railroad along the shores of Lake Michigan to Marquette, thence across the country to Ontonagon, instead of the line of road the location of which I have already described; and Congress in that resolution provided that all the lands previously granted should be restored, and a new grant was made in aid of the road thus authorized and in place of the grant which had been made in 1866 for this first road. Congress also provided that before the lands should be certified by the Secretary of the Interior for the new line of road that the governor of the State of Michigan should certify back to the Federal Government the lands which had been given by the old act for the construction of this first line of road.

In 1867 and 1868 the governor of Michigan made a certification of the lands which had been conveyed to the State under the terms of the first grant, certifying back, as he supposed, all of the lands; and it was believed by all in the public service who had then anything to do with it that all of the lands embraced in the grant to the State of Michigan had thus been, by the proper authorities of the State government, reconveyed to the General Government.

But it turned out that by an erroneous use of terms, and by some misdescription of the grant, possibly technically, a portion of this land had not been reconveyed; and so the Secretary of the Interior refused absolutely to make any certification of lands for the new line of road until the Michigan authorities would complete the certification of the lands along the line of the proposed road as originally contemplated from Ontonagon to the State line.

The opinion of the attorney-general of the State of Michigan was taken with reference to the necessity or propriety of this supplemental action. He advised the governor that this certification or supplemental certification should be made. The attorney-general was Mr. May, and the then governor—Governor Baldwin—in 1870 made an additional certification of the lands which were not embraced in the first paper, making in this subsequent certification what he believed to be, and what was then generally believed to be—and it is my belief now—that it was a full certification or reconveyance of the lands originally conveyed under the act of 1856.

Some lawyers thought differently, and the question was raised whether that act did reconvey to the General Government the lands; but the officers of the Interior Department were satisfied, and the land embraced in the new grant was certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the State of Michigan for the benefit of the Chicago and North Western Railway Company. This grant exceeded the number of acres embraced in the first grant by something like fifty thousand. That land has been patented to the State of Michigan and certified in due form to the railroad company, which has been in undisturbed possession of the land grant from that time to now, and has disposed of it as if there was no question in reference to it.

So it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that by this transaction the State of Michigan got 50,000 acres more than under the provisions of the first act. This so remained until the year 1880. The Supreme Court had in the mean time promulgated the decision in the case of Schulenburg vs. Harriman, holding that all of these grants remained in abeyance until Congress affirmatively acted restoring them to the public domain; and a few enterprising gentlemen in Michigan organized a railroad company, known as the Ontonagon and Brulé River Company, and made an application to the board of control in Michigan to confer upon it these lands, or whatever legal interest the State of Michigan might have with reference to the lands of the Ontonagon and Wisconsin State Line Company, which it was believed, and which I believe, were properly retransferred or certified to the General Government. The board of control of Michigan assumed to convey the lands to this new company.

I do not use too strong an expression when I say, Mr. Speaker, now and here, that from the time of the organization of that corporation down to this hour, if there has ever been a step taken by the men composing it which does not indicate that the sole purpose of that organization was to grab these lands from the General Government and those who claimed by and under it, the fact has escaped the investigation of the Committee on the Public Lands.

It was organized for speculation, not to say legalized robbery, and all its efforts have been in that direction. It has taken the shape of a bare-faced robbery from the first moment of its organization to this time, as I am prepared to prove and will satisfy the House in the next fifteen minutes, if I may continue to have the attention I am now receiving.

When this corporation was organized for that purpose, this land being in this condition, the General Government had in good faith sold a large portion of lands within the granted and indemnity limits of the company—over 800,000 acres—realizing more than a million of dollars to the General Government, which had been paid into the Treasury, and which remains there to-day.

Knowing this fact—it was a matter which was as well understood in the State of Michigan as any other matter connected with its history—those who had purchased lands from the Government in the belief that they were getting a good title made an outcry against the attempt on the part of the board of control to convey this land to this new company, and give it the color of right as against them as purchasers from the United States; and a corporation known as the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western, which was then engaged bona fide in the building of railroads in that part of the Union, made this offer to the Michigan Legislature: that they would take this skeleton grant, and would recognize the claims of all who had bought from the General Government; that they would make no claim or assert any right as against the purchasers from the United States; that they would take the skeleton of lands which would remain, to which no claim attached, and build this railroad for that; and they made an offer to the board of control and the proper committee of the Michigan Legislature to deposit $50,000 in cash, as a forfeit, in the State treasury, and put up security, to be approved by a committee of the Legislature, to the amount of $150,000, in advance, if the Legislature would give them the remnant of the grant, and allow them to build the road.

This was not done, but this grant in its entirety upon paper was conveyed to the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company! In the fall of 1881 they commenced the construction of this road. The law provided it should be examined in 20-mile sections by commissioners to be appointed, and upon the completion and acceptance of any section of 20 miles of road the promoters of the enterprise should have the right to select 20 sections per mile, which would be 120 sections of land there for so much, within the limits of this grant.

During that fall and early winter after, a fashion, they constructed 20 miles of road. It was examined by certain commissioners appointed for the purpose, and was reported as constructed in a first-class manner in compliance with the act of Congress and the legislation in the State of Michigan, and was accepted by the State authorities. The managers of the railroad company then, instead of selecting 120 sections of the land opposite the road which they claimed to have thus constructed, abandoned that public land and went down to the southern end of the State to the vicinity of the Wisconsin State line, 100 miles distant from their constructed section, and selected there 120 sections of land, every acre of which was land which had been bought from the General Government, and of every acre of which men were in possession and control under patents and certificates from the General Government, and upon some of which were very valuable improvements; upon other sections were iron mines which had been discovered and developed, and in the working of which hundreds of thousands of dollars had been expended in good faith. These lands and these only were selected by the promoters of this enterprise, and the selections were made by an examination of the books at the local land office to find the description of lands purchased. Not an acre was selected except of lands which had been sold by the Government.

When this matter was before the Judiciary Committee in the Forty-seventh Congress, of which committee I had the honor to be a member, it was asserted before that committee that this construction was only colorable; that there were simply two tracks of iron laid down, cheaply and imperfectly—and that was all—upon which no trains ran, except over a portion of it, and only extending 12 miles then.

It was asserted that grades were made by throwing logs in and casting brush upon them, and that then the rails were laid upon that; that to make an apparent grade, frequently chunks of ice and snow were put and packed under the ties to make them level; and all that sort of thing. Those statements were made to our committee, and were verified by affidavits of men who were represented to be reputable. But some gentlemen, members of the Michigan delegation, strenuously denied that anything of that kind was true. It was asserted on this floor, in the presence of myself and other gentlemen, members of that Congress, that there was not a word of truth in any of these statements.

The next spring, after the ice and snow had melted, it was demonstrated precisely by observation and was made apparent as to several miles of this road what its condition was. It was suggested, and by myself, that some pictures of the road in its actual condition would be taken, as it was intended that that bill should not die even if it was defeated in that Congress; so that if the question came up again the condition of the construction of a first-class law-grant road might be demonstrated beyond the possibility of doubt. Photographs were taken, which I have in my hand. I will give a little description of some of them, and will be glad to furnish them for the inspection of any gentlemen who may desire to look at them. Each photograph I have is verified by the affidavit of the photographer who took it. Six different views were taken, and were placed on the files of the Committee on the Public Lands; and there never has been a question raised as to their accuracy and what the facts are since.

I do not deem it improper, Mr. Speaker, to call especial attention to the iniquity of this transaction as bearing upon the question of what this House shall do when the vote shall be taken, in order that it may be demonstrated that not a vote will be cast against the measure of justice which is proposed to be meted out by this bill. The first photograph which I hold in my hand is a picture of a railroad bridge upon this line. It is "humped like a camel and backed like a whale." [Laughter.] Six feet is the difference in altitude between the center of the bridge and one end of it, although the whole bridge is only 120 feet in length, so that upon this railroad bridge there is a steeper grade than that of any mountainous railroad in this country, except the Denver and Rio Grande.

Here is the picture, which gentlemen can see for themselves. The next is a photograph of a mile of the "completed road" which was accepted by the commissioners. One railroad tie is all that appears upon this entire mile of road. [Renewed laughter.] A little grading has been done, but it has grown up to weeds, and, as I have said, one tie is all that appears on this whole mile of "completed road." Here is a picture of a "fill," an embankment 420 feet in length, the filling of which is composed of logs and brush, and nothing else. Here is a "fill" between two hills four hundred and some odd feet in length, and the filling is nothing but logs and brush! Several of these photographs show that after the snow melted the ties, which had been spiked to the rails, were held in suspension, some of them as much as 8 inches above the surface of the ground upon which they were supposed to rest. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, this is an illustration of the devious ways in which the public lands of this country have been plundered by men who have found representatives of their interests upon this floor, and in this case who have succeeded for six years in preventing the consideration of this measure. There are affidavits in this volume under my hand, made by men who were engaged in the construction of this piece of road, showing beyond question that the "ballasting" of the road for several miles was done with nothing but ice and snow, preparatory to inspection and acceptance as completed land-grant railroad.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentlman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Is it not a fact that in the Forty-eighth Congress the Committee on Public Lands were unanimous in favor of this forfeiture?

Mr. PAYSON. I have said that.

Mr. OATES. And there was nothing to prevent the bill passing at that time except that the majority of the committee saw proper to pass it over and take up other measures.

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; that is not the fact. We tried several times to get it up by unanimous consent, but gentlemen representing the State of Michigan on this floor, friends of those interested in the road, objected to its consideration and prevented it. That was done on at least three several occasions which I happen to remember.

The Committee on Public Lands have been unanimous, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] remarks, in favor of this bill, and of having it considered by the House, and its consideration has been prevented in this House—I speak with knowledge, for the bill has been under my charge for four years—by captious objections permitted by our rules, made by friends of those who had money in the enterprise.

As I was saying, we have the affidavits of men who were engaged in the work, which prove that the "ballasting" of the road was done with ice and snow prior to the time when it was examined by the commissioners.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, by reason of the technicalities which have grown out of the existence of this grant, and non-action by Congress, the lands affected by its scope have been a fruitful field for those who happened to own preferential scrip for location, as against those who were bona fide purchasers from the Government; and the record contains scores and scores of pages showing that men who have invested hundreds and thousands of dollars in good faith in developing the mineral resources of that portion of the country have had their mines plastered over by this kind of scrip, which has only a technical recognition by reason of the failure of Congress to remove from the statute-book this old grant.

Further than that, an enterprising scrip-holder has located some of this scrip upon the little cemetery which adjoins the village of Iron River, in the State of Michigan, and has notified those who have friends buried there that if they wish the remains of their dead to rest in peace, his title must be satisfied! If there has ever been a worse exhibition of insensate greed than this, I have never known of it.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, in substance proposes merely to wipe from the statute-book this grant and restore that land to the public domain as though the grant had never been made. The authorities in Michigan believed that they had done this when they made the certification which they did in 1868 and 1870. Governor Baldwin believed it; the attorney-general of that State believed it; everybody else believed it. No harm is done to anybody by this measure. It was by the unanimous request of the Legislature of Michigan that the line of this road was changed. Congress assented to it, and gave 50,000 acres more land for the new road than for the old. The company has received every acre of that, and had the benefit of it; and no one believed that there was any equity on the part of anybody except the Government of the United States and the grantees of the Government as to an acre of the lands embraced in the first grant until 1880, when, by the ingenuity of a few real-estate lawyers, backed by the cupidity of a few speculators in the city of Saginaw, Mich., this scheme to appropriate the land was devised.

This, Mr. Speaker, is, I believe, all I care to say with reference to this bill. The history of the matter is voluminous; but I have stated the substance of the whole matter. I will go farther, and say that I do not know of any member of this House or any preceding Congress who has ever examined this question that has not come to the same conclusion to which I have arrived, and which I have expressed here. Seeing the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] in his seat, reminds me of the fact that the report upon this bill in the Forty-seventh Congress was made by him.

Mr. HAMMOND. From what committee?

Mr. PAYSON. From the Committee on the Judiciary, of which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] was a member, and unanimously. From that time to the present there has been but one opinion with reference to the right of anybody who was making any claim with reference to this grant.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I have omitted any statement of facts deemed essential by any gentleman whose vote will be cast on this question, I shall be glad to answer any question now.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would like to have you give us the other side of the question.

Mr. PAYSON. I will say to my colleague from Chicago [Mr. DUNHAM] that there is no "other side," except the attempt on the part of these men to grab 120 sections of land paid for by citizens of the United States, of which they have been in undisputed possession as against the claims of everybody except these men.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. "The other side" can be seen in the photographs which the gentleman has produced.

Mr. PAYSON. I ought to say further that since the colorable construction of the first 20 miles in 1880 there has never been a pick-ax struck by the men behind this enterprise. They have made no attempt at further construction. The road lies there to-day a wreck. Its rolling-stock consists of a 15-ton engine and a little combination car with a room for mail matter and baggage and a few seats for passengers. This engine and car run only from Ontonagon to Rockland, a distance, I believe, of 12 miles; and the road is in such condition that whenever the storms of winter set in and the road becomes encumbered in any way with snow, when the ground thaws out in spring and becomes at all muddy, the people of that country are driven to adopt the more ancient but more reliable method of communication by sleighs or buckboards. The cars never run except in fair weather. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I confess to a feeling of deep interest in this bill. It is the pioneer bill, out of which the whole subject of railroad land-grant forfeiture has arisen, as it has been presented to and considered by Congress during the past six years. I have been connected with it from the first, and have looked forward with eager interest to the day when it should pass the House. It will quiet the title to over a million acres of land and restore nearly 400,000 acres now held to be outside of Department control—and the bill should pass the House unanimously, as I hope it will.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and others. Let us have a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and move to lay that motion on the table; and I am glad to see that the bill passed without a dissenting vote.

The latter motion, to lay on the table, was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, although instructed by the Committee on the Public Lands to call up another bill, I have agreed with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] that he may bring up a bill which the committee has authorized him to present, with the understanding that not exceeding fifteen minutes shall be occupied in its consideration; and if it be not concluded in that time he agrees to withdraw the bill. I inquire how much of the morning hour is left.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. I am content with that arrangement.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. McRAE. I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is unanimous consent required to this proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has simply announced an understanding between himself and the gentleman from Arkansas that if the bill which the latter gentleman is to call up should not be finished at the expiration of fifteen minutes, it shall be laid aside. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9111) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on the public lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. Can not the bill be read subject to objection?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think the bill should be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act any homestead settler who has entered less than 160 acres of land may enter other and additional land lying contiguous to the original entry, which shall not with the land first entered exceed in the aggregate 160 acres; and if there can not be found a sufficient quantity of land contiguous, then the said settler may enter so much of any other public land as may be subject to homestead entry, in the same land-district, as when added to the quantity previously entered shall not in the aggregate exceed 160 acres; or if such settler so elect, he or she may surrender the lands first entered to the United States for cancellation, and thereupon be entitled to enter lands under the homestead laws the same as if the surrendered entry had not been made; and the residence and cultivation of such settler upon and of the lands embraced in the first entry shall be considered residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon and of the land entered by the additional or new entry, and shall be deducted from the time of residence and cultivation required by law, and if final proof of settlement and cultivation has been made for the first entry when the additional or new entry is made, then no further proof shall be required and patent shall issue: Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not be extended to any person who, at the date of his or her application under it, is the owner of 160 acres of land.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

After the words "subject to homestead entry," insert the words "in a compact body;" so it will read:

Then the said settler may enter so much of any other public land as may be subject to homestead entry, in a compact body, in the same land district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and amendment, and that they be considered in the House?

Mr. COBB. I do not think this bill ought to pass, and therefore I object.

Mr. BLAND. It had better be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. McRAE. I move then that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill and amendment.

The question was put.

The SPEAKER. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. McRAE. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 53, nays 36.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. McRAE and Mr. BLAND.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 75, nays 35.

The SPEAKER. The fifteen minutes agreed upon between the gentlemen have expired.

Mr. McRAE. I am sorry that my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] should make objection to this bill, so just in its provisions. I feel satisfied that he would not if he understood the effect of it. Under the homestead law as passed in 1862 the five public-land States of the South then in rebellion were not entitled to the benefits of the act, but by virtue of the first section of the act approved June 21, 1866, which I will now read, its benefits were extended to those States with certain unjust restrictions and limitations. The section of the said act is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act all the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida shall be disposed of according to the stipulations of the homestead law of 20th of May, 1862, entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," and the act supplemental thereto, approved 21st of March, 1864, but with this restriction, that until the expiration of two years from and after the passage of this act no entry shall be made for more than a half a quarter-section, or eighty acres.

The following table will show by States the number of entries made in those five States during the period of the restriction:

Statement of the number and area of homestead entries made in the following States from July 1, 1866, to June 30, 1868.

State.	1867.		1868.		Total.
	Entries.	Acres.	Entries.	Acres.	Entries.	Acres.
Alabama	616	47,224.87	1,646	124,085.15	2,262	171,310.02
Arkansas	835	50,418.72	2,830	183,232.36	3,665	233,651.08
Florida	1,505	111,878.15	1,781	115,935.81	3,286	227,813.96
Louisiana	259	20,164.63	.....	.....	259	20,164.63
Mississippi	555	31,427.75	1,602	102,824.45	2,157	134,252.20
Total	3,770	261,114.12	7,859	526,077.77	11,629	787,191.89

Average area of each homestead, 67.60 + acres, or about 67.70 acres. This average is for the total number of homesteads made in the five States for the two years.

No entries were made in Louisiana in 1868, because there were no receivers at the land office during that time.

One of the main objects of this bill is to do a simple act of justice to those 11,629 entrymen who were restricted to 80 acres. The bill, however, goes further than this and seeks to carry out what the committee thought was the intention of the homestead law, and gives to every tiller of the soil a home of 160 acres, and no more. Under the agreement by which I was allowed to call up this bill I am compelled to withdraw it during the morning hour, and leave the responsibility of its failure to pass to these gentlemen who have seen fit to take advantage of my attitude to prevent consideration.

I ask leave to include in my remarks the report of the majority of the committee, as I do not think members opposing the bill understand its provisions.

There was no objection.

The report of the committee (by Mr. McRAE) is as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill 9111, have considered the same, and report it back to the House, with the recommendation that it pass, with the following amendment:

Insert after the word "entry," in the tenth line, the words "in a compact body."

In support of the bill as amended by the committee, the following statement is made: The evident theory of the homestead act of May 20, 1862, and subsequent amendatory acts, was to secure to every person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, or has declared his intention to become such, one quarter section of land for a homestead. This intention appears very clearly from that part of the act which allows adjoining farm homesteads to persons who own in their own right homesteads of less than 160 acres, which may be found in the last clause of section 2289. Under this law, persons owning and residing on land of a less quantity than 160 acres have been allowed to enter other lands which have not, with the land so already owned and occupied, exceeded in the aggregate 160 acres. So if a person qualified to make an entry should, by purchase or otherwise, become the owner of a less quantity than a quarter section, he can, under the law as it now exists, enter other and additional land, which shall not, with the lands already owned, exceed 160 acres. But if the same person has become the owner of the land embraced in his original entry, under the homestead laws, he is not allowed to make an additional entry except in certain cases, where the right has been given by special act.

The committee can see no good reason for this discrimination, and believe that all entries should be equalized as far as possible without opening the door to fraudulent entries. Many settlers, acting under the feeling and belief that they did not need as much as a quarter section, took less. As their families and necessities increased, they have found that in this belief they were mistaken, and are now insisting that they should be allowed to make an additional entry.

In addition to those who have taken less than the law allowed them, there are a great many settlers who were, by the act of June 21, 1866 (14 Stat., 66), restricted to 80 acres, and thus only allowed one-half of the quantity allowed other settlers. This class of settlers received no benefit from the acts of March 3, 1879, and July 1, 1879, because these acts do not extend to cases where entries were restricted by law to 80 acres for any other reason than that of railroad grants. The bill confines the new or additional entry to the same land district, so that any fraud that may be attempted can be easily detected and exposed by the local land offices. It does not extend the benefits of the act to any person who is the owner of 160 acres of land, and thus prevents any person who owns a homestead of that much land from acquiring title to any land under it.

Several bills seeking substantially the same relief as this have been introduced in the present Congress and referred to this committee, among them (H. R. 8553) by Hon. Samuel W. Peel, on the 3d day of May, 1886. There were other provisions in this and other bills of Mr. Peel, the most important of which has been substantially embodied in bill (H. R. 5826) introduced by Hon. Charles S. Voorhees, and by him reported from this committee at this session. The committee has thought best to present the two main propositions in separate bills, and not to submit them together. The necessity for the passage of this bill has been largely increased by the timely action of the present Congress in repealing the pre-emption and timber-culture laws, and in effect changing the land laws in such manner as to make it practically impossible to acquire title to public land except under the homestead laws. We think this is as it should be, but at the same time think the homestead law should be so changed as to allow every bona fide settler to acquire a homestead of one quarter section and no more.

A bill to grant additional rights to certain homestead settlers on the public lands, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act any homestead settler who has entered less than 160 acres of land may enter other and additional land lying contiguous to the original entry, which shall not with the land first entered exceed in the aggregate 160 acres; and if there can not be found a sufficient quantity of land contiguous, then the said settler may enter so much of any other public land as may be subject to homestead entry, in a compact body, in the same land district, as when added to the quantity previously entered shall not in the aggregate exceed 160 acres; or if such settler so elect, he or she may surrender the lands first entered to the United States for cancellation, and thereupon be entitled to enter lands under the homestead laws the same as if the surrendered entry had not been made; and the residence and cultivation of such settler upon and of the lands embraced in the first entry shall be considered residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon and of the land entered by the additional or new entry, and shall be deducted from the time of residence and cultivation required by law; and if final proof of settlement and cultivation has been made for the first entry when the additional or new entry is made, then no further proof shall be required and patent shall issue: Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not be extended to any person who, at the date of his or her application under it, is the owner of 160 acres of land.

CINNABAR AND CLARK'S FORK RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PAYSON. I am further directed by the Committee on the Public Lands to call up for consideration at this time a bill (H. R. 5880) granting a right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, &c.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a right of way is hereby granted to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Montana, across such portions of the northern border of the Yellowstone National Park as may be necessary to reach, by the nearest practicable route from Cinnabar, the Clark's Fork mining district, in said Territory of Montana, by the way of the Yellowstone River to its junction with the East Fork of said river; thence by the way of said East Fork to the Soda Butte Creek; thence by said creek to the Clark's Fork mining district, upon such location as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875. Said right of way hereby granted shall not exceed 100 feet on each side of the center line of said railroad, except at such points, not nearer than 7 miles from each other, as may be designated by said railroad company for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, at which points the right of way shall be not exceeding 200 feet in width on each side of the center line of said railroad, and shall be not exceeding 2,000 feet in length; and no rights of any kind shall vest in said railroad company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual surveys for the definite location of said railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior and be duly approved by him. No timber or other materials to be used in the construction of said railroad shall be cut or taken from any portion of the Yellowstone National Park, except such as may be cut or taken within the right of way hereby granted; and the grants hereby made are limited also so as not to include any coal or other mineral found on said right of way; nor shall said company, or its successors, use the property given hereby for any purpose except in the construction and operation of a railroad.

SEC. 2. That all charges for transportation of either freight or passengers over said railroad shall be reasonable, and without discrimination as to persons, shippers, or consignees; no rebates or drawbacks of any kind or nature shall be allowed, directly or indirectly, to any patron of the railroad; nor shall there be any unjust discrimination in the facilities afforded shippers or consignees at any station on the line of said railroad; and as to these and all kindred matters Congress reserves the right to make all necessary regulations as to said railroad, in consideration of this grant, as well as to alter or amend this act.

SEC. 3. That if said road shall not be constructed and in running order within three years from and after the passage of this act, the right of way hereby granted shall thereupon be forfeited, and this condition is expressly understood to be a condition precedent as to all rights granted hereby; and in case of a breach of the condition of this section, all rights granted hereby shall revert to the United States by operation of this provision, without the necessity of any action by Congress: Provided, That the grant hereby shall not be held or construed as exclusive, so as to prevent the allowance of the locating other roads along the valley or route adopted under this act, under such grants and regulations as Congress may make and provide and the courts equitably administer.

Mr. NELSON. Before proceeding with the consideration of this bill, and before making any objection, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] whether the line of this road goes through any Indian reservation.

Mr. PAYSON. No; it does not.

Mr. NELSON. Then, what is the occasion for this bill, there being a general statute giving the right of way to all railroad companies through the public lands of the United States? What is the necessity for giving a special charter in this case?

Mr. PAYSON. Because this reservation is not part of the "public lands of the United States," and it is so held, expressly, by the Interior Department. Hence the necessity for this permit. It is not regarded as any part of the public lands of the United States.

I move, by unanimous consent, that the bill be considered in the House instead of in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I object.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole, and the pending question is on the bill (H. R. 5880) granting a right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, &c., which has been read, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill was very fully considered by the Committee on the Public Lands, and all objections which were urged against it, or could be, so far as we know, were heard and fully considered. The necessity for its passage arises out of this state of the case: There is located in the Territory of Montana, just south of what are known as the Snowy Mountains, near the upper forks of the Yellowstone River, a mining camp or city known as Cook City. There are something like five hundred mineral locations in that mining camp which have been disposed of by the General Government to citizens, and which have been operated and developed more or less in the last twelve or fourteen years, showing rich, valuable veins, but of refractory ores.

It is well known to all who have taken occasion to examine the situation in that part of the Union that those mountains are full of the precious metals. In the cañons and gulches in the immediate vicinity of Cook City placer mines have been worked, with more or less success, for gold for the last twenty-five years. I was in that location a year ago this summer, and know of some of the matters as to which I am about to speak from personal observation, and as to them and other matters, generally relating to the merits of this bill, there is no dispute.

These mines, so far as they have been developed—and they cover an area of from 9 to 10 miles in one direction, and from 15 to 20 miles in another—are of great richness. The only means of communication between this mining camp and the outside world is by a wagon-road leading along the east fork of the Yellowstone River, 26 miles to the station of Cinnabar on the branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad. This branch road runs from Livingston, on the main line to Cinnabar Station, near the northern line of the Yellowstone Park; and from Cinnabar to Cook City, a distance of about 56 miles. The only means of communication is by an ordinary mountain wagon-road.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. PAYSON. With pleasure.

Mr. KELLEY. Does any part of this proposed route run within the boundaries of the Yellowstone Park?

Mr. PAYSON. I am coming to that presently if the gentleman will give me his attention.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, the only means of communication at present existing is by a wagon road between these various points. Cook City is just outside of the boundary line of the Yellowstone Park, in the Territory of Montana, and 56 miles to the west, and just outside of the boundary line is this railroad station of Cinnabar. Now we have a distance which is estimated on some maps to be from two and a half to three miles, and on others from five to eight miles, inside of the northern boundary line of the park, along the east fork of the Yellowstone River, along the line of which this proposed road is to run, and which will define the location of the route if this bill shall become a law. It is proposed that this railroad company may lay its tracks inside the park to that extent only, the distance not exceeding twelve to fifteen miles.

The only objection which has been urged against the bill by anybody is, that it interferes with the objects and purposes for which that reservation was established, and for which a grand national park should be preserved forever to the country in a state of nature, and containing as it does within itself objects of wonder and natural curiosities not elsewhere known in the civilized world.

Another idea is, that if there should be no interference in any way with the game, buffalo, elk, Rocky Mountain sheep and goats, &c., that in the natural course of events these animals now in the park would largely increase their numbers, and thus prevent their total extinction.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the first objection, and I speak not only from information, but from a personal knowledge of the facts, for I have been over the ground, there is not an object of natural curiosity between the point at which this railway is proposed to be permitted to enter the park and Cook City, except a mound of an extinct geyser known as Soda Butte, and a small spring by it, and neither of these will be injured or touched by this proposed line of road.

There is not one tourist out of five hundred who would go as far as from here to the proposed site of the national library building to see that natural curiosity. Hundreds and thousands of like mounds are to be met with in the great geyser basin, lying to the south in that park, which, it should be remembered, contains a vast area, being 55 miles in one direction and 65 in the other, while the only object of natural curiosity near the northern boundary of the park in the locality referred to is what is known as the Mamouth Hot Springs, located about 4 miles from the northern line of the park and 3 miles from this proposed line of railroad.

That is all there is of it. There is no question of sentiment embraced in the matter, except the merest shadow. No injury can result to any of the objects of natural curiosity there, and the question is presented here whether or not a mining camp which is believed to be as rich as that of Butte, in Montana, whose output, in my opinion, will be measured by millions upon millions of dollars, shall be permitted to have access to the markets of the world by a suitable outlet of this character instead of long, tedious, expensive hauls by wagon transportation in a mountainous country.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Most certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Are the lands at this camp to which you refer all taken up?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; there are still some not taken up.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Are they open to pre-emption and homestead settlement, like the other public lands?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; these are mineral lands, and are not subject, as my friend is aware, to settlement in that manner. They can be only taken up under the mineral-land laws.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What proportion of these lands have been taken up?

Mr. PAYSON. My impression is that there are upwards of five hundred locations in this locality and at the end of the proposed line of road, covering a distance of between 9 and 12 miles, perhaps, outside the park.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Can the gentleman state whether these interests are held by individuals or by a syndicate?

Mr. PAYSON. Largely by individuals. Some of them, I have no doubt, are held by corporations or partnerships; but they are largely individual locations. I met, when I was there, a great many gentlemen who had made locations there as individuals, who went there long before the Northern Pacific road was built, and engaged in placer mining in the mountains and gulches about there——

The CHAIRMAN. The hour has expired.

Mr. PAYSON. That cuts me off just at a comma, but I will finish the sentence hereafter. [Laughter.]

The hour having expired, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5880) had come to no resolution thereon.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate on this bill has been limited to two hours.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] for so kindly yielding to me at this time.

In contemplation of a purpose which I have to offer an amendment relating to the trade-dollar to the bill now under consideration, I crave indulgence in the time allowed for general discussion, in the presentment of some views bearing upon the question, which I may not hereafter have the opportunity to express.

While the amendment to be proposed may be subject to a point of order, still I indulge the hope that in view of the difficulty involved in otherwise obtaining action upon the subject at this short session, it will not be interposed. We are already beginning to perceive and realize some of the benefits which have resulted in the passage of an amendment to the sundry civil bill at the last session, of which the country would have been deprived had the point of order been raised. I allude to the provision embodied in that bill which directs the issuance of silver certificates in small denominations. If a similar relaxation of the rigor of the rule can now be allowed, it is hoped that a final disposition of this matter can be had, and legislation enacted which is unquestionably of such importance as to merit the attention of Congress.

The law which brought the trade-dollar into existence is as follows:

The silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar, a half-dollar, or fifty-cent piece; a quarter-dollar, or twenty-five-cent piece; a dime, or ten-cent piece; and said coins shall be a legal-tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding five dollars in any one payment. (Act of 12th of February, 1873.)

The same law provided that the trade-dollar should contain 420 grains Troy, and dropped from further coinage in our system of silver money the ordinary silver dollar which had long been in use. Under this law there were coined of these trade-dollars 15,631,000, of which amount $12,580,000 were exported and $3,051,000 remained in the United States and became absorbed in circulation. Whatever may have been the object involved in the coinage of the trade-dollar or the policy of its issuance, it is evident that nearly one-fifth of the amount coined during the three years five and one-third months immediately succeeding the passage of the act mentioned, and by virtue of its operation, was left with our own people for domestic use, and with the undoubted privilege of passing the same as money, and with legal-tender effect in amounts not exceeding five dollars in any one payment.

Whether for export or internal use it was clad with all the insignia and bore all the credentials of American silver money, fully sanctioned by the authority of the Government. It became, by fair and practical popular interpretation, the substitute of the dollar formerly in use but discontinued by the terms of the act quoted. The law invited the bullion owner to bring his silver to the mints, freely and without limit, and have the same coined into trade-dollars. There was nothing upon its face which conveyed any greater notice of a temporary or foreign use of the trade-dollar than the half-dollar, the quarter-dollar, or the dime.

It said "the silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar," &c., and they "shall be a legal tender" to the extent indicated. No statute could be made more explicit, and the fundamental laws of society required of all our people a full respect for, and warranted a full confidence in, its validity and integrity. The phraseology of the act could not possibly have begotten in the mind of any rational or patriotic citizen the slightest suspicion as to the sincerity and honest purpose of the Government. There was no room for construction, for its meaning was express and apparent. It afforded the unquestioned right to buy and sell with these trade-dollars and to utilize them for any and all monetary purposes the same as any other coin, and led the citizen to feel that he could confidently rely upon the good faith—yea, even the best faith—of his Government, to sustain and secure him in the use of a coin created, made current, and regulated in value by its authority.

The financier may anticipate, and in a measure provide against, fluctuations in the commercial value of the amount of silver contained in a dollar or other coin; these fluctuations have always existed, and it may be beyond the power of any one sovereignty to prevent their recurrence; but the ordinary citizen rarely has the time or aptitude for such investigation. While he may not fully comprehend the causes and phenomena of "monetary dislocation" and the agencies and processes whereby our silver and gold are alternately or conjointly "shunted" abroad; he nevertheless has embedded in his philosophy and implanted in his common sense the conviction that when once any government through its legally constituted authority stamps and designates a monetary value upon its coins, it speaks into existence that which it can not unqualifiedly retract and the public conscience and national honor are estopped from repudiating.

If public policy or fiscal convenience demand a change or discontinuance of coins, the highest obligations of justice and fair dealing imperatively require that accompanying such change or discontinuance shall be made ample provision for redemption and the protection of individual holders. Repudiation is not characteristic of the United States, and is repulsive to the genius and theory of all popular institutions. The American citizen has been taught that his is an honest Government and infinitely above and beyond the solicitations or practice of bad faith to its people; and with the law in his hand and the continued coinage of these trade-dollars going on before his eyes, he would have regarded it as a national insult to have been told that the time would come when they would be shorn of their quality as money and left upon his hand as mere disavowed bullion, the shameful evidences of a broken promise.

As admitted by one Secretary of the Treasury, "the reading of the laws taught the people that the trade-dollar was a coin of their sovereignty, and for the redemption of which, at an unabated value, their Government was bound." The past history of this country and England furnishes abundant precedents for the redemption of coins deprived of their legal-tender character, and fully justified the statement made by Mr. Folger.

After the law authorizing the coinage of the trade-dollar had been on the statute-books for nearly three and one-half years, and the amount before stated had been coined, Congress passed a joint resolution which declared—

That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit, from time to time, the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What is the date of that resolution?

Mr. LANHAM. July 22, 1876.

By virtue of the discretionary authority thus conferred upon him, silver deposits for coinage into trade-dollars were discontinued by the Secretary of the Treasury in October, 1877, but in the following November he so modified his order as to allow bullion receipts at the Western mints for return in trade-dollars, in response to an alleged demand for these coins on the Pacific coast for Chinese settlements. Since July, 1876, there have been coined $20,328,360, of which amount $16,424,004 have been exported.

The total coinage of trade-dollars, including 6,564 proof-pieces coined since 1878, when the coinage thereof otherwise finally ceased, amounts to $35,965,924. Official estimates show that $2,074,812 have been imported since July 22, 1876; that $500,000 have been remelted at the United States mints; and that there have probably been taken out by Chinese $1,500,000, leaving the estimated amount now in this country at $7,036,732. It is the opinion of the Director of the Mint, after estimating the entire amounts exported and brought back, together with what has remained at home, making allowance for what has been remelted, used in the arts, and might be returned from abroad hereafter, that the amount which would probably be presented for redemption would not greatly exceed $10,000,000.

Nearly one-half of the entire amount of trade-dollars was coined prior to the repeal of their legal-tender quality, and when the important fact stated by the Director of the Mint is remembered, namely "that all coinage of trade-dollars during the calendar year 1876 bore the stamp of that year, whether coined before or after the date of the act of July 22, 1876," it is safe to assume that more than one-half of the total coinage ought to be regarded as embraced within the period prior to such repeal.

During the year 1876 $6,132,050 were coined, of which amount $2,975,200 were coined subsequent to the 22d of July. The Government can not be allowed to blend and mingle indistinguishably by the same stamp and device, a legal and a non-legal tender dollar, and then require the citizen to determine what the Government itself could not do, the one from the other. It is a well-established principle that no trustee can prejudice the rights of his cestui que trust by an admixture of trust funds with those of his own or others. The Government is but an aggregation of individuals, and it is incumbent upon it to practice and exemplify the same rules of fair dealing, the observance of which it makes obligatory upon its individual citizens.

Whatever may be said regarding the redemption of the trade-dollars coined and issued since 1876, I think the conclusion is absolutely irresistible, in law and logic, that it is the manifest duty of the Government to redeem every trade-dollar, not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, which is now outstanding and was coined prior to the 1st day of January, 1877, upon due presentment thereof at its offices. This proposition, it seems to me, is so well supported by principle and circumstance so reasonable and cogent as not to admit of rational controversy, and must address itself with inevitable force to all fair-minded and intelligent men. This disposes of what I will, for the sake of convenience, denominate the first half or legal-tender issue of trade-dollars.

It may be more difficult to maintain the same propositions with regard to the second half or non-legal-tender issue, upon all the grounds which are assigned in support of the first, owing to the change in the law and the expressed object for which subsequent coinage should be allowed; but upon full consideration of the matter it will, I think, appear to be good policy, highly expedient, in keeping with substantial justice, and certainly without detriment to the public good to include that also within the provisions of redemption. I desire to be perfectly ingenuous in the argument, and to suppress the consideration of no objection which ought to be combated.

Perhaps the strongest reason that can be urged against it is the fact that the law itself (22d July, 1876) gave notice that a discretionary power was vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to limit the coinage for purposes of export use, and that thereafter trade-dollars should not be a legal tender. Had there been maintained a strict and cautious observance of the letter and spirit of this change in the law by the agents of the Treasury it would have been practically impossible for the people to have suffered any material or involuntary imposition in consequence of continued coinage; for there would have been no considerable excess, if any at all, over that demanded for foreign use, and but few of these coins could have found their way into local circulation or constituted an important element of attraction for the speculator.

But the coinage was kept up, and more than twenty millions of these dollars were issued and added to the stock already in existence, notwithstanding the limitations in the statute. They were originally made legal and current coins of the United States; the people had been made familiar with and accustomed to their use, and while all men are presumed to know the law and take notice of all its changes, still it is not unnatural to suppose that many of these coins were innocently received by force of habit and in actual ignorance of what Congress had done toward repealing their legal-tender quality or defining the purpose for which additional and continued coinage should be allowed.

If any have been entrapped or deluded into so receiving them; if the credulous and unwary, knowing that they have been money and are still being issued by the Government, and trusting in the good faith and practice of their country, have failed to minutely scrutinize these coins and note the year of their issuance; if incautious wage-earners have received them for their toil, or tradesmen have taken them for their wares, or others have been victimized by the vigilance and compassings of speculation—whatever the results which have ensued, whether of benefit to one or detriment to another, the acts and agencies of Government have not only made these things possible, but furnished the opportunities therefor and facilitated their accomplishment.

Whenever a currency becomes debased or dishonored by the act of its author, the severer and primary consequent injuries are apt to be borne by the poor and ignorant. Their "short and simple annals" are not complicated by bank accounts or scientific financial calculations. When they see a shining silver coin, with stars around its border, encircling the Goddess of Liberty enstamped, and "In God we trust" on the one side, with "United States of America," "E pluribus unum," the great American eagle, "420 grains .900 fine" and "Trade-dollar" on the other, the great body of them will be content with the inspection which reveals such proofs of money, and the desire for possession will dispense with further inquiry into laws extant or laws repealed, imports or exports, Chinese or sycees. [Laughter.] But they can and do feel acutely a sense of betrayal of their confidence when they realize that their Government has permitted to be left upon their hands an uncurrent and degraded coin.

The Secretary of the Treasury, by allowing the coinage to continue after July, 1876, and beyond the amount "sufficient to meet the export demand for the same," has enabled designing persons to promote domestic circulation and placed the Government in the attitude of passive permission and acquiescence, if not active co-operation, in the work of furnishing whatever amount may have entered into actual circulation in the United States and contributing to all the incentives to its use among our own people.

It was possible by custom-house returns to have ascertained how much was being exported, and the chosen officers of the Government knew or should have known that more was being coined than went abroad; they knew the extent of the previous operations of the trade-dollar in our own country, the fact that it had been used as money by the people, as well as their liability to continue its use, the motives and opportunities it would excite and promote for profit or loss and the reasonable popular reliance, supported by precedent in our own and European countries, to be indulged in favor of its ultimate redemption; and thus knowing, acting, and permitting, the consequences of responsibility for the conditions which have obtained are as binding upon the Government as if it had been an actual and intentional participant in producing such conditions. Under all the circumstances, it seems to me that the Government would be taking advantage of its own wrong if it should fail to make the necessary reparation and give that public satisfaction which can only be afforded by promptly calling in and redeeming its own existing coin as represented in trade-dollars.

If the duty to redeem be established, it follows that it is immaterial who, of our people, are the possessors of these coins. If any of them have fallen into the hands of speculators, the same may be said of various governmental obligations which have been purchased at a discount. Whatever speculation in these coins may have been possible, the Government by its own action, permission, or acquiescence, is a party to such possibility, and is estopped from refusing redemption on that account.

But what appear to be the facts as to their possession? The report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that on October 7, 1886, the national banks held of them $1,889,794. The residue is believed to be held by tradesmen, mechanics, laborers, farmers, and business men, as well as by savings banks, benevolent societies, and trust companies. In a very interesting speech delivered in the Forty-eighth Congress by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVANS], an inventory of trade-dollars in the State of Pennsylvania is submitted, which shows as follows:

Held by banks, bankers, trust companies, and private individuals, at their face value and at a discount:

Banks, bankers, and trust companies, at par	$796,749
Private individuals and societies	1,641,134
At a discount from 10 to 15 per cent	123,044
Total	2,560,927

Thus it will be seen that of the more than two and one-half millions of these dollars in the State of Pennsylvania, less than 5 per cent. are held at a discount, and nearly two-thirds of the whole amount are held by private individuals and societies. I take the liberty, in this connection, to quote from a letter, dated April 21, 1886, written by Cyrus T. Fox, secretary of the Berks County Agricultural and Horticultural Society at Reading, Pa., the following:

I may add that between $275,000 and $300,000 in trade-dollars are held by merchants and business men of this county; that the Reading banks hold about $150,000 of the coin as collateral and a special deposit; that two banks, the National and Farmers' National, have $110,000 in trade-dollars on deposit; that there are at least five hundred farmers in the county holding trade-dollars in amounts ranging from $50 to $2,000; that the names of several farmers in Oley and Pike townships can be given having $2,000 each, and that there are a great many small holders of the coin, some of whom received the same as wages and have been holding it in the hope that Congress will pass a law for its redemption, dollar for dollar. * * * It is estimated that $1,500,000 in trade-dollars was circulated in the Schuylkill Valley; about $1,000,000 of this sum having been disbursed in wages to employés by the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company. At least $500,000 remains in the hands of innocent holders in the valley, and the remainder is held by banking institutions at Philadelphia, Norristown, Phœnixville, &c.

The presence of so many trade-dollars in Pennsylvania may be accounted for by the fact that $5,107,524 were coined at the mint in Philadelphia, and consequently less liable to exportation, and the balance was coined at the Western mints, in San Francisco and Carson.

It may be stated that the principal amount in the United States is to be found in Pennsylvania and adjacent States. It is true, however, that they have in smaller quantities found their way into other portions of the Union. The distribution of trade-dollars among the national banks by States, Territories, and reserve cities, as shown by the last report of the Comptroller of the Currency, was, on the 7th of October, 1886, as follows:

Maine	$460 00	Alabama	$104 00
New Hampshire	114 25	Mississippi	1 00
Vermont	4,536 61	Texas	1 00
Massachusetts	17,547 27	Arkansas	187 00
City of Boston	497 00	Kentucky	9,153 75
Rhode Island	532 90	City of Louisville	1,750 00
Connecticut	33,869 15	Tennessee	2,665 75
New York	250,986 29	Ohio	36,320 15
City of New York	241,304 05	City of Cincinnati	20,027 00
City of Albany	600 00	City of Cleveland	1,100 00
New Jersey	85,745 70	Indiana	19,709 15
Pennsylvania	650,414 23	Illinois	3,224 75
City of Philadelphia	334,450 00	Michigan	3,961 65
City of Pittsburgh	14,620 00	Wisconsin	130 00
Delaware	23,784 75	Iowa	1,497 79
Maryland	15,620 36	Minnesota	245 00
City of Baltimore	87,626 00	Missouri	815 00
City of Washington	8,031 00	Kansas	880 00
Virginia	8,520 00	Nebraska	1,021 40
West Virginia	7,462 80	Idaho	10 00
North Carolina	201 00	Montana	1 00
South Carolina	25 00	Utah	15 00
Florida	23 80	Washington	2 00

None are reported from Georgia, Louisiana, Colorado, Nevada, California, Oregon, Dakota, New Mexico, and Wyoming. The presence of cents in the enumeration is doubtless attributable to the estimate being made upon the bullion value of the coins.

The amount thus reported from my own State is only $1, though it is interesting to note that on 24th December, 1885, there were reported $167.60; on 1st March, 1886, $8; 3d June, $11, and 27th August, $3,001.

I may take the credit of being actuated by no local or sectional motives in arriving at the conclusions to which a careful investigation of this subject has conducted me; on the contrary, in endeavoring to enforce the same, I am but attempting to discharge a duty incumbent on me as a public representative, by virtue of my committee assignment, and the special reference in the regular order of business to myself and others of the bills relating to the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar which have been introduced at this Congress.

The results of the protracted and repeated deliberations of that committee upon the subject are shown by the bill (H. R. 8330) reported April 29, 1886, the passage of which I earnestly believe is dictated by justice and sound policy. It limits the period for redemption to six months after its passage, and permits unimpaired trade-dollars to be received for all Government dues. It allows the holder of the same to present them to the Treasurer or his assistants and receive therefor a like amount and value, dollar for dollar, in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary coin, at the option of the holder. It provides that when received by the Government they shall not be paid out or reissued, but recoined into standard silver dollars at the expense of the Government, and repeals all former laws authorizing their coinage and issuance. It is not materially different from the bill which passed the House in the Forty-eighth Congress by a vote of 198 to 46, and is in pursuit of the same legislative policy adopted by the House in the Forty-seventh Congress, which passed a bill having the same substantial object.

But to return to the argument: it makes no difference in what sections of the country these coins are to be found, or who own them, when it is once shown or conceded that it is right to redeem them. The present holders of them, whether they "have taken them in the fair way of currency or business," whether they are laboring men or capitalists, in whatever portion of the Union they reside, should be allowed, under the provisions of the bill described, to bring them to the Treasury agents and have them redeemed.

The accomplishment of redemption is not only demanded by precedent, justice to the citizen, and national integrity, but it is highly economical and expedient. It will involve no loss or expense to the Government, and require no appropriation of money. The 7½ grains of silver in the trade-dollar additional to that contained in the standard dollar, and the 35 grains to that contained in the two half-dollars, will not only abundantly defray the cost of redemption, but leave an actual profit to the Government. The Director of the Mint, in his letter of January 28, 1886, to the subcommittee on coinage, composed of my colleagues from Kentucky and New York, Messrs. McCREARY and JAMES, and myself, says:

* * * Should the mints and assistant treasuries of the United States be authorized to redeem in subsidiary coin such trade-dollars as may be purchased for redemption in the sums of $10 or multiples thereof, the profit to the Government in the form of seigniorage would amount to some 8 per cent., or more than enough to defray the expenses of the recoinage.

"Virtue is her own reward," but in this case it seems, if such an argument could apply to a great, free republic, that special inducements in the shape of financial profit are held out to persuade and influence the Government to discharge a public duty.

What would be said of a private individual, thus situated, were he to fail to redeem his promises and perform his obligations? He would be shunned as a commercial leper, and quarantined from contact with honest men of business, regarded as unworthy of confidence among his fellows and bound by no sense of morality. A contract, express or implied, is just as binding upon a government as it is upon a private person. The law constrains men, but men make the laws. Society inculcates honesty; it should practice what it teaches, and thus offer a living example for individual emulation. No man is fit to be a lawmaker who is not honest himself. Equity and good conscience ought to pervade our legislatures. The time hastens, in the advancing thought and improving civilization of our country, when no man can ignore the plain teachings of dignified morality and upright conduct, and maintain public confidence, or hold place or power at the hands of the American people.

The original creation of the trade-dollar containing more silver than the standard dollar and allowance of its equal circulation alongside the latter are anomalous, and it seems to me of doubtful propriety, if not wholly unjustified even by the alleged causes which authorized its coinage. Its retirement and recoinage now, while not expressly declaring a disapproval of the policy of its issuance, would nevertheless operate as a caution in the future and serve in the establishment of a desired uniform and settled system with reference to our silver money. Our people require an American silver dollar; it is dear to the popular heart; they have it and are always going to have it. The time will not come in our history when they will allow it to be demonetized or its coinage to cease, it makes no difference who recommends it. [Applause.]

The redemption of the trade-dollar would revitalize and bring to the channels of business several millions of dollars' worth of what is now dormant and inoperative bullion, and cause its conversion into standard dollars or subsidiary coin, as the demands of trade or the inclination of the holders might suggest. In the latter event it would respond to the recent request of the Treasury Department for the issue of subsidiary coin. It would add to the volume of our metallic money, and to the extent of such addition meet the wants of the people for an increased circulating medium. It would be a step in the direction of the free coinage of silver, an object which my judgment and research convince me ought to be promoted by the most earnest and persistent endeavors of the people's representatives.

In conclusion, I beg to express gratification at the fact that the much-talked-of gap between gold and silver seems to be closing by an advance in the price of silver. The conviction has settled down in the minds of the people, and our past action has assured the world that the silver dollar is a permanency in this great silver-producing country. These facts have doubtless contributed to the appreciation of silver, and every act of legislation which shall tend to its still further confirmance and crystallize an American policy equally favorable to gold and silver coinage, and conservative of the concurrent and coequal employment of the two precious metals as fiscal agencies will expedite the period when parity and equilibrium will be restored and the gap between them be finally closed. The time and effort devoted and directed to the attainment of such an end will be well exerted.

In the treatment of the trade-dollar let us "be just and fear not." Let us preserve the national faith, retain the popular confidence, and merit universal respect. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. By consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, communicated to the Chair, the gentleman from Texas occupied forty minutes; leaving twenty minutes to that side.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. The bill we are discussing proposes to appropriate $19,183,911 for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888. The amount appropriated in the sundry civil bill for 1887 was $22,661,910, making an apparent saving in this present bill of $3,477,999. How that saving is proposed to be made will be explained in part, at least, by a letter which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES.,
Washington, D. C., December 6, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the estimates submitted under the titles "Navy Yards and Stations" and "New Naval Observatory," on pages 163 and 164 of the Book of Estimates for 1888, and which aggregate $4,418,961.16, I am directed by Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to say that the subcommittee in charge of the sundry civil bill are of opinion that said estimates belong to and should be considered as a part of the naval establishment for which the Committee on Naval Affairs are charged, under the rules of the House, with reporting appropriations, and that no recommendation will therefore be made by the Committee on Appropriations touching these estimates.

Very respectfully,

JAMES C. COURTS,
Clerk Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Hon. H. A. HERBERT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, the committee will observe that here is a formal surrender of jurisdiction over estimates amounting to nearly four and a half millions of dollars, proposed to be made by the Appropriation Committee, to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The sundry civil bill of last session, appropriating for the current year, included every estimate of the class mentioned in that letter with the exception of one—that for the Naval Observatory.

Mr. RANDALL. Will you state the aggregate amount?

Mr. HERBERT. I am not speaking of amounts. I am speaking of a class of estimates. Why this surrender? Those estimates are large. If an appropriation should be made according to the estimates the bill of the present year, instead of being a decrease from that of last year, would be an increase of over a million dollars. Is that the reason why the surrender is proposed to be made?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman surely does not want to make that charge.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not charge that that is the reason in the face of the letter which says that the Committee on Appropriations consider that under the rule these items so estimated for belong to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman stated further that the bill would be in excess a million of dollars of what it was last year. Now, the amount appropriated last year——

Mr. HERBERT. What I said is correct, as the gentleman will see if he will not interrupt me. I said if he had appropriated for those items according to the estimates this bill would have been $1,000,000 larger than that of last year.

Now, the point at issue between us is, what do the rules, the present rules distributing appropriations among several committees—what do they mean? The sundry civil bill of last session was passed after the present rules were adopted. There has been no change in the rules since then. If this subject-matter belonged then to the sundry civil bill it belongs there now. I propose to show that it did belong there then. Prior to the amendment of the rules the whole subject of appropriations, with two exceptions, belonged to the Committee on Appropriations. A portion of the jurisdiction over that subject was by the amended rules distributed to several committees.

Among others, the Committee on Military Affairs according to the rules was to have referred to it all proposed legislation on subjects relating—

To the military establishment and the public defenses.

To the Committee on Naval Affairs was to be referred all proposed legislation on subjects relating—

To the naval establishment, including the appropriations for its support.

Now, what was the meaning of that rule? Note that similar words are used in conferring jurisdiction upon both committees. The one is to have jurisdiction over subjects relating to the military establishment, the other over subjects relating to the naval establishment. Of course the changes in the rules must be taken with reference to the well-known condition of affairs in the House. At that time there was a sundry civil bill. Nothing in the new rules proposes anywhere to disturb that bill. That bill, before the new rules were adopted, included appropriations for subjects coming under the Treasury Department, under the Department of the Interior, under the War Department, under the Department of Justice, and under the Navy Department. After the new rules were adopted last session the sundry civil bill was framed upon the idea that that bill was untouched; and so it contained the same appropriations as before.

But this session the bill is brought in leaving out every estimate for the Navy Department, and leaving in the appropriations for the War Department. If conferring upon the Naval Committee jurisdiction over appropriations for "the naval establishment" took all matters relating in any manner to the Navy out of the sundry civil bill, why did not the use of words conferring upon the Military Committee jurisdiction of subjects relating to the military establishment take also out of that sundry civil bill all matters relating in any manner to the Army? Now, if we look at the estimates themselves, we find that in the book containing them there is one chapter containing the estimates for and headed "the naval establishment." Then, looking to the bill of last year and of the year before and of the year before that, we find that those estimates for "the naval establishment" constituted the items, and all the items, included in the bill for the support of the naval service, ordinarily called the naval appropriation bill.

These words, "the naval establishment," had a well-known signification. They constituted the caption of and covered all the estimates for appropriations to be included, and which were from year to year included, in the bill appropriating moneys for the naval service. So it seems to me that the conclusion necessarily follows that these estimates for "the naval establishment" were to go, and they only, to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and so they did last session.

The estimates for a military establishment, comprised in another chapter, likewise went to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is not proposed now, as I understand it, to disturb that. This bill carries the usual appropriations for estimates under the War Department. Why should it leave out only the Navy Department?

It is not any answer to say that these things, to which the letter of the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers, might properly be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. So might the arsenals properly be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, but they never have been. Those estimates for arsenals, which have a certain relation to the Army, have always come in under a chapter headed "Public Works." Docks and yards and naval stations, which, it is true, have a certain relation to the Navy, have always been embraced in the same chapter, "Public Works." That chapter and the estimates in it have always constituted the sundry civil bill. Everything in it, as I understand, except what has been taken out and handed over to the Agricultural Committee and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has belonged, without question heretofore, to the sundry civil bill. There is no evidence whatever of any intent anywhere in the rules to disturb the sundry civil bill. The rules were not construed at the last session to have any such effect.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman whether there is any dispute between him and the Committee on Appropriations as to the fact that the items now in controversy have always gone with the sundry civil bill?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not think there is any. I do not understand the gentlemen on the other side to say that these items have not always gone there.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, these estimates all come to the Speaker of the House, for the information of the House. The estimates for the Naval Department submitted at the last session were $4,718,337.41. That was the amount of the estimates which the gentleman says properly belonged under the control of the Appropriations Committee; yet the House, upon the recommendation of the committee, passed only $316,595. So that the gentleman's suggestion, that the object or effect of the proposed change is to make a seeming reduction on this bill, has no foundation in fact; and in no event, judging by the appropriation given last year under those estimates, is it likely that this bill would have been increased over $400,000.

More, in the estimates last year was included the Naval Observatory, in like manner, I think, as it appears here to-day; yet, after the Committee on Appropriations had refused to appropriate under that estimate, the Committee on Naval Affairs took jurisdiction of the subject and inserted in their bill the amount required to begin the construction of the Naval Observatory. After this statement, the gentleman will at once see the inconsistency of the position he occupies.

Mr. HERBERT. Do we do that about the navy-yards and stations?

Mr. RANDALL. In 1870, long after the war, there was a desire to get more money for naval affairs than was carried in the naval bill, and at that time arose the practice of appropriating for the Navy in two bills. But at that time all these appropriations, and both these bills in particular, were under a common control. Since then, at the last session of Congress, there has been taken from the Committee on Appropriations the appropriations which relate to the naval establishment, and these estimates naturally belong, and actually do belong, to the naval establishment. They can not belong anywhere else.

Mr. HERBERT. Do they belong there any more than the arsenals belong to the military establishment?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; and I want to say further that so far as I am concerned, this is a mere forerunner. I say that the arsenals which are completed should go to the Military Committee. The arsenals that are in course of construction remain with the Committee on Appropriations only because appropriations for public buildings go there of necessity.

Mr. MORRISON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. MORRISON. Where was this appropriation placed when the Committee on Appropriations had charge of both these bills?

Mr. RANDALL. I have explained that. I have said that in 1870 certain matters were left out of the naval appropriation bill and inserted in the sundry civil bill, and since then two committees have taken charge of the matter.

Mr. MORRISON. But what about two years ago?

Mr. RANDALL. The rules were not changed two years ago.

Mr. MORRISON. But just before the rules were changed?

Mr. RANDALL. We had charge of the subject, and it went into this bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Did you not put it in the right bill; did you not put it where it ought to have been?

Mr. RANDALL. We put it where it had been put since 1870.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have a minute or two more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no discretion in the matter. The gentleman from Pennsylvania may get additional time from some gentleman on the opposite side.

Mr. RYAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want more than a minute.

The real question involved in this proposition is whether this matter can be best and most intelligently provided for under the direction of the committee which comes into immediate communication with the Navy Department and has in its charge the great bulk of appropriations for the naval establishment. I am quite willing the House shall determine that question.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen on this side of the House who desire to submit remarks in general debate upon this bill prefer to do so on next Monday, or whenever the consideration of the bill may be resumed. If, therefore, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no objection, I will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. RANDALL. I would prefer to vary the gentleman's suggestion, so as to give consent that there be an hour's general debate on the day when this bill is next considered, and that we now proceed to take up the items of the bill in detail.

Mr. RYAN. I have no objection to that.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; let us adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] can test the sense of the House on his proposition.

Mr. RYAN. As this is Saturday afternoon, there seems to be a disposition that the committee rise and the House adjourn. Therefore, in order to test the sense of the House, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, there being ayes 87, noes 14; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 13, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

WADE HAMPTON, a Senator from the State of South Carolina, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. MORRILL presented the credentials of GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, chosen by the Legislature of Vermont a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4,1887; which were read, and ordered to be placed on file.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the collection of duties; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 9, 1886, the report of George B. Clark, revenue agent, in regard to the school farms in Beaufort, S. C.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the surveyor-general of New Mexico, upon the private land claim of Nerio Antonio Montoya or Ojo del Medio grant No. 51; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD GRANT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of December 7, 1886, certain information as to the forfeiture of lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, which will be read.

Mr. INGALLS. As the communication appears to be voluminous, it is not necessary to have it read at length. It may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator propose to have it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. INGALLS. I prefer to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made. It will lie on the table.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 10, 1886.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt, on the 8th instant, of a resolution, adopted by the Senate on the day before, wherein it was—

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether the lands within the grant to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, declared forfeited by act of July 6, 1886, have been restored to entry, as provided by said act; and if not so restored, the occasion of the delay."

In reply, I have the honor to state, that on receipt, on August 24, 1886, of a certified copy of the act of July 6, 1886, declaring the forfeiture referred to, the Commissioner of the General Land Office at once proceeded to take the necessary steps to carry out the declared purpose of Congress.

It was necessary to identify exactly the lands covered by the provision of the forfeiting act. To this end it was desirable to ascertain to a certainty what portions of the line of said railroad were uncompleted at the date of said act, and to cause to be made correct diagrams locating said line, and showing the coterminous lands to be restored. All of this involved the consumption of time and the expenditure of much labor.

When the plats were prepared an inspection of them, in connection with the forfeiting act, showed that grave questions, involving much consideration, were presented. After due deliberation the Commissioner, on November 12th ultimo, forwarded to me for approval his recommendations in relation to the subject. Inasmuch as important questions of law were involved, the comunication of the Commissioner was appropriately referred to the Law Division of this Department, where in due order it was being acted upon at the time of the adoption of the Senate resolution.

Since the receipt of that resolution I have acted upon the report from the law division and directed the Commissioner to open to settlement and entry, after proper notice, the forfeited lands found to be in New Mexico, at $2.50 per acre, and to withhold from entry for the present the forfeited lands found to be in California, the latter being within the conflicting limits of a like grant by the same act to the Southern Pacific Railroad. My action and the reasons therefor will be found set out more at length in the letter addressed by me to the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this day, a copy of which is herewith inclosed.

The thirty days' notice required to be given by the local land officers is to afford an equal opportunity to all who may desire to make filings or entries upon said lands. In the mean time, parties who have settled or may settle upon those lands will be entitled to all rights acquired thereby, if thereafter they comply with the requirements of the law in proper time; so that practically but little harm will be caused by the delay.

With regard to the lands within the conflicting limits of the two roads in California, the delay, whilst to be regretted, is unavoidable.

There are six classes of lands in these limits upon which the forfeiting act operates, and in relation to which it will take time to adjust the conflicting claims of the Government and the Southern Pacific Railroad.

The first class is comprised of the odd-numbered sections within the common granted limits of the two roads. The Supreme Court decided, in the case of the Saint Paul Railroad vs. Winona Railroad (112 U. S., 720), that in the case of such conflict in the primary limits of two completed roads, said roads took "an equal undivided interest in the lands so situated," without regard to priority of location or construction. If that decision is applicable to the present case, it would but be promotive of injury to the settlers to open to them any of the lands in the common limits, until it be ascertained clearly to what sections thereof the Government is entitled. If the rule, stated in said decision, be not applicable to the present case, it would be because the Southern Pacific, having completed its road in time, and the grant to the Atlantic and Pacific having been forfeited because of its failure to build its road, the former company would be entitled to the full measure of the granted lands along its line; which would leave none for the Government and the settlers.

The second class of lands are within the granted limits of the Southern Pacific and the indemnity limits of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad.

The third class of lands involved are those within the granted limits of the Atlantic and Pacific and the indemnity limits of the Southern Pacific.

The fourth class comprises lands within the common indemnity limits of both roads.

The fifth class embraces lands within the common granted limits of the Atlantic and Pacific and the Southern Pacific branch line; and the sixth class relates to lands within the indemnity limits of the Atlantic and Pacific and the granted limits of the Southern Pacific branch line.

The mention of the several classes of the lands thus differently situated, and controlled by differing considerations, is enough to show that in their present complicated relations to the two grants and the forfeiting act, much care is necessary in the ascertainment and adjustment of the particular tracts to which the Government and the Southern Pacific respectively are entitled, so that settlements be not made on the wrong land. These matters will be settled as soon as possible, so that all the forfeited lands shall be thrown open to disposal under the general land laws.

Whilst the necessary delay in this case is to be regretted, the expedition of the Land Department in the present instance will compare favorably with the action heretofore taken in other cases of forfeitures declared by Congress.

The grant of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company was declared forfeited July 14, 1870 (16 Stat., 277) and the lands restored September 6, 1877. The grant of the Saint Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad was forfeited June 28, 1884 (23 Stat., 61), and the lands restored March 24, 1885. The grant of the Oregon Central Railroad was forfeited by act of January 31, 1885 (23 Stat., 296) and the lands restored July 8, 1885. And the grant to the Texas Pacific was forfeited February 23, 1885, and the lands restored March 17, 1885.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, December 10, 1886.

[In the matter of Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. Restoration of forfeited land.]

SIR: Your letter of November 12, 1886, in relation to the restoration to the public domain and fixing the price of the forfeited lands heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, has been received, and the suggestions and recommendations therein made duly considered.

The act of July 6, 1886 (chap. 637, pamphlet copy, p. 123) provides that all the lands, with certain exceptions named, theretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, "which are adjacent to and coterminous with the uncompleted portions of the main line of said road * * * be, and the same are hereby, declared forfeited and restored to the public domain."

You state that "the portions of said road which remain uncompleted in any land-grant State or Territory are situated in the Territory of New Mexico—between Isleta and the eastern boundary of said Territory—and in the State of California, between the Colorado River and San Buenaventura on the Pacific."

You also state that in your "opinion said act not only forfeited the lands in question, but rendered them subject to settlement immediately upon its passage." In this view I concur. You call attention to the fact that the act of forfeiture fixes no price at which the restored lands are to be held, and you say, "The even-numbered sections have heretofore been rated at double minimum price of $2.50 per acre, but as the road has not been completed and the grant has been forfeited, the reason for such enhanced rating has ceased to exist." You thereupon recommend that, as to the forfeited lands in New Mexico, you be authorized to instruct the local officers of the different districts in which the same are situated "to give notice by publication for at least thirty days that said lands have been restored, and that the books of their respective offices are open for entry of the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre under the pre-emption and homestead laws and other laws relating to unoffered lands, and that the even-numbered sections are reduced in price to $1.25."

I approve of said recommendations, except in so far as they relate to the price to be fixed for said lands, whether in the odd or even section.

The act of July 27, 1866 (14 Stat., 292), making the grant of land to aid in the construction of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, contained no provision raising the price of the even-numbered or ungranted sections within the limits of said grant, but said sections were raised to the price of $2.50 by virtue of the act of March 3, 1853 (10 Stat., 244), now to be found in section 2357 of the Revised Statutes. The odd-numbered sections being granted to the railroad, of course there was no legislation affecting their price.

The price of the even-numbered sections being thus raised by act of Congress, must remain as fixed thereby, unless some like authority be shown requiring and empowering their reduction. This reduction or authority to reduce is not to be found in the forfeiting act of July 6, 1886, either by expression or implication, its provisions being shortly stated in one paragraph and simply declaring the forfeiture, and that said lands be "restored to the public domain," as before quoted. If that act, instead of forfeiting only the lands coterminous with the uncompleted portions of the Atlantic and Pacific road, had repealed the granting act entirely, it could have been contended, with plausibility at least, that all the lands along the line of said proposed road were thenceforth to be treated as though the grant had never been made, and therefore were to be disposed of at $1.25 per acre, the price at which they would have been disposed of if the grant had never been made. But that is not the present case.

The original act is yet in force, with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1853, appreciating the price of the even-numbered sections, attaching to them, whenever they became identified by the definite location of said road, as fully as though part of the granting act, the effect of the forfeiting act being only to restore to the United States the full title to the odd-numbered sections along certain portions of said line, but in no wise to affect the even-numbered sections. This being so, I can find nothing in the repealing act to authorize the reduction recommended.

The only other provision of law that I am aware of having any relation whatever to the matter, or which is claimed to have any bearing upon it, is section 2364 of the Revised Statutes, a revision of the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 374). This section provides that "whenever any reservation of public lands is brought into market the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall fix a minimum price, not less than $1.25 per acre, below which such lands shall not be disposed of."

The word "reservation," as here or elsewhere used in relation to the public lands, applies to such lands as, for any reason or purpose, have been excepted or reserved from settlement, entry, or other disposal, under the provisions of the general land laws. The even-numbered sections within railroad grants are not thus reserved, though spoken of in some granting acts as "reserved" to the United States from said grant; but, on the contrary, are universally held, and sometimes, as by the sixth section of the granting act in this case, expressly declared to be subject to settlement, &c., under the general laws, differing only from other public lands as to the price to be paid for them. The even-numbered sections in the present case never having been in "reservation," but always open to disposal to the public, I am clear the above section of the Revised Statutes is not applicable to them.

In the previous legislation of Congress, when it has forfeited grants to other roads, no fixed rule has been followed, or well could be, because of the varying circumstance connected with the forfeited grant or the restored lands. Of the statutes declaring such forfeiture examined by me I find that in most of them there has been no special provision in relation to the price at which either odd or even sections were thereafter to be sold, nothing being said on the subject. In other of the acts the restored lands were "to be disposed of hereafter as other public lands," or "disposed of under the general land laws." In the act of January 31, 1885 (23 Stat., 296), forfeiting the grant to the Oregon Central, the price of the lands was fixed at $1.25 per acre for both odd and even sections. By the act of February 28, 1885, forfeiting the grant to the Texas and Pacific, the price of the restored lands was fixed at $2.50 per acre. Nor has the practice of the Land Department been uniform in the cases examined—the only ones I am aware of.

In the case of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, forfeited by act of July 14, 1870 (16 Stat., 277), the price of the odd sections was fixed at $1.25, and no action was taken in relation to the even sections, the act providing only for the disposal as in the case of other public lands. In the forfeited grant of the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad, April 15, 1874 (18 Stat., 29), both odd and even sections were placed at $1.25 per acre, though no reduction of price was made by the forfeiting act, but only a direction to dispose of the lands as public land. In the case of the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad grant, forfeited June 15, 1874 (18 Stat., 72), the same action was taken, in the absence of authority conferred by the forfeiting act. In the case of the Saint Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad, lands forfeited by act of June 28, 1884 (23 Stat., 61), the odd sections were restored at $2.50 per acre, and no change made in the price in the even sections, in the absence of any provision other than that the lands were "to be disposed of under the general laws." And in the cases of the Oregon Central and the Texas and Pacific the special provisions of the forfeiting acts were followed.

Finding no legislative enactment nor uniform line of departmental rulings which might have weight as establishing a rule, I must decline to assent to the reduction of the price of the even-numbered sections below the sum of $2.50, at which they were fixed by act of Congress.

With regard to the odd-numbered or granted sections, the case is different. The price of these was in no way affected by the grant to the railroad company. They were reserved, by the act making that grant, from disposition under the general land laws, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the road. By the act of forfeiture they are now taken out of that "reservation" and restored to the public domain, and I think, under existing law, as now found in section 2364 of the Revised Statutes, before quoted, authority is given to fix the price of such lands, provided it be not less than $1.25 per acre.

Inasmuch as there is, in my opinion, no authority to reduce the price of the even-numbered sections below $2.50, it would obviously be very unwise to fix the price of the odd-numbered sections, side by side with the former, below the same price. You will, therefore, instruct the local officers in New Mexico that the even and odd-numbered sections within the forfeited limits will be disposed of at $2.50 per acre, in accordance with the views herein expressed.

With regard to the forfeited lands along the uncompleted portions of the line of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad in California, "between the Colorado River and San Buenaventura on the Pacific," you report, and one of the diagrams forwarded shows, that much of said lands are within the conflicting granted limits of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

In relation to this matter you say:

"Inasmuch as the grants to these companies were made by the same act, it follows, under the rule laid down by the Supreme Court, that the latter company is entitled to an undivided moiety of all lands in said conflicting limits. In allotting to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company its share of these lands every other alternate odd-numbered section (as sections 1, 5, 9, &c.) can be set apart for said company, and the remaining odd-numbered sections (as sections 3, 7, 11, &c.) restored."

You thereupon suggest "that the restoration of the lands in said conflicting limits be deferred until the proper officers of said company can be communicated with, and its formal consent to this or some other equitable division secured." You also recommend that as to the remaining lands within the conflicting limits of the withdrawal for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company you be authorized to call upon said company to show cause why such lands should not be restored, and "that pending such action the restoration of all lands within conflicting limits be deferred."

Understanding these recommendations to relate entirely to the odd-numbered sections within the conflicting limits of the two roads, as much as I regret the necessity for any delay in the premises, I believe the course proposed is wisest in view of the complications existing, and therefore approve said recommendations. But prompt action should be taken, so that the forfeited lands be opened to the public at the earliest possible day.

Herewith are returned the two diagrams transmitted with your letter of November 12, 1886.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Mr. CALL. I desire to ask the special and immediate consideration of the Committee on Commerce to this joint resolution. I will state that there is now a line of steamers from Tampa to Havana doing a large business with the West Indies, and it is proposed to extend steamship communication with other portions of Central and South America from Tampa. They are now awaiting information from the Government as to the practicability of dredging the bars. It is important in the interests of the commerce of the United States, and the sale of its manufactures in the West Indies and Central and South America, that the Gulf ports of Florida, which are so favorably situated to engage in this commerce, should be so deepened and improved as to be easy of entrance to the largest ships. Tampa has been selected by some enterprising Americans of large means and public spirit as a port from which to commence this commerce.

It is favorably situated for this. It has a delightful climate—a beautiful and safe harbor easily capable of being deepened so that the largest ships of the Gulf may enter there safely and easily. I earnestly ask the immediate and favorable consideration of this joint resolution.

I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANK SYSTEM.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to examine as to the expediency of some practical measure for the maintenance of the system of national banks, with ample security and without additional cost to the Government, and report by bill or otherwise.

REPORT ON ALASKA SEAL ISLANDS.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish the Senate with a copy of the report of Special Agent George R. Tingle upon the condition of affairs on the Seal Islands of Alaska, dated July 31, 1886.

WILLAMETTE RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas it is alleged that the Willamette River near the city of Corvallis is about to cut a new channel by which said city will be left at a considerable distance from the river, the navigation of the river destroyed or greatly impaired, and much damage done to adjacent lands:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an examination of said river at said point to be made and report to the Senate at the earliest practicable day what works, if any, are necessary to prevent such threatened change in the channel of the river, and an estimate, and the cost thereof.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution that I offered on Thursday last, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HOAR. Before that is done may I ask the Senator from Alabama to permit the Chair to lay before the Senate the bills which have been sent from the House of Representatives? I wish to move the printing of one of them merely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for a conference is in the nature of a privileged motion. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill returned from the House of Representatives with amendments, being the bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the bill be printed as amended by the other House in such fashion as to show the amendments separately, and that it lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the bill, known as the electoral-count bill, be printed as it stands, with the amendments of the House of Representatives, and that the bill lie upon the table. That order will be made if there be no objection.

ALABAMA COAL AND IRON LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] on the 9th instant, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to inform the Senate of the state of facts upon which the sales of coal and iron lands in Alabama have been withheld from sale, contrary to the requirements of the act of March 3, 1883; and that he communicate to the Senate any evidence on the files of said Department which discloses the existence of any conspiracy, or combination, to unlawfully affect a sale of lands under said act, if any such evidence exists.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Does not that commit the Senate to an affirmation that the withholding of the lands is a violation of the law? It seems to me the word "alleged" should be inserted in the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. The language is, "contrary to the requirements" of the statute. The statute expressly requires the lands to be sold, and they have not been sold.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me the Senate should not in any case in dealing with an excutive department, without investigation and without the report of a committee, affirm in the first instance that there has been a violation of the law. Though the Senator from Alabama may have investigated the matter, other Senators have not.

Mr. MORGAN. The requirement of the statute is simply that the lands shall be exposed to sale. Three years have elapsed now and the lands have not been exposed to sale; on the contrary, they have been twice advertised by the President, and he had the advertisements recalled, for what reason I am unable to state. The President has conceded, of course, that it is his duty under the law to sell the lands.

Mr. HOAR. My point is one of universal application; it does not apply to this case alone. I do not think the Senate should ever in any resolution, passed as a matter of course at the suggestion of a single member, put itself on record as charging a violation of law against the President or a Department. I think the Senator should insert the words "as alleged" or something of that kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts offer an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; I make that suggestion.

Mr. INGALLS. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts and also to the Senator from Alabama. It appears to me obvious that the Senate ought not to be committed to a declaration without debate that there has been any violation of the requirements of law. I therefore suggest to the Senator from Alabama, as an amendment that will cure this difficulty and at the same time enable him to obtain all the information, to strike out the words "contrary to the requirements of the act of March 3, 1883," so that the first clause of the resolution will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate of the state of facts upon which the coal and iron lands in Alabama have been withheld from sale.

That will involve the whole inquiry, and at the same time enable the Senate to escape the implication that there is some imputation upon the good faith or the integrity of the Department.

Mr. HOAR. I will withdraw my amendment and accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. MORGAN. Instead of accepting the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, I am willing to modify the resolution so as to make it read "have been withheld from sale as required by the act of March 3, 1883."

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator to put in the words "notwithstanding the act."

Mr. MORGAN. My object is not to censure the President or the Department at all in this matter.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the words "the sales of," where they occur in line 2, also be omitted in order to make the sense more apparent.

Mr. MORGAN. It is proper, perhaps, that I should make a little explanation about this matter—a very brief one.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Alabama will allow me to suggest that there was a special order set for to-day at 2 o'clock, of which my colleague [Mr. LOGAN] has charge. He informs me by a note that he is unable to be out to-day, and asks that I have it set for the day after to-morrow at 2 o'clock as the special order. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to have an order made now to that effect?

Mr. MORGAN. I see other Senators rising. I suppose that matter had better be postponed for a moment or two.

Mr. CULLOM. There will be no discussion about it, I suppose.

Mr. MORGAN. I see that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] rises, I suppose for the purpose of controverting the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PLATT. I do not understand that the bill referred to by the Senator from Illinois is the first special order. I simply want to say that.

Mr. CULLOM. It is not the first special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama has the floor, and declines to yield.

Mr. MORGAN. I introduced a bill in the Senate, and a bill of like character was introduced in the House by Mr. FORNEY, of Alabama, to remove the distinction between agricultural and coal lands in that State, and to allow them to be disposed of under the operation of the general laws of the United States. That bill was sent to the Secretary of the Interior, and he suggested and insisted upon an amendment, which was that the coal lands should be first offered for sale, and after the sale had taken place if any lands remained that were not disposed of, then they should come under the operation of the homestead laws, the pre-emption laws, or laws of private entry, whatever laws prevail in that State.

Both Houses considered the communication sent to us by the Secretary of the Interior, adopted his views, and put that provision into the statute. That was in March, 1883. The law was approved by the President. The President of the United States ordered the sale of the lands in pursuance of that act. Some persons intervened and tried to prevent the sale, and succeeded in doing so.

Quite a considerable period of time elapsed and the President again ordered the sale of the lands, and persons intervened and again prevented the sale upon allegation, as I am informed, that there were conspiracies formed among certain syndicates in Alabama to buy these lands in some fraudulent way from the Government—combinations against the sale.

I never believed that such combinations existed; but however that may have been the laws of the United States are particularly careful to provide against all combinations to affect the sales of public lands, punishing the persons who are concerned in such combinations very severely by imprisonment and fine, and also putting it in the power of the Interior Department to withhold the issue of patents as long as there may be any person to make a reasonable suggestion against the validity of such a sale.

I have never thought that there was any real, substantial ground for interposing to prevent the execution of the act of Congress, but I have waited to see what might be put upon the records in respect to this matter. My own belief is that a syndicate has been formed in Alabama for the purpose of putting bonds, as I may call them, upon these public lands, as persons who have offered filings for homestead entries, and that an effort is being made to have this sale feature of the statute repealed in order that these may be the first claimants of these very valuable coal and iron lands. So I have thought that wise policy required that the Government should go on and execute the law of Congress.

The fact that two such events should have occurred in respect of these lands and no communication made to Congress on the subject, no information given as to why these sales were suspended, has required of me, as I thought, as a Senator from that State, to inquire why it is that these lands have not been sold under the express requirements of the act of Congress.

Of course I am not intending to reflect upon the Department or upon the administration, either the present or the past one, in this matter. I merely desire to get information, and I very cheerfully adopt any change in the verbiage of the resolution which may relieve it from any imputation. I think it would be better to change the language so as to read as follows:

Withheld from sale according to the requirements of the act of March 3, 1883.

Mr. HAWLEY. I renew the suggestion made by some other Senator, to make the resolution read, "notwithstanding the requirements of the act of March 3, 1883." That will answer the Senator's purpose.

Mr. MORGAN. I will accept that language, "notwithstanding the requirements of the act of March 3, 1883." I will modify my resolution to that extent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as modified by the Senator from Alabama will now be read. The attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] is called to it.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to inform the Senate of the state of facts upon which the sales of the coal and iron lands in Alabama have been withheld from sale, notwithstanding the requirements of the act of March 3, 1883; and that he communicate to the Senate any evidence on the files of said Department which discloses the existence of any conspiracy or combination to unlawfully affect a sale of lands under said act, if any such evidence exists.

Mr. INGALLS. The words "the sales of" before the words "the coal and iron lands" should be stricken out.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, those words will come out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will also be made. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6330) to confirm to Emile Guerin and Cheri P. Major title to certain lands; and

A bill (H. R. 6046) for the relief of H. C. Wilkey.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHAW, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. MCKENNA, the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

EEL RIVER BAND OF MIAMI INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 8th instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $22,000, prepared in the office of Indian affairs, to provide for the payment to the Eel River band of Miami Indians of a principal sum in lieu of all annuities now received by them under existing treaty stipulations.

The matter is presented for the consideration of Congress.

TARIFF REVISION.

Mr. DAWES. I ask for the present consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be stated first. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. MORRILL, December 7, as follows:

Resolved, That the promise of making any revision of the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests, not to injure any domestic industries, but to promote their healthy growth, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital involved, and without depriving American labor of ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country, appears so obviously hopeless and impracticable that any further attempts at revision by the present Congress, in contravention to the foregoing cardinal declarations, are to be regarded as inexpedient and detrimental to the revival of the trade and industry of the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate now proceed to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. BECK. Before that is done I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry more than anything else. Just before the close of the last session of Congress, a bill, which had passed the Senate, and was afterwards reconsidered and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, was reported back with amendments and was made the special order for this morning, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. I do not desire to have that special order displaced, and I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. All I want is that this order shall hold its place in some way, if the Senator from Massachusetts desires to go on now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special orders will take their turn in time at 2 o'clock in the order in which they were made.

Mr. BECK. I was not aware of the time, and therefore I wished to raise the point now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business takes precedence of the special orders. There being no unfinished business for to-day, this is a motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Vermont. The special order will come up at 2 o'clock. The question is on agreeing to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is now before the Senate, and the Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I did not seek the floor at the close of the discussion last week upon this resolution with any desire to crowd myself into a debate which more properly belongs to the members of the Committee on Finance, and which has been already carried on with signal spirit and ability; but I had myself introduced a resolution on the second day of the session which seemed to me so completely to cover the whole matter under discussion that it would be impossible to debate the one without debating the other, and therefore I deemed it not improper for me to submit in this discussion the reasons which had led me to offer the resolution that I presented.

It often happens, Mr. President, that the ablest debaters find it convenient to cover up and put out of sight the real point in issue by drawing off the discussion, if possible, to some matters about which there is no dispute; and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] will pardon me for saying that I think even he never showed more skill or discretion than in the effort he made in the debate a few days since to keep out of sight by a multiplicity of words upon other things what was and what is the real difference between him and those for whom he speaks and those who were speaking in that discussion.

There are some things which are facts, and it is quite unnecessary and useless to multiply words in the discussion of them. It is certain that all of the interest-bearing public debt within our reach will be paid before the next session of Congress will be half passed. The Senator from Kentucky stated accurately the condition of the public debt. It is just as certain, if the receipts and expenditures shall continue in their volume in the future the same as they are now, that after that extinction of the public debt there will be accumulating in the Treasury beyond the ordinary and proper expenditures of the Government somewhere about the sum he stated, of $100,000,000 per annum. And it is equally certain that no man has openly asserted, and, so far as I know, no one entertains the idea, that the continuation of such a condition of things is desirable. I have not heard that any Senator, and I have yet to learn that any one whose assignment here or whose studies lead him to consider the proper condition of the finances of this country, has ever advocated a continuance of that condition of things.

Long ago the party that had control of the financial condition and of the receipts and expenditures of this Government took the position that it was the duty of the Government to reduce from time to time the customs duties and internal taxes to the point that would come nearest to the economical and proper expenditures of the Government, and to maintain them there. As long ago as the last general revision of the tariff laws before that of 1883 was under consideration, in the tariff revision of 1872, the then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in closing the debate upon that general tariff bill, stated the principles and the purpose of that bill in these words:

Now, sir, let the ultimate adjustment of these necessary duties be equalization. Let no more duties be imposed than the exigencies of the Government demand, but let those duties be so adjusted between manufactured articles and raw material as to equalize the conditions of production in our own country with those of foreign nations, and the highest possible good, the true end of legislation, is attained. Thus will the necessities of the Government be met and no more, and at the same time the material prosperity of the nation assured.

So far as I know, Mr. President, those were the sentiments entertained by all for whom he then spoke. The bill itself was framed upon that principle, was carried through for that end, and from that day to this those who then spoke have maintained that position in reference to the receipts and expenditures of this Government, that they should at all times be brought as nearly as possible in the condition of public affairs side by side, and that whenever the receipts should exceed the expenditures, efforts should be made by the reduction of customs duties and internal taxes to bring them nearer, if possible, together. If called upon to state the position of the Republican party to-day upon the same question, I must use the same words. The position then taken and the bill which then became a law had the support and the vote of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. If any one has changed position upon this point or upon this policy, it is not those for whom the then chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means then spoke in announcing the policy of the party then responsible for the finances and the expenditures of this Government.

Another point raised by the Senator from Kentucky and in more recent discussions may as well be disposed of here and in this connection. We hear much about taxing raw materials and the cry is raised as something new in certain quarters that the great cure, the panacea for all our trouble, is to make raw materials free. Sir, the bill which became a law in 1872, if any one will open the statute-book and look at it, is full of instruction and is a full and complete answer to the question and to the discussion now and so recently raised by those who for some reason or other are disposed to depart from the policy established early, and announced, and enacted into that law of 1872. That statute contains more than one hundred and eighty different articles put upon the free-list, almost all articles of raw material which entered into the consumption and production of this country. I invoke the inspection of that bill by those who cry out that the present need is to remove war taxes upon raw material. It was done in that bill, and to that policy the Republican party has ever held. Whatever good can come from the putting of raw material (not competing with our own production) upon the free-list was secured by that act.

It was the purpose of that bill to find out every possible article from which the duty could be taken for the purpose of bringing down the receipts to the line of expenditures, and no article of raw material that did not enter into competition with raw material here at home escaped, so far as the knowledge of the committee that framed that bill was concerned, being put upon the free-list. There never was one that had encountered in committee or in the House of Representatives the slightest objection to its going on the free-list.

If it is meant by taking off the tax, as it is called, the duty on raw material, that raw material from abroad, placed at the door of the manufacturer here in this country, shall encounter there the raw material produced in this country, and shall take the place of that and take from the resources of this country and supplant them by the resources of foreign nations, and the labor of this country by the labor of foreign nations—if that is what is meant to-day by the cry that the duty must be taken from raw material, the principles which governed those who made that law, and who maintain it to-day, require that they and that this country should, as between these two articles of raw material, give the preference to the American—give the preference to our own and to the labor spent upon our own. It is but another form of stating the difference between those who believe in the protection of American production and American labor and those who believe that as between American production and American labor on the one side and foreign production and foreign labor on the other there is absolute indifference. And let me say to-day to those calling for free raw material, if there can be found any article of raw material which, after fair effort and reasonable outlay, can not be produced here at home, but which must be brought from abroad to enter into the productions of this country, I have yet to see the man on either side of this Chamber, or elsewhere, who will not vote to place it on the free-list.

When the tariff bill of 1872 became a law, as I have said, every article then known of that kind entered upon the free-list. That there are new articles of that kind not yet upon the free-list, I do not doubt. Every day new elements that enter into consumption and into production in this country are coming to light. That which yesterday was worthless and cast aside becomes to-day by the application of new methods and by the discovery of new elements and new applications of old ones raw material capable of entering into valuable manufactured products and thus contributing to wealth and to the opportunity for labor and the compensation which is the reward of labor. So, I doubt not, there are now, not known then or if known then nobody having interest in them to ask that they be put upon the free-list, articles of raw materials of that kind; but let us not debate the question whether it be proper or not to put them on the free-list until some one stands up here or anywhere responsible for what he says and objects. But if they are of the character that enters into competition with the production of the labor of this country, they stand in the class of those articles which seek to displace our labor and products with those of foreign nations and can be advocated only on the ground that our market deserves at our hands no higher consideration than the markets of foreign nations.

Subsequent events have demonstrated the wisdom of the policy thus reaffirmed in the tariff bill of 1872, first inaugurated in the previous tariff bills which met the great exigencies of the times which called them into existence.

If the revision of 1883 failed in any degree to come up to the conditions there announced and hitherto maintained, it was because it encountered the opposition of those who no longer supported the principles and maintained the enactments under which thus far we had gone. Just so far as that opposition would permit, the purpose and object of the revision of 1883 was the same as that of 1872.

I said that the result, the influence upon the country, upon its wealth, upon its development, upon its industries, manifold in variety and in number, and upon those who earned their livelihood through them, wholly justified the wisdom of the policy that had been the basis and purpose of those laws. Under that policy in a single decade there was added to the wealth of this nation thirteen thousand millions of dollars. The value of the manufactures which sprung up under the beneficent influence of that policy which regards our market with more interest than it does the markets of foreign nations, and considers our products and those engaged in production here more entitled to consideration than those engaged in like pursuits in foreign lands—the value of these manufactures increased from 1860 to 1870 from eighteen hundred million dollars to thirty-eight hundred million dollars, and from 1870 to 1880 from thirty-eight hundred million dollars to fifty-three hundred million dollars, giving employment to two millions of workmen, wage-earners, who supplied by their daily toil their own tables and their own homes with comfort, and made for themselves places of influence and power under a Government that is open alike to all. This number was increased in the last decade to two millions seven hundred and thirty-two thousand five hundred and twenty-five, an army of wage-earners in this country, to whom was paid yearly nine hundred and forty-seven millions of dollars, an increase in wages in the last decade of 52 per cent., and an increase in the number of those finding employment at this increased compensation of 33 per cent. And thus was laid also the foundation for wealth and enterprise in other pursuits out of which 125,000 miles of railroad have been built, and thus has been built up, also, the credit of the nation, which when the first of these tariff bills was enacted was for our 6 per cent. bonds, at a discount of 11 per cent. To-day our 4 per cent. bonds are selling for 27 per cent. premium.

But in the ordinary course of events the increase of importations and curtailment of expenditures render another revision of the tariff in the near future necessary. But others in the mean time have come into the control of the Government. That control has passed out of the hands for the time being of those whose policy has worked these fruits and these beneficent results; and as the day came to be more clear by the payment of the public debt and the increase of receipts and diminution of expenditures, so came to be more clear and near the fact that this revision must soon take place. Those who have come into power have accordingly undertaken the work; but in so doing they have departed from the principles of the tariff bill of 1872, which received the support of their leaders; and this departure excites alarm and apprehension in the vast industries of this country, and the great numbers of wage-earners depend upon those industries for the opportunities of life.

The very first effort at revision of this tariff in these new hands has been in the face of the principles announced when the tariff of 1872 was enacted, and in which, I am happy to acknowledge, those who had it in charge had the earnest and sincere support of the Senator from Kentucky. If they could be now assured that there was to be no departure on his part, leader and controller of the public sentiment of his party in this particular as he is, if the industries of this country, vast in amount as they are, and the army of wage-earners dependent upon their continuance and prosperity could be assured of the continued support of the Senator from Kentucky, they would be greatly relieved and much of the cause for alarm would disappear. They would then renew with confidence their efforts to develop the wealth and greatness of their country by bringing out of the bowels of the earth and gathering together the supplies of every industry out of which the ingenuity of man can bring value and profit, and at the same time furnish in every avenue, in every workshop, in every mill, and in every private home of the operative the well-earned wages and competence that abundance of labor will always secure in this country.

But, sir, instead of doing as was then done, and in their revision to bring about ostensibly the same end, to wit, the reduction of duties and internal taxes to the line of necessary and proper expenditure; instead of seeking out raw material that does not enter into competition with home production; instead of seeking out those articles paying customs duties that do not enter into competition with home manufactures, the effect of the bills introduced in the House of Representatives for the revision of the tariff has been to strike at those very industries in this country more largely interested and more deeply affected by competition with foreign production than any others.

The great lumber interest of this country, with all the capital invested in it and all the laborers employed by it; the whole fishing interest of the country; all the fishermen employed on our coasts, all the capital invested in it, all the benefits to be derived from it; wool and woolens, cotton productions—one and all—are struck at. The first provision for a revision of the tariff that came from those fresh in power, upon whom is devolved this necessity, is to strike them down and put into our market in place of our productions upon which our labor has been performed, and for which our laborers are receiving their compensation, instead of these, the productions of foreign producers, upon which foreigners have expended their labor and taken their compensation, taking away thereby from the home labor of this country all that is connected with the lumber interest, with the fishing interest, with the wool interest, with the cotton interest; just so far as there can be brought by superior inducements of profit from foreign countries that labor to take their place.

It is true that these great industries and this large body of men looking to them for their support have until lately been lulled into security by the belief that there were dissentients enough in the party representing this idea of free foreign competition to prevent its infliction upon the country; but the course of events has been tending more and more to dispel that illusion. One after another of those in that party who have had courage enough to stand up and express their preferences for their own country and its productions and its labor has dropped out. It has been sounded abroad as the law to govern them in the future that they must be loyal to this idea of indifference to American production and American labor, and stand by the attempt to revise the tariff on the principle that instead of seeking to reduce revenue by taking off duties upon non-competitive articles and reducing internal taxes upon articles that do enter into home consumption and home production, they shall stand by the propositions of the Morrison bill to lay low great and important interests as an entering-wedge to a more perfect and complete consummation of the idea that between this nation and its productions and its wealth and its labor, on the one hand, and those of other nations on the other hand, there is, and ought to be, in the shibboleth of that party, no distinction.

But, sir, the Secretary of the Treasury has come into the field and taken an advanced position in this contest against home-protection and labor, causing increased apprehension and alarm in all the broad industries that fill this land and those dependent upon them—alarm and bewilderment, for it is impossible for one to understand by what principles and upon what theories so novel and so conflicting and so incompatible propositions can be maintained as are announced in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury; sober, conservative business men; thoughtful, anxious, and clear-headed men, dependent upon those industries, inquire seriously upon what they may not be wrecked if such doctrines and such principles and such theories as are announced in this report are to govern in the revision of the tariff which is near us. First he throws overboard entirely and in so many words all idea of protection to American industry. Henceforth, according to his theories and his dogmas, there is to enter into the policy which is to control in imposing the duties of the future no idea of protection to American industry. Let me read what he says:

> The true ground of choice among articles suitable for taxation is not the circumstance that they are produced at home or imported from abroad.

Leaving out the reasoning, I complete his statement:

> The true ground of choice is that among all articles thus consumed within our own borders some are better suited for an equitable taxation than others. They are universally consumed, like sugar, or easily identified, like coffee, or their consumption may be safely impeded, like distilled spirits or fermented liquors or tobacco, or they are luxuries, like wines, silks, and diamonds.

These are the considerations, not what may be the effect upon home production, not whether it shall be advantageous or injurious to the vast interests, more than five thousand millions of dollars in 1880 invested in productions of this country, or the two million seven hundred thousand wage-earners dependent upon them. That has nothing to do with the tariff reform that is to govern this administration. It does not enter into the consideration of the imposition of a duty hereafter in the mind of the Secretary of the Treasury.

> The true ground of choice among articles suitable for taxation is not the circumstance that they are produced at home.

He even looks forward to the time when, after the removal of what he calls the war taxes on raw material, we shall live in the elysium of supplying all our expenditures from the taxes on "whisky, tobacco, and beer," though perhaps we may be driven back to get "ten millions of revenue from 2 cents a pound on coffee and half as much from tea."

He looks forward to the time when our manufacturers, driven out of our home market by a cheaper production from abroad, shall find their compensation in selling at a greater profit in a foreign market, exchanging our own for the uncertain and distant and fluctuating markets of foreign nations. This is the picture presented to those great industries of this country that have so developed and made this country great and strong under the influence of the tariff revisions from time to time; that have maintained until now, for ourselves, our own markets and our own labor with a consistency and persistency worthy of the grand results that have attended it.

Going on with these theories, the Secretary repeats the old cry, that the duties upon protected articles cause a monopoly to a favored few. And then he answers his own statement by declaring that they set on foot "a ferocious competition at cut-throat prices" at home. A monopoly in favor of a favored few, a tax added, says he, to the price paid by the consumer; and yet in the next breath he says that they directly set on foot "a ferocious competition at cut-throat prices" at home, bringing "long periods of glut and so-called overproduction," * * * "entailing overproduction for the home market, reckless competition, with no established outlet in working off the surplus product."

It passes my ability to reconcile all this. If our protection be a monopoly of a favored few, it can not produce overproduction and glut of the market. If it be an addition of the duty to the cost to the consumer, it can not be that it produces the result that the consumer can be compelled to buy otherwise than at the lowest price in a glutted market, and under a ferocious competition at cut-throat prices. The consumer can find no market so favorable to him at which he can purchase that which he consumes at so low a price as the very market which the Secretary of the Treasury says is the direct effect of these protective duties, and no man will pay the addition of the duty to the cost of the material when he can buy in such a market. All this and all these results, the Secretary of the Treasury pronounces "brutal policy." This is cold comfort for that policy which has been crowned with such grand results, which has built up and spread throughout this country these vast manufacturing establishments, has put into the hands of more than 2,700,000 wage-earners in this country the means of livelihood, of fair compensation for every day's work, which has enabled them to place in the savings banks of this country, at this very moment, of wage-earnings, more than $500,000,000, laid up by the wage-earners themselves against a day of need if it shall ever come.

It is a sorry failure to comprehend this policy and these great interests which gives utterance to the opprobrious epithet that it is a "brutal policy," and that it is a policy toward which those who represent power to-day in this country are to turn with hostile hand and deadly opposition.

While the producer and the consumer and the world generally have hitherto believed that the higher the price paid for the labor bestowed on any given article the greater the cost of the article, it has been reserved for this Secretary to dispel this delusion and announce a new law of production—that the very reverse of this is true, and that in fact the higher the price paid for the labor on any given article the cheaper will be that article. "High wages to labor and cheaper product are correlative terms. Low wages to labor and a costlier product are correlative terms." From these theories the Secretary turns to the concrete, and proposes a specific remedy. It is the removal of "war taxes on raw material." He specifies one only—the duty on wool.

We are told in his report that it is not worth while to reduce the receipts by removing $51,000,000 of duties from sugar, because that is only 90 cents to each individual, and he turns from that to the removal of $5,000,000 of duties upon raw wool, which is only 8 cents to each individual, and to the removal of the duty upon ready-made clothing, that would relieve the people of only 2 cents per capita. If it be any reason why we should retain the duty on sugar that it is only 90 cents per capita, is it any reason that we should remove the duty on raw wool that it is only 8 cents per capita, or upon ready-made clothing, which is only 2 cents per capita? The grand climax is reached in the single sentence, printed in capitals:

"UNTAX THE CLOTHING OF SIXTY MILLIONS OF PEOPLE."

And the people are to be relieved just 2 cents each in the clothes they wear while they are still to pay 90 cents each for the sugar on their table, and, if the scheme works well, in addition, "2 cents a pound tax on coffee and half as much from tea."

But look at this proposition to remove the duty upon raw wool and untax in large measure the clothing of sixty million of people by removing the duty upon ready-made clothing and thereby reducing the revenue the paltry amount of $13,000,000. Four-fifths of the woolen manufactures of this country are manufactures for the clothing of the sixty millions of people; and to remove the duty on ready-made clothing is to provide that the cloth for all the clothing made for this country shall first be manufactured abroad and made into garments there and then admitted free of duty. Such are the facilities of intercourse at this time that it is just as easy for the man who wears the finest broadcloth coat to order it made in London as to order it made in New York, and every article, under this proposition, of woolen manufacture, four-fifths of all being made for clothing, will be first made abroad, manufactured into clothing abroad, and then introduced here free. The proposition itself, the day it becomes the law of this land, extinguishes the entire woolen manufacturing interest of this country; and what is that?

His report does not seem to comprehend the magnitude of the interests it is dealing with, from the wanton and careless and thoughtless manner in which it deals with interests the like of which till lately the revenues of the Government itself did not equal. That interest, which could not live an hour if wool were introduced free and all the cloth manufactured for consumption in this country were, in the manner I have indicated, free, has a capital of $158,000,000, employing every year one hundred and sixty-eight thousand hands, paying them at the end of each week of the year what they have earned, amounting at the end of fifty-two weeks to $47,180,618, and producing every year a product of $267,699,504. Great comfort it will be to these great interests and this body of men dependent upon them, while the Secretary's hand is raised in this deadly attitude to strike them down—great comfort it will be to them to hear from the President these softening and quieting words:

In readjusting the burdens of Federal taxation, a sound public policy requires that such of our citizens as have built up large and important industries under present conditions, should not be suddenly and to their injury deprived of advantages to which they have adapted their business.

Comfort, indeed, will it be to the one hundred and sixty-eight thousand men thrown out of the opportunity of their daily labor and daily earnings to gather round their table at night and read these words:

Due regard should be also accorded in any proposed readjustment to the interests of American labor so far as they are involved.

And I have no doubt both classes will take to themselves this exhortation to resignation:

A reasonable and timely submission to such a demand should certainly be possible without disastrous shock to any interest.

I fear, however, that its effect will be much like that of the kind Texas judge upon the doomed man before him for sentence, when he ordered him "to be hung as early the next morning as would be convenient to the sheriff and agreeable to him."

What value can such words be to them, taken from him who has expressly in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury commended his policy and his method of dealing with the customs duties of this country? They will take note of what is done and lay up for what it is worth what is said.

But, Mr. President, this idea of taking the war tax, as it is called, off from the raw material of wool for the relief of the manufacturers in this country does not meet the approval of the manufacturers themselves. The woolen manufacturer sees clearly that his is not an isolated industry, that industries depend for their permanent development and growth and prosperity one upon another. When in the other branch, two years ago, the idea of striking at the wool and woolen interest was incorporated into a bill for the consideration of Congress, and the woolen manufacturers were summoned before the committee to make report, and to give support to this idea of raw material for them, one of the clearest headed of them, Mr. William Whitman, now at the head of the Woolen Manufacturers' Association of New England, one who sees all its bearings in all the phases in which it may come up, when brought before the committee was asked these questions:

Mr. McKINLEY. How would it affect wool?
Mr. WHITMAN. I think it would drive the wool-producing interest of the country out of existence.
Mr. McKINLEY. As a manufacturer, do you want that?
Mr. WHITMAN. As a manufacturer I am in favor of a duty on wool, so that we will not be dependent upon foreign countries for our raw material.
Mr. HEWITT. Does the duty on wool increase the price of your raw material?
Mr. WHITMAN. Yes.
Mr. HEWITT. Then you want in your business a dearer raw material?
Mr. WHITMAN. No.
Mr. HEWITT. You say that the duty on wool does add to the cost of wool?
Mr. WHITMAN. Yes.
Mr. HEWITT. And raw wool is your raw material?
Mr. WHITMAN. Yes.
Mr. HEWITT. Therefore you want your raw material to cost you a higher price?
Mr. WHITMAN. No; I want cheaper raw material, and I propose to get it by raising such an abundance of wool in this country that it will keep down the price of foreign wool.
Mr. HEWITT. Has that been the effect of the duty on wool?
Mr. WHITMAN. That has been the effect.
Mr. HEWITT. Do you get wool cheaper now than you used to get it?
Mr. WHITMAN. Decidedly. Wool is cheaper now than it has been in my experience.
Mr. McKINLEY. Is not the cost of wool coming down since 1867?
Mr. WHITMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. HEWITT. If the duty were taken off, would wool be cheaper, or dearer?
Mr. WHITMAN. It would be dearer. We speak first of the immediate effect and then of the future effect. I suppose that if the duty were taken off wool absolutely to-day the first effect of that would be lowering the price of the wool of this country to the level of the price of wool in other countries. That would be the first effect. The discouraging effect of it would be to destroy the sheep-raising industry in this country, and then the price of wool abroad would rise.

That is the voice of the woolen manufacturing interest for the support of which the Morrison bill made the bid of free raw wool.

But the most surprising—I will not say absurd—but the most astonishing feature of this report is that in which the Secretary of the Treasury undertakes to classify industries in this country into such as are not affected by competition, and those that are affected by competition, and those that are partially affected by competition. In order to obtain that classification he does not go to the business itself, he does not go to the marts of trade, he does not go to the man at the helm to inquire what influences are at work to deflect the course of the ship, he does not go to the manufacturer of wool, of cotton, of iron, or of any of the many industries in this country to inquire of him or anybody about him or anybody connected with the business what competition may affect him. He goes to the very respectable gentleman who furnishes assorted statistics to the State Department, and to two mathematicians, one up in the Treasury Department and the other in the employ of the Government here, men learned in their profession, high-minded and honorable men, and men who could tell you the exact position to a quarter of an inch of any planet in the solar system a thousand years hence, or tell you the force and effect of the last quiver of any earthquake that in any reasonable calculation of the next one hundred years this earth might experience, but whose practical knowledge of that which affects labor and the industries of this land hardly exceeds their experience with the servant that attends upon their door or serves their table. From them he obtains the classification of the industries of this land into those not affected by competition, those affected by competition, and those partially affected by competition. No man would have ever asked for such a table as that who had acquired any portion of his education in the committee-room of Ways and Means, or that of Finance in this end of the Capitol. No man who reflects can fail to see that there is no industry in this country so isolated and independent of all other considerations that it matters not with it whether other industries prosper or wane. All of these industries are one grand brotherhood, and that which affects one more or less must affect others. "The eye can not say to the ear, I have no need of thee; nor the head to the feet, I have no need of thee." They are one grand network spread all over this country, and you can not loosen one strand of it without dislocating others and affecting the grand whole. You might as well put to these mathematicians with their logarithmic tables the problem of how many of the particles of the great deep shall have been disturbed and affected, how many rest undisturbed, and how many are "partially affected" by the casting of an anchor in mid-ocean.

It is upon such theories, impossible in themselves, that the Secretary of the Treasury holds out to the great business interests and those dependent upon them the prospect that in such hands and by such wild and wanton methods and theories are these great interests to be controlled and manipulated in the future. But, sir, with all the effort of the Secretary to aid in the reduction of this anticipated $100,000,000, he has been unable to find any other war tax except that on raw wool that he can consent to have taken off, and he succeeds in that way in reducing the surplus, with the help of ready-made clothing, $13,000,000; and what does he propose to do with the rest? The proposition with which he deals with the three hundred and more millions of dollars after this application of his own skill as a tariff reformer is novel, and I venture to say was never heard of before the publication of this report.

Let me read it that he may have the full benefit of it in his own words:

I therefore respectfully recommend: * * * *
Gradual purchase and payment of $346,681,016 outstanding promissory notes of the United States with the present and accruing Treasury surplus, issuing silver certificates in their room, and gold certificates if need be, without contraction of the present circulating volume of the currency.

There was a time when those for whom the Senator from Kentucky spoke on Thursday had an affection for these greenbacks "passing the love of woman." When they were at a discount the war for their protection and for their circulation was waged incessantly, and year after year measures were devised in bills introduced into this Chamber and elsewhere to give them a wide circulation as the fittest and most desirable currency for the people. It is only when they came up to par, when they were worth dollar for dollar with gold in this country and the world over, and there came to be another currency that was below par, that the affection for the greenback was transferred to the silver dollar. The same zeal that characterized the attachment and love for the greenback when it was at a discount manifests itself to-day in the attempt to compel the people of this country to take another currency, of every dollar of which the intrinsic value is but 73 cents, and which is held up only by force, by the strong power of enactment, as a sinking substance in the water is held up by some power above. It is "passing strange" to me that this love of silver is so precisely like that love of the greenback when it was below par, and this indifference to the greenback bears date and is commensurate with the time that it has become, dollar for dollar, equal to gold in every part of the country and of the world.

The people are told that poor money is cheap money, and therefore when the greenback ceased to be poor money and became par with gold it ceased to bear that quality by which it is commended to the people, and if you cannot get poor money get it as nearly poor money as you can.

As a substitute for the greenbacks, and with them the national banking currency, without contraction of the volume, the Secretary says issue six hundred millions of silver certificates, worth nowhere else but within the force and effect of a statute that holds them above water more than 73 cents upon the dollar. This is the remedy, the last remedy, recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury in his prescription for dealing with this superabundance of receipts over expenditures.

I, for one, can not comprehend the zeal that searches through all the industries and productions of this country for those only from which to take off the duties or internal taxes which, when brought here from abroad, take so much away from the labor and the productions of our own country. What there is about it so fascinating, after having themselves overthrown every argument that pertains to economy in consumption or economy in production, leaving themselves naked and bare of every other consideration except that which holds them to an utter indifference as between their own country and its growth and development and that of foreign countries, I can not see. It is these considerations, as I have said, that have awakened serious and well-grounded apprehension throughout the country in the varied and vast industries, and the many thousand wage-earners dependent on them for their livelihood, and support, and competence, and hope.

It is this attitude of those who have this tariff to reform that leads to this serious apprehension, and they turn to this body, in which alone are those who have hitherto been able to maintain a policy so fruitful of grand and of rich-rewarding results to all classes, high and low, for the alternative. They look to those who speak for this body, as they have spoken for the policy of the Government in the last twenty-five years, to know what the alternative is. They know that under the Constitution the Finance Committee of this body can originate no law that shall remodel or reform the tariff, but they know, too, that it is within the province and the ability of the Finance Committee to consider this question and formulate in a report that shall carry quiet and confidence to the home industries and home labor of this country a method to bring the receipts of this Government down to the line of its expenditures, without impairing the development or prosperity of those industries or diminishing the compensation of that labor. It was for that purpose that I introduced the resolution to which I have alluded. It is in these words:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire, and report as soon as practicable, what specific reduction can be made in customs duties and internal taxes which will, in their judgment, reduce the receipts to the necessary and economical expenditures of the Government, without impairing the prosperity and development of home industries or the compensation of home labor.

The operative words in this resolution are "specific reduction," and the limitation upon those words is, "without impairing the prosperity and development of home industries or the compensation of home labor." Generalizations like those contained in the President's message, wild, wanton, and reckless assaults upon these industries, are not what the public demand and crave at this moment. It is specific reductions, if possible, and it is specific reductions under the imperative limitation that they shall not impair the prosperity and development of home industry, nor shall they diminish the compensation of home labor.

The inquiry submitted in this resolution to this able Finance Committee is whether it be possible to so reduce customs duties and internal taxes as to bring them within the line of reasonable and economical expenditure without impairing the prosperity of these great industries or diminishing the compensation of the labor dependent upon them. I say the limitation is imperative, for there are other evils greater than an accumulation in the Treasury. He who weakens or impairs or diminishes the efficiency, clouds the prospects, and weakens the hopes of the industries of this land or the compensation of its labor, strikes a deadlier blow at the welfare of this country than can be dealt in any other manner short of war. It is treason towards the great underlying interest and prosperity of this country upon which is built its future, and by which alone its stability can be maintained; and he who impairs and weakens these comes very near to sapping and mining the citadel itself.

Therefore, sir, the question is submitted in this resolution, and I believe that these great interests await with confidence the answer that it is possible to so reform this tariff as to bring it within the line which was the doctrine and the basis of the tariff of 1872, reformulated in the resolution I have offered. Therefore, I have thought that it was not out of place in this body, although prohibited by the Constitution from originating legislation upon this subject, yet for its Finance Committee to deliberate upon the situation, to determine upon principles to which they have adhered from the beginning of this policy, and to present to the public the possibility of the reform of the tariff that shall leave these results unimpaired, shall give a freer and broader scope to the energies and enterprise and vigor of this American people.

It is not for me to forestall or foreshadow their report, but, speaking for myself alone, I can see all this accomplished by abolishing the duty on sugar, $51,000,000; the tax on tobacco, $26,000,000; and the tax on alcohol which enters into the mechanic arts; correcting the phraseology of the worsted tariff and that on tin plates, and then putting on the free-list every remaining raw material which can not be by fair outlay and reasonable expenditure produced here at home.

Those who met the exigencies of the past are capable of grasping the problems of the future, and in the great struggle which is upon them for possession of the opportunities open to them in their country, and under their own flag, our home industries and our home labor must turn to those who lifted labor from degradation and servitude to dignity and honor and power, and whose policy has built up the strength and wealth and greatness of the nation.

I shall, therefore, to this end, after the disposition of the resolution now before the Senate, ask the adoption of the resolution I offered on a previous occasion.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to make any extended remarks upon this resolution. In fact I had not expected until this moment to say a word. I am of the opinion that this is not the proper time or occasion to discuss the tariff question, there being nothing before the Senate except a resolution containing the expression of the individual opinion of one of its members.

But, sir, I can not let the opportunity pass without calling attention to the fact that while the distinguished Senator who offered the resolution and also the distinguished Senator who spoke to-day upon this subject stated a fact, the fact being, that whatever might have been the opinion of Senators in the past touching the policy of tariffs, whether they should be high or low, a necessity exists to-day for reducing the revenue; yet I have heard no plan proposed by either the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Massachusetts to relieve the Treasury of the expected surplus which the present rates of taxation (and which they are in favor of continuing) will bring to the Treasury.

It is well known that by the 1st day of July next the 3 per cent. bonds will be paid. There is no visible object to which the surplus in the Treasury can be applied after that time. It has been estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and, I believe, concurred in by both the gentlemen who have spoken, that there will be a surplus of $100,000,000; that is, so much money brought into the public Treasury by taxation. Now I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who has more recently addressed the Senate, if that money is paid into the public Treasury by taxation how he proposes, in the absence of an object to which it can be properly applied, to get it into circulation among the people, who are quite likely to need it, and need it greatly, considering, as we must, the great reduction in national-bank circulation?

There are but two methods, as I understand—one by appropriations which will call the money out of the Treasury, the other by a reduction in taxation, which would prevent it from going into the Treasury. Very well. If it be the purpose of the Republican side of the Chamber to engage in an era of unparalleled extravagance, let it be so understood. Except for reasonable appropriations for an increase of the Navy—for fortifications and guns—and internal improvements as well, requiring but a small part of the expected surplus under present rates of taxation, our Republican friends will find no sympathy on this side of the Chamber.

So far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, or at least speaking only for myself, I am in favor of a reduction of taxation. I am in favor of reducing the burdens of the people. I am not in favor of paying this money into the Treasury if it be not needed for the legitimate purposes of the Government.

Then arises the question, how do you propose to reduce taxation? The honorable Senator from Ohio, the President pro tempore of the Senate [Mr. SHERMAN], the other day, as I understood, proposed a policy by which $54,000,000 could be saved from going into the Treasury by taking off the tax from sugar. In the same breath and in the same argument inferentially he declared that the agricultural interests of this country were not protected at all; that practically the only thing in which the agricultural interests were protected was the duty upon wool.

Mr. President, I wish to submit to the Senate a prediction. Perhaps all will not agree with me, but I think the experience of the past four or five years fully justifies me in making the prediction that with the retention of the duty on sugar where it is to-day, within five years from to-day nine-tenths of the entire sugar product consumed in this country will be produced in this country.

During the past few years there has been a gradual lowering in the prices of all agricultural products, until to-day the farmer can not pay the cost of the labor in the production of any product produced upon the farm. Wheat has fallen in value from $1.25 a bushel to 70 cents a bushel, and all kinds of grain in proportion. All kinds of provisions have gone down, until to-day the capital invested in farms returns not a single dollar to the investor. The labor employed in production consumes every dollar for which the product is sold.

Experiments which have been made in the production of sugar, I think a recent one in the State of California, prove conclusively that in that State, with soils of good quality and with labor compensated perhaps as well as it is anywhere, they have been able to produce sugar at 4.99 cents per pound in large quantities. In my own State, on poorer soils, sugar has been produced, and produced profitably. With all the appliances which can be used in the production of sugar, and with the improved machinery which has recently been invented, the time is not far distant in this country when sugar will become one of its great staples. The State of New Jersey has to-day a large sugar factory in profitable operation, making sugar and competing with the sugar from Cuba. It is true the State has paid a bounty both upon the cane and the sugar for years, but that was done to set the industry upon its feet, and to-day it is going on without the bounty, the State law having expired by limitation.

How is it possible to help the agricultural interests of this country when you subtract from their power to earn the means of supporting the labor employed in this industry by striking down $54,000,000 of that protection which is accorded to agricultural labor? It is my firm conviction that while you might reduce the revenues $54,000,000, or take that amount from the Treasury of the United States, you would simply give Cuba and other sugar-producing countries the benefit, for the very moment you took off your duty they would put on an export duty, and the consumer would be required to pay the same for his sugar that he does to-day.

Now, let us take the question of wool. There are several grades of wool not produced in this country at all, the coarser and the cheaper grades. A duty is levied upon them ranging according to the market value of the wools from 25 to 40 per cent. There are wools grown in Australia, in portions of Russia, in some of the South American states, and so in the highlands of Scotland the like and quality of which we do not produce at all. I saw the statement of an invoice of wool from the city of Glasgow for a few days since. The quotation was four pence a pound, or say 8 cents of our money. That wool was met at the custom-house in New York by a duty of nearly 35 per cent. ad valorem, and as you go up in the grades an increased duty is placed upon the wool. Here was a duty I say of about 35 per cent. ad valorem upon the shipment of wool of which I speak. Now, we produce no wool of that character in this country. We cannot afford to do it. There is no part of the United States where sheep husbandry can be carried on producing wool at 8 cents per pound. It is not done. We grow a better wool, a wool of finer texture, a wool that commands a higher price in the market.

If that wool were allowed to come in duty-free, the result would be that cheaper fabrics might be made from it; cheaper clothing for the use of the poor man, who can not afford to pay high prices for his clothing. Cheaper carpets and blankets, and cheaper fabrics, by mixing it with our other and finer and better wools, could be made from it, and in that way increase the area of our market and give an increased chance to labor.

A great many different fabrics might be made with these coarser and finer wools mixed together, and as the Treasury of the United States does not need the revenue, but is trying to get rid of it—in other words, as there is a promise to us of more difficulty from too much revenue than from not enough—why, then, in the name of common sense, if you wish to give employment to labor, if you wish to increase the profits or wages of labor, do you not give that raw material duty free to the manufacturer, in order that he may afford cheaper clothing and cheaper products to our own people and increase the area of his market?

I have heard it argued on the other side of the Chamber, and I believe in its truth, that there is no country in the world where labor is so intelligent as in the United States or where labor produces more for the money paid for it than in the United States. I believe that with those cheap wools and even with our higher priced labor, but a better labor, we can compete in any market in the world with the low-priced goods if you take the duty off the raw material.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean to say that the increased price paid American laborers is fully compensated by the excellence of their work?

Mr. McPHERSON. I will not say that it is fully compensated, but I think it is more nearly compensated than is generally supposed.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. I understand the Senator to say that he believes with the duty taken off from wool we can compete in the markets of the world with the woolen manufacturers of foreign countries. Is it not true that while we were competing thus with them in the markets of the world we should open our markets to their competition, and would they not come in here to a greater extent than we should be able to gain a foothold in what are called the markets of the world?

Mr. McPHERSON. I am very glad the Senator has asked me the question, and I shall take great pleasure in answering. I want the Senator to understand me that I am not in favor of removing the duty from the wools which we grow in this country, and grow successfully. As to the higher grades of wool which would enter into competition with our wool-growers, I would not remove the duty from such grades. I would not lower the duty to a point where the labor here employed in the woolen industry could not compete successfully with any labor in the world. Understand that I am a protectionist to the extent of giving to labor in this country all the protection it needs to compete with foreign labor. I am in favor of good prices to American labor. God forbid that I should ever consent to put American labor on a par with the pauper labor of any country. But I am in favor of giving labor without tax the material which will enable it to compete with any country by cheapening the product upon which labor lives; and I am in favor of placing upon the free-list the grades of wool which we do not grow. The point of demarkation can easily be found. Any intelligent woolen manufacturer can define the limit or line.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator now, to understand his proposition, in which my constituents have a pretty considerable interest, does the Senator mean when he takes off the duty on wool to retain the duty on woolen manufactures or to take that off also?

Mr. McPHERSON. I have made no such proposition, and I say most unequivocally that I would give to labor in the woolen factory all the protection it needs, and then help the labor there employed to secure these benefits from the employer.

Mr. HOAR. Then the Senator's proposition, so far as he has stated it, I understand, is to take off the duty on only certain classes of wool and to leave the protection on the manufactures of wool untouched.

Mr. McPHERSON. I would not say untouched, but I will say that I would impose a tariff. I do not say that I agree with the tariff as it stands to-day as to the particular amount levied on each article, but I would protect the labor in woolen mills by a tariff; but I would not impose a duty upon a material which we do not grow in this country, which is needed for cheap clothing and cheap carpets, and which is needed to mix with our better grades of wool, from which we may make a great multitude of fabrics that will find other markets from which we are totally shut out to-day, and in that way give employment to labor.

Mr. PLATT. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator, but I want to get at his precise proposition. It is, as I now understand, that he would only admit free of duty those classes of wool which do not come in competition with wool raised in the United States. Is that it?

Mr. McPHERSON. Is it possible that I have not made that plain before? That is exactly my proposition; assuming, however, as I do, that free, cheap wool would not be a competitor, but a vital aid to our wool-grower, our manufacturer, and to labor.

Let us take the article of salt. How much duty is imposed upon salt? I find that we imposed a duty of 12 cents per hundred pounds by the tariff act of 1883. Twelve cents per hundred pounds would be about 36 cents per barrel. I believe there are usually 300 pounds of salt in a barrel. I was informed the other day by a gentleman largely engaged in the manufacture of salt that owing to the improved machinery employed in its production, to the great extent and area of a late discovery of salt-fields, he would like to make a contract to sell all the salt that his salt-works would produce for a year at 40 cents a barrel. In other words, he said: "I propose to supply you or anybody with all the salt my works will produce for a year, and I think my capacity is 200 barrels a day, for 40 cents a barrel."

The duty we have imposed is 36 cents a barrel, almost 100 per cent. duty. Every poor man, every farmer, every man who uses salt, is forced to pay a large tariff upon the salt product.

Now, about the labor employed in its manufacture; let us see the necessity for the duty, for I hear Senators on that side of the Chamber declare that the reason for the imposition of these heavy duties in one sense is that labor may be protected and that the laborer may not suffer. I visited those salt-works and there I found immense machinery, magnificent boilers and engines. They were pumping water from the lake down into a hole in the ground; they were pumping it out of the hole by the same engine and the same machinery into large evaporators. The only living soul whom I saw about the salt-works was the one individual who was running the engine.

What is salt? It is something born of the sun-light and the air. If you take a basin full of sea-water and set it in the sun-light the result is salt. This one individual was manufacturing salt upon which a duty was laid by the Government of 36 cents a barrel. Said I, "My friend, how much wages do you receive?" "Ninety cents a day." Ninety cents a day paid for wages was producing 200 barrels of salt.

On questioning the gentleman I found that he had been requested by the salt industry to visit Congress in 1881 as a representative of the labor part of that industry to prove to a committee of Congress that unless a protection was afforded upon salt the labor engaged in that industry would starve, and he came here for that purpose. He was getting 90 cents a day, or starvation wages, even with a duty of 100 per cent. as protection to the proprietor of the works. Unfortunately this is the case with most all of our protected industries. If labor received a fair proportion of the benefits of protection there would be less strikes, less misery, less poverty, in a land where we have more of everything than we can market.

I find also we have a duty on coal. Our duty on coal is 75 cents a ton. From the best estimates I can gather I find that the labor engaged in mining the coal gets less than 40 cents.

Mr. ALLISON. Forty cents a day?

Mr. McPHERSON. Forty cents a ton for mining the coal in the bowels of the earth and placing it on a car at the mouth of the mine. While the mine owner is receiving a protection of 75 cents a ton the miner down in the bowels of the earth digging the coal gets no part of it.

In 1883 we did make a revision of the tariff. The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] with myself upon the committee confessedly intended to reduce, and believed that we had reduced, the duties about 20 per cent. What was the result? We found they had practically not been reduced at all. It has run along from that time to this. There has been no reformation, no reorganization of the tariff, until to-day we are confronted by the fact that but one alternate to reduction is left us, that is, extravagance in expenditure or as a consequence tying up of the money in the public Treasury, leaving not sufficient currency to meet the wants of the people. The honorable Senator from Vermont, confronted with this dire condition of affairs, introduces a resolution that it is not wise to in any manner interfere now with the tariff. Well, what would the Senator interfere with that would bring relief?

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the Senator from New Jersey will not misrepresent me. My resolution only went to the extent of saying that it would not be wise to revise the tariff according to any plan which has been so far suggested in another place. I am in favor of a revision, and suggested what I would like to do. The Senator, of course, does not mean to misrepresent me; but I am not opposed to a revision of the tariff.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know but that I would agree with the Senator's proposition myself as to committing myself to any particular plan or policy which has been heretofore presented, but at the same time I look upon the Senator's resolution, as I think almost every Senator upon this side of the Chamber does, as having been offered for the express purpose of discouraging anything by way of tariff legislation this winter.

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all.

Mr. McPHERSON. If that be the object of the Senator, I can not agree with him.

Mr. MORRILL. Allow me, as there seems to be a break, to inquire of the Senator in relation to the reduction of the tariff in 1883, if he does not know that the reason there is apparently only a small reduction as to the ad valorem duty is in consequence of the fall of prices. For instance, take sugar; it has gone down immensely. While there is a specific duty upon sugar, translate it into ad valorem and the duty upon it in 1886 as an ad valorem would not be any less than it was in 1883. It is so with a vast number of other articles which are subject to specific duties. It is owing to the fall in prices. If the same prices existed here to-day that existed at the time of the enactment of that tariff, the Senator would find that there would have been a reduction of 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very true; hence we should revise again, and at once.

Mr. President, I was going to call attention to another thing. The Senators who have spoken upon this resolution on that side of the Chamber appear to lay great stress upon the fact that in no other way can the labor interests of this country be protected except by protective duties. We have a labor organization in this country known as the Knights of Labor, claiming to have a million members, who have organized for self-protection, and I want to say here and now, that in my opinion if that organization proves true to the principles and purposes upon which it was founded, it will be the longest lived and the most beneficent in results of any organization since the world began. But can you point to a single petition sent to Congress in which that organization, which is supposed to be as much interested in the results of a tariff according to the view taken on that side of the Chamber as anybody, have asked for a continuance of the present high duties upon articles? Not one. It has been compelled to organize itself for its protection against the protected capital which employs it. Capital is always organized. It can afford to shut up shop and stand idly by while labor starves. Combination is more profitable than competition, hence the manufacturers to-day in almost every branch of industry meet together, they determine the output of goods from the factory, and at the same time they fix the prices at which their goods are to be sold and the tariff permits them to do it. The next thing they do is to fix the wages of labor, and the laborer is compelled to take the prices they fix or go on a strike.

There is no proposition truer than this: The man who gives me employment which I must have or starve, that man is my master, let me call him what I may; and that is the position of labor to-day in the manufactories of the country. We have seen an illustration of it this winter in the great coal combination. Six or seven great railroads owning all the anthracite coal-fields in the country combine together and declare that the price of coal shall be advanced. It is advanced 40 or 50 cents per ton. I want to know if any Senator dare rise in his seat and say how labor is to get any part of the benefit resulting from that increase. The laborer works in the mines still at starvation wages, notwithstanding the rise in coal, and the poor laborer elsewhere forced to buy coal or freeze is compelled to pay the 50 cents advance. This has become a matter of so glaring and outrageous a character that the great State of Pennsylvania has taken notice of it through her executive and her attorney-general.

I am in favor of a revision of the tariff, a fair revision, and an immediate one. I am in favor of such a revision as will not permit the excess above legitimate needs, which we foresee is to trouble us in the near future, to go into the public Treasury at all. I am ready when any bill is submitted which will give us a chance of expressing our opinion and making it into a law to take up each article upon the tariff list and adjust each one in a way that I think ought to be done. But in every case I shall give protection so far as I can to the labor employed in these industries.

I would apply the same principle, however, to every industry that has been applied to the silk industry for a great number of years. In the city of Paterson we have to-day more than a hundred silk mills. The raw material comes into the mills free, and what is the result? No happier community can be found anywhere, no more prosperous one, and Paterson to-day is selling silk at Lyons, France, the very heart of the silk manufacture of the world. I want to know by what process of right or reason the hatters of the city of Newark, 6 miles distant from Paterson, are compelled to pay duty on the raw material from which their hats are made. Ten thousand operatives, if they were given the same privilege accorded to silk manufacture, would be to-day flooding the world with hats, as well as paying a less price for the hats they wear. There are no striking silk weavers and there should be no striking hatters.

This is the Democratic policy, the American policy, and this is the kind of policy I want to see ingrafted in the next tariff bill when it is passed. Make the raw material which goes into your factories as cheap as it can be produced on any spot on the earth, provided it does not interfere seriously with the American labor engaged in its production here. But there is one thing that I would not do; I would not starve ten thousand hat manufacturers in the city of Newark to protect fifty musk-rat trappers on the shores of the Potomac.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to make a motion to refer the resolution now pending to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the motion of the Senator from Vermont, which is pending——

Mr. BECK. I desire to know what is the motion made by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont submits a motion to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Finance. That is the question now before the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I supposed it was.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not propose at this time to be drawn into a discussion of tariff questions, although some of the suggestions and statements of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] are calculated to provoke reply; but I wish simply now, in a word, to point out the difference between the propositions of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Senator from New Jersey in reference to removing the duty upon wool. I have heard a great deal of this cry of having "untaxed clothing for the people." I agree that the Secretary of the Treasury is, to a certain extent, logical in his proposition, but it seems to me that the Senator from New Jersey in his proposition loses sight entirely of this cry or purpose of "untaxed clothing." The Secretary of the Treasury says:

> I respectfully recommend to Congress that they confer upon the wage-earners of the United States the boon of untaxed clothing, and in order thereto the immediate passage of an act simply and solely placing raw wool upon the free-list.

There are no exceptions there, no limitations, but the broad proposition is made that all wool is to be placed upon the free-list. But the Senator from New Jersey, I understand, only proposes to place upon the free-list those grades of wool which are in no sense in competition with the wool-raisers of the United States. However, it so happens that those grades of wool do not go into clothing at all, or if so, to a very slight extent, only in cases where shoddy is made, as I understand. So the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey, limited as it is to free wool only in those grades which do not come into competition with the wool-growers of the United States, affords no relief in the free-trader's mind to the people who wear clothing subject to what is supposed to be an onerous tax.

Mr. BECK obtained the floor.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I did not clearly catch the idea that the Senator from Connecticut intended to convey, as I did not hear all his remarks. If I heard correctly, however, he was criticising my position in this regard, that if it was tenable at all it would give no benefit whatever, because clothing was not made out of cheap grades of wool. I further understood him to intimate that I was in favor of retaining the duty where it is upon the higher grades of wool. I never made any such proposition as that. I am in favor of reducing the duty upon the higher grades of wool, and taking it absolutely off the lower grades of wool. If the cheaper grade of wool will not make good clothing or anything but shoddy, as the Senator characterizes it, the two grades of wool mixed together will make something better than shoddy and something cheaper than the higher grade alone would make. That, I think, is fairly possible.

Mr. PLATT. The cheaper grades of wool, those which do not come in competition with the wool-growers of the United States, almost exclusively enter into the manufacture of coarse carpets, and those carpets sell to-day in the United States, quality for quality, cheaper than in foreign countries.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I object to the motion of the Senator from Vermont to refer his resolution to the Committee on Finance. The Senator knows as well as I do that the Committee on Finance can do nothing with it. Neither the Senate nor any of its committees can originate a bill or take any initiatory steps in revenue matters, or in changing the present system of taxation; when he saw fit to introduce a resolution of this character for debate, and that resolution was supplemented by another of like character presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, and elaborate speeches have been made by each of those gentlemen in support of the propositions they have made, it seems to me to be hardly fair to withdraw them from the Senate before any opportunity to reply has been allowed, and send them to "the tomb of the Capulets," under the guise of a reference to his own committee, when he knows that he can not report, does not propose to report, and has nothing to report about, as the whole subject-matter is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the House. All we can do is to advise our friends there either to consider or refuse to consider the subject. Let us do that or drop the subject.

It is an open secret that the House of Representatives is about to act upon the proposition whether Congress shall seek to modify the tariff in any form at this session. If the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Massachusetts have been successful in consolidating their party friends and in inducing them to vote as a unit against considering any proposition, notwithstanding the obvious necessity for a reduction of taxes so well and so earnestly urged in the message of the President and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, some of us may want to say something upon these questions and explain to the country why they were precipitated on this body. Until action is had elsewhere, I am willing to consider that they have been brought before the Senate for no purpose except to enable those gentlemen to state the views they entertain in regard to taxation; yet I insist that, being before us, and elaborate speeches having been made, they ought to be allowed to remain upon the table until we observe what takes place at the other end of the Capitol, and then discussion can be had upon their effect and perhaps upon their purpose. I am unwilling to remove them from the table, at least until an expression of the sense of the Senate can be had as to whether some steps in some direction ought not to be taken to reduce the present unnecessary, excessive, and dangerous rate of taxation.

I did not attempt to answer the Senator from Vermont the other day, and I do not propose now to answer the Senator from Massachusetts; but the time may soon come, and I hope it will, with some tangible, practical proposition pending on which action can be had, when I may feel that it is my duty, in common with others, to attempt to answer them both. Therefore, I insist that the resolutions ought to lie upon the table of the Senate, subject to the call of any Senator, and not be hidden away in committee-room of the Senator from Vermont. All that is practical now, all I contend for, is that the representatives of the States at this end of the Capitol, on both sides of the Chamber, shall assist, as far as they have influence or power with their friends in the House, in bringing up some measure that will open these great questions for legitimate debate and decisive action. I care not in what form the House opens the question. Let it be a proposition to put tobacco, or whisky, or sugar on the free list; or salt, or coal, or anything else. The moment any proposition is submitted and taken up for consideration the whole question is opened, and each gentleman in either House can lay before his colleagues what he thinks would be the true way to reduce taxes or give his reasons for refusing to make any change.

But if these speeches are being made and these resolutions are being introduced now for the purpose of influencing the Republican gentlemen of the other House to vote against the consideration of any proposition, they may require further notice. We all know there is some division among Democrats in the House, and that on the last vote in that body 136 Democrats endeavored to bring up the question for discussion and action, and only four Republicans supported them. If the Republicans in the other House are to be told from this Chamber, "stand together as one man, and do not allow anything looking to the reduction of taxes to be considered; if they are urged to let the surplus accumulate in the Treasury, or pay 50 per cent. premium to the bondholders if they demanded it for the bonds they own, if that is a less evil than to let money lie idle in the Treasury, or if they are urged to make extravagant appropriations to get rid of it, and hold Democrats responsible for all that follows—if that is to be the tactics of the Republican financial leaders here, we want to know it, and have their resolutions before us when we seek to develop the facts.

The great mass of the Democratic party in the House of Representatives, indeed at both ends of the Capitol, I can not say with confidence every one of them, earnestly desire that propositions seeking to reduce taxes may be brought forward, and if combinations are to be encouraged by resolutions and speeches here prepared in advance and circulated, as I have in a beautiful covered form on my desk this morning the speech of the Senator from Vermont, and I hope to get one in equally attractive form giving the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts in a day or two, we should be given time to look at them and see what can be said on the other side.

I only desire to say at this time that I am wedded to no scheme. I want taxes reduced. I seek the aid of gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber to secure the consideration by the House of a bill that will give us a chance by sending some proposition here to determine how they can best be reduced. I am one of those who believe that before this country can acquire the high commercial and manufacturing position it is entitled to among the nations of the earth, it must take the old time-honored position it held under Democratic low tariff upon the high seas and carry on its own commerce in its own ships.

I believe as long as there is a tax of 50 per cent. upon every nail, every bolt, every piece of iron that is used to build a ship, and on every piece of cordage that goes into it, and every article or material that helps to set it afloat or run it, we cannot succeed, especially when we have treaties allowing the people of all other nations to buy their ships where they please, as cheaply as they can, and trade with us on equal terms with our own citizens in costly home-built ships. I do not believe that taking the tax off tobacco or the tax off sugar will cheapen the construction of a ship, or open a single manufacturing establishment in the United States to more extended markets than it has now. But giving up the taxes on these things is earnestly urged for the purpose of preventing us from removing taxes on manufactures or materials, and to keep us from doing anything to enlarge our commercial power and send our manufactured goods abroad to compete in the markets of the world with other people.

The men who own the machinery and the men whose fortunes have been built up by a protective tariff are content with this market, and all their pretenses of zeal to aid their laborers only means that they intend to perpetuate by law their power to appropriate this market to themselves—to secure the right to charge what they please. Their laborers may starve before they will give them any chance to work for markets more extended, or carry on business on such a scale that the operatives can have labor all the year, instead of six or eight months, which is about the average now.

The Senator from Massachusetts tells about the immense amount of capital that has accumulated in this country in the last thirty or forty years. I admit what he says; but let me ask how is it distributed? It is in the hands of the Vanderbilts, the Goulds, and the great protected manufacturing companies. What good does all that enormous wealth do the laborer and his family while they are idle for months at a time when combinations such as that of the anthracite coal companies and others are closing up their mines and shops in order to increase prices, so as to make a few men rich and starve the laborers—the protected pets of Congress alone getting richer.

I want laws passed which grant no monopolies or special privileges. I seek to obtain a fair and equal distribution of taxation which will increase the purchasing power of the poor man's wages and give the laborer, whether on the farm, in the factory, or anywhere else, the right to work and make the most out of what he earns. I have no faith in legislative protection and bounty, given to a few at the expense of the many, which seems to be all that some gentlemen think Congress is called together to perpetuate. "Congress has nothing to give, except what it takes from the tax-payer, and it takes nothing from the wealth of the country to give to its pets; it grinds all its subsidies out of the sweat of the poor." When these questions are up we will discuss them, I hope, satisfactorily. I ought, however, to show now what a false position the Senator from Vermont starts out with, to show the importance of not allowing these harangues to go uncontradicted. He says:

> The foremost objections to the proposed reductions of the tariff, however small the reduction, are that they were supremely ill-directed and wholly at war with American industries, and that according to the estimates of the Treasury Department there did not appear to be any surplus of revenue to spare. The revenue, as estimated by the present administration, was to be $315,000,000, and the estimated regular annual and permanent appropriations were $339,589,552, and the actual amount appropriated for 1887 was $328,000,000, although not including a dollar on account of fortifications or for coast defenses. Notwithstanding these stubborn records, a reduction of revenues was proposed in the face of a deficit, as was clearly disclosed by their own highest authority, of $24,589,552, and this estimated deficit the revenue reformers sought to increase.

And on further he says, "there may be some little surplus now; perhaps there is." Why, Mr. President, three days before that speech was delivered the Secretary of the Treasury and the President had laid before Congress the message and reports, and the Treasurer of the United States had laid before us his report, in which he said, speaking of the fiscal year just closed:

The net receipts of the Government were $336,439,727.06; the net expenditure was $242,483,138.50. The receipts were $12,749,020.68 greater, and the expenditures were $17,743,796.61 less, than last year, making an increase in the net receipts for the past fiscal year over that of 1885 of $30,492,817.29.

The Treasurer shows almost in the next line that all the 3 per cent. bonds were now paid except $64,000,000; that no more could be paid without buying them at a premium until 1891; that the surplus revenue now coerced from the tax-payers by oppressive laws would continue to run from $100,000,000 to $125,000,000 annually beyond all the needs of the Government; and yet the country is told by the chairman of the Finance Committee, and his speech is circulated over the land, that it is a matter of great doubt whether we can reduce taxation at all or do anything looking to relief without making deficits.

That is a specimen of the way this great subject now sought to be withdrawn from the Senate has been treated by him. Again, the Senator from Vermont says some of us are silly enough to repeat the oft-exploded heresy that a man ought to sell where he can sell highest and buy where he can buy cheapest. That he regards as very unpatriotic and fit only for the emissaries of the Cobden Club. I hope some bill will come up. I seek his aid to bring it up in any form; that is all I ask, which will enable us to prove that to be the true policy. We will show that 86 per cent. of all our exports are purely agricultural products, and that they must be sent abroad and have to be sold in competition with all the paupers of Europe, and that the prices of our home crops are controlled by the foreign market price of the surplus exported. Surely the men who have to send their goods abroad should have a right to buy what they want where they can get the most for the least money, as they had to sell their products in competition with paupers, subject only to such a tax as is needed for an honest, economical administration of the Government, and not be robbed by Congress to enrich any body of men who have nothing to do with their trade and did not labor to produce anything they get the money for. This Government does not trade with anybody; other nations do not trade with us; individual men trade with other men. All exports and imports are individual not national property. The farmer's products have to go abroad, and the surplus increases as home machinery supplants human labor, and they have to be sold to somebody. The man who buys them pays the money to the man who sells. He ought to be allowed to use it so as to do him and his family the most good. It is robbery for Congress, under pretense of protecting anybody else, to take from him any more of the money that he has earned or to make him pay more for the things he needs than his proper share of the proper expenses of the Government requires. We will maintain that, heresy or no heresy, when the question is up for debate.

When gentlemen tell the people that the importer pays the tariff tax they know the statement is a humbug, if not a downright falsehood; it is a false statement of the fact. There is not a dollar's worth of goods imported into this country from any part of the world that does not come for consumption here at home. These goods are bought in great part with the proceeds of goods exported by the men who have to sell goods in foreign markets in competition with so-called paupers. Not one dollar would ever reach the Treasury of the United States from customs dues unless each individual man who buys the goods brought from abroad assumes that to be the cheapest way to get them. He is the only man who can judge whether it is cheaper for him to pay the foreign price with the tariff tax than it is to buy the same things at the price asked in this country. He pays the tax only because it is cheaper in his opinion than to buy from the home manufacturer, and because he thinks so the Government gets the tax. The individual American citizen who needs goods is in every case the man who pays the tariff tax; yet we are talking here about these matters as though it was this Government dealing with a foreign Government, and as though the farmer of the Northwest was interested in making every manufacturer in Vermont or Rhode Island or New Hampshire or anywhere else a millionaire, no matter though he and his family might be paying twice what all they bought was worth in order to make these Congressional favorites millionaires.

Has it come to this, that we are to boast of the fact that we are living in a country where we have a few thousand millionaires, made so by legislation of Congress, while fifty-nine millions are starving, or have the right to use the money they work for to the best advantage taken from them in order to make a few men rich by law who refuse to labor in the open markets of the world and that we are to maintain a protective system in order that we may boast that we have a great amount of money in the country distributed to a few by Congress, while the men who earn it and are really entitled to it are getting none of the benefits, but are crushed to the earth under the pretext of protecting American labor?

I repeat that I propose to argue those questions when any tax bill in any shape is presented, and I appeal to gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber to use all the power they have with their respective friends at the other end of the Capitol to bring up in any form any measure that will enable us to discuss them. Then we will go to the country and when the facts are presented I think we will strip the false pretenses and patriotic platitudes that are now paraded about the importance of taxing all the people to protect the pretended guardians of labor when they are merely robbing the men whom they are pretending to protect. I will go as far as any man to protect American labor; I want to give it constant employment; I want its wages to buy as much as the wages of any other laborer will buy; I want to free it from all taxation except what is necessary to support this Government. When the Senator from Massachusetts was telling how the one hundred and sixty thousand men who are operatives in the woolen mills would receive the message of the President when their wages were cut down, I could but think how the twenty millions of men who work upon their farms and who could buy for $3 on Saturday night a hat, a coat, or a suit of clothes that under the protective-tariff robbery cost them $6, would thank God that the President had made the suggestion that induced Congress to pass laws enabling the wages they earned to buy at a reasonable price the things they needed.

But I only rose to protest against these resolutions being taken from before the Senate until I and every Senator who thinks like me shall have a chance to submit our views upon them, and I shall not now longer detain the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I would be the last man to cut off the Senator from Kentucky from the opportunity of making a speech on the subject of the tariff. I was not aware that there was anyone on either side of the Chamber who desired further discussion at the present time on this subject, and it was contemplated that this resolution would go to the Committee on Finance, and, possibly, there might be some report made, if no measure should be introduced.

In relation to curtailing the Senator from Kentucky, we all know that it is impossible, for he will discuss the tariff, as usual, upon every question that comes up.

I will not press the motion to refer if there is any objection, but I supposed there would be no objection.

Mr. BECK. I object, for one.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. As it does not seem to be desired on either side of the Chamber to discuss this matter further at this moment, I move to take up Order of Business 1766, being the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the appointment of civil officers. That is a bill which a very large majority of the Senate desire to pass, as I am sure, and I think it can be passed in a very few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. BECK. I made a suggestion an hour or two ago in regard to the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. Now that it is getting late, I am content that it may go over until to-morrow or Wednesday, or any fixed day when attention is especially called to it, so that we may dispose of it.

Mr. HOAR. I think this bill can be disposed of in a very short time, and then we can probably spend the rest of the day in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the appointment of civil officers.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose a parliamentary inquiry is in order.

As I understand, the regular order of the Senate at this time is the resolution for the consideration of executive nominations in open sessions. We have come to it in its order. Now I wish to inquire what will be the effect of the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, whether its effect is not to displace that special order? If it is, I object.

Mr. HOAR. It is not my purpose to displace any special order, and the motion was made with no such purpose, but for one I would give unanimous consent that the Senator's special order shall not be displaced, if it requires unanimous consent. I supposed that it would not be desired by the Senate at this hour to take up any question which would involve serious discussion and in regard to which there was a large difference of opinion, and I supposed that in ten or fifteen minutes this bill would be passed and out of the way, and it would be much more convenient to the Senate to spend the time before we go into executive session in that way than in considering the tariff debate, or in taking up the measure of the Senator from Kentucky, or the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. Then why not let that measure, which I understand comes now in its order, be laid before the Senate so as to be the unfinished business?

Mr. HOAR. I understand a special order has that right until it is disposed of. It is not like a matter that goes over as unfinished business in the ordinary course; but the Senator's matter stands, if this motion prevails, just as it would stand if it does not stand.

Mr. PLATT. That was a question that I desired to be informed about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will advise the Senator that the resolution to which he refers stands at the head of the special orders; but if the bill proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts is taken up and is unfinished to-day and is left as the unfinished business, it will take precedence to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I will not ask to go on with it to-morrow, if it is not finished to-night, to the prejudice of the Senator's resolution.

Mr. PLATT. All right.

Mr. HARRISON. Pending this motion, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I hope not. I hope the Senate will stand by this bill and not pass over it.

Mr. HARRISON. There are a number of nominations to be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of civil officers.

The motion was agreed to.

TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT REPEAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repeal sections 1767, 1768, 1769, 1770, 1771, and 1772 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; but this repeal is not to affect any officer heretofore suspended under the provisions of these sections, or any designation, nomination, or appointment heretofore made by virtue of the provisions thereof.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would inform the Senate precisely the scope of this bill. It is very difficult to understand what is the effect of a bill which simply proposes to amend or repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, when those sections are not even referred to or read to the Senate, and when the bill appears to be likely to pass with such haste that we can not have time to get the Revised Statutes and turn to them.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this bill repeals what is left of what is called the tenure-of-office act, passed under the administration of Andrew Johnson, and as a part of the contest with that President. It leaves the law as it was from the beginning of the Government until that time, and it repeals the provision which authorizes the suspension of civil officers and requires the submission of that suspension to the Senate. Every member of this body who has been a member of the House of Representatives—and I think there is a very large number—has voted for that repeal. Several times it was urged very earnestly by President Grant. It has been urged by every successor of his, I believe, and I suppose there are not five gentlemen in the Senate who object to that repeal.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I can hardly suppose that a vote will be taken on this measure at this moment.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it can be taken in a few minutes, but if any Senator manifests a purpose to go into any extended discussion of it, I will not press it at this moment. I hope the Senator from New York will allow the vote to be taken.

Mr. EVARTS. I am in favor of the repeal, but I desire to call up at some proper moment the subject of a communication from the House of Representatives, and unless there can be some evidence that this bill can pass, as it were, by common agreement, I must insist on my right.

Mr. HOAR. The bill has been read. It is plain. Nobody has manifested any purpose to debate it. I hope the question will be tried by putting the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York claim the floor?

Mr. EVARTS. I do not make any motion now.

Mr. PLATT. Let us have the yeas and nays on the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it appears to me a due respect to this subject that has engaged the attention of this people for so many years would at least justify the reading of the sections of the Revised Statutes that are to be repealed in this summary method, sub silentio. I therefore ask that the Secretary may be directed to read the sections of the Revised Statutes that are to be repealed by this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The sections referred to will be read.

Mr. EVARTS. If I am in order now——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York has the floor.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE DOWDNEY.

Mr. EVARTS. I call up the message from the House of Representatives relative to the death of a member of that body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives.

The Chief Clerk reads, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 10, 1886.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound regret the announcement of the death of the Hon. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a select joint committee, consisting of seven members of the House and three members of the Senate, be appointed to attend the funeral, and the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 11, 1886.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL, Mr. VIELE, Mr. MERRIMAN, Mr. MULLER, Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri, Mr. BRADY, and Mr. SCRANTON, the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral of Hon. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I offer resolutions, which I ask may be read.

The Chief Clerk read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the appointment of a joint committee to take order for attending the funeral of the deceased at his residence in the State of New York, and that the members of the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed, in conformity to the above resolutions, the following Senators to attend the funeral: Messrs. MILLER, RANSOM, and VOORHEES.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I move, out of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 14, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 13, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

COLLECTION OF DUTIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the collection of duties; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PETTIBONE, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of important business.

H. C. WILKEY.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6046) for the relief of H. C. Wilkey, and that the same be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to H. C. Wilkey, late postmaster at Columbus, Ky., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $307.87, and interest thereon from June 8, 1882, for Government money stolen from him by burglars, and which he was required to keep on hand to pay United States postal clerks with, the payment for the loss of which is not provided for in the act of Congress of March 17, 1882.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. EDEN. I think we should not allow interest in a case of this kind.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The Committee on Claims unanimously recommended the passage of this bill in its present form, and I see no reason for any amendment. This man has been deprived of the use of his money since the theft, and has been paying interest.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMILE GUERIN AND CHERI C. MAJOR.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6330) and that it now be put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the right, title, claim, and interest of the United States to a certain tract of land on False River, Pointe Coupée Parish, Louisiana, and described on the official maps of the General Land Office of the United States as lot or section No. 69, in township 5 south, range 10 east, southeastern district, west of the Mississippi River, Louisiana, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed to and in Emile Guerin and Cheri C. Major, holding under the original grantee or his assigns, and to and in their successors, transferees, vendees, and assignees: Provided, That this act shall have the effect only of a quitclaim of all right, title, and interest of the United States therein, not to affect any valid adverse right or title to said land, nor create any liability on the part of the United States.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OFFICIAL LETTER-BOOKS, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 19) and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War is directed to cause to be made out duly certified copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina now in the War Department, and to be delivered to the governor of North Carolina, retaining the originals in the War Department.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS A. OSBORN.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9008) and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to pay to Thomas A. Osborn, late United States marshal for the district of Kansas, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,701.96, on account of the loss of that amount of public funds by the failure of the banking-house of E. H. Gruber & Co., on the 6th day of October, 1866, the loss being without neglect or fault on the part of said Thomas A. Osborn.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to have the report read, subject also to objection.

The report (by Mr. WARNER, of Missouri) was read, as follows:

That the claimant, Thomas A. Osborn, was United States marshal for the district of Kansas in October, 1866, and for over two years prior thereto; that as such marshal certain money of the United States came into his hands to defray United States court expenses for his district; that his office as marshal was in the city of Leavenworth, Kans., in a room immediately over the banking-house of E. H. Gruber & Co.; that the Government furnished no safe or other depository in which the claimant could deposit the public money in his hands.

It had been, and was, on the said 6th day of October, 1866, the custom of the claimant, on receiving advances from the Government for the court expenses, to deposit the same with the said banking firm of E. H. Gruber & Co.; that the said firm was regarded by the business community of said city as being perfectly safe; the leading and best citizens made their deposits with said bank; that on October 1, 1866, the claimant had a balance in said bank, of funds belonging to the United States, of $2,966.59; that on said 1st day of October he received from the Treasury of the United States the further sum of $6,596 for the purpose of paying the expenses of the October term of the United States district court, which sum he also deposited in said bank on said 1st day of October, 1866; that on the 6th day of October, 1866, the said banking-house of E. H. Gruber & Co. failed, having at the time of failure the sum of $9,562.59 of the moneys of the United States to the credit of the claimant as United States marshal; that the claimant at once made good said amount to the United States.

The committee is of the opinion that the claimant used due care in handling the said money of the United States and that the loss was in no way the result of any negligence on his part.

In February, 1867, the late Hon. Mark W. Delahay, then United States district judge for Kansas, made the following statement:

I have been perfectly conversant with Marshal Osborn's manner of doing business since his appointment. I know that he has been doing his banking business through the house of E. H. Gruber & Co. This house I considered one of the safest in the locality until it failed, on the 6th of October, 1866.

I believe that Marshal Osborn has guarded with unusual diligence the interest of the Government, and that he is in no way to blame for the loss which occurred with E. H. Gruber & Co. Many of the best business men in Leavenworth were doing business with said firm at the time of its failure. I had been doing my banking business with said firm for years.

MARK W. DELAHAY,
United States District Judge for Kansas.

The committee concurs in the opinion expressed in the statement just cited. It is shown to the committee by competent evidence that the claimant received from the assignee of said firm of E. H. Gruber & Co. 9 per cent. of said sum of $9,562.59 and no more. The committee is of the opinion from all the facts and circumstances attending the loss that the sum of $8,701.96 should be paid the claimant.

The committee returns bill H. R. 9008 with the recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to reserve the right to object until I can ask a question or two of the gentleman from Kansas. I wish to ask whether or not there were at this time any national banking institutions in the city of Leavenworth.

Mr. RYAN. There was no Government depository in Leavenworth at that time.

Mr. ROGERS. That is not the question, but whether there were any national banks.

Mr. RYAN. And my recollection is, further, that there was no national bank at that time. The marshal deposited the funds committed to his care in the banking-house of E. H. Gruber & Co., which was regarded as one of the strongest institutions of the kind in the town. The best business men of the city deposited with them. No safe was supplied to the marshal wherein to deposit the funds which were lost by the failure of Gruber & Co.; and hence he was compelled either to keep the money on his person or in a banking-house for safety. These funds, it should be remembered, were sent—and I call attention to the fact—to the marshal to pay the expenses of the October term of the court. They were sent to him about the 1st of October, and on the 6th of October the bank failed; and this loss was the result. This bill merely provides that he shall be repaid a loss which was the result of no negligence on his part, but was the direct result of the failure on the part of the Government to supply him with proper means of caring for the funds in his possession. There seems to have been no lack of diligence on the part of the marshal in any respect.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, this is a very bad precedent, and I am necessarily compelled to object.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman says it is a bad precedent. If he will allow me, I want to say to him that I do not think he will find an instance where the House has refused to grant relief in such cases.

Mr. ROGERS. I must insist upon the objection.

GRAFTON MONROE.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Claims from the further consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe, with a view to non-concurring in the Senate amendments, and agreeing to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The bill had better be read, as also the amendments of the Senate, for the information of the House.

The bill and proposed amendments were read.

There being no objection, the motion of Mr. SHAW was agreed to, the Senate amendments non-concurred in, and the conference asked on the part of the Senate agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as managers at said conference on the part of the House, Mr. SHAW, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. MCKENNA.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2654) for the relief of William B. Lynch, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROGERS. I reserve the right to object until the report has been read.

Mr. BARBOUR. I demand the regular order.

Mr. GOFF. Let the report be read, which will take but a short time.

Mr. BARBOUR. I must insist upon the demand.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions. Under this call petitions and memorials from State and Territorial Legislatures are also in order for reference to appropriate committees, and also resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of Departments.

SECTION 856, REVISED STATUTES.

CONGRESSIONAL FUNERALS, ETC.

Mr. OATES also introduced a bill (H. Mr. OATES. I ask that that bill be referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

DREDGING BARS IN TAMPA BAY.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 221) directing the Secretary of War to report to Congress the expense of dredging two bars in Tampa Bay; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Mr. DOUGHERTY also submitted a resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to examine, consider, and report to the House of Representatives whether the obligations of the United States to Spain, under article 9 of the treaty of February 22, 1819, have been fully satisfied and discharged, and what further legislation, if any, is necessary to enable the United States to discharge its obligations under said treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. LAWLER submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Whereas the rapidly accumulating surplus in the Treasury, largely in excess of the needs to support the Government and discharge the bonded debt as it is called or may become due, is likely to prove subversive of the commercial interests of the country and detrimental to the welfare of the people in various essentials; and

Whereas the proper executive officers of the Government represent to the Congress that our coast defenses need to be placed in armament so as to meet the requirements of the advanced arts in modern warfare, and afford adequate protection to the large sea-coast and lake-board cities now absolutely exposed to the mercy of a foreign enemy; and

Whereas, although the personnel of our Navy is composed of officers and sailors of the highest excellence and patriotism, unsurpassed in ability by that of any other nation, yet we have no vessels of war worthy the name or capable of competing with the armed cruisers of third or fourth rate powers; and

Whereas it is estimated that nearly one million of workingmen are now unemployed throughout the country, and suffering consequent deprivation of the necessaries of life; and

Whereas the happiness and welfare of the Republic are largely dependent upon the employment and contentment of the laboring classes: Therefore,

Be it resolved, as the sense of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States, That a large proportion of the surplus in the Treasury should be expended, through liberal appropriations, for repairing and properly equipping our coast defenses; for construction of war-ships worthy the name of an American Navy, and for such Federal public works as may be needed in various sections of the country, to the end that these surplus moneys may be distributed among the people as wages for their labor to be employed.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask consent that the Committee on Ways and Means be directed to report this resolution one week from to-day.

The SPEAKER. The resolution does not belong to the Committee on Ways and Means. Its appropriate reference is to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LAWLER. The resolution does not appropriate any money. Its object is merely to get an expression of the opinion of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The resolution embodies a proposition that money shall be appropriated for the construction and repair of fortifications and other public works.

Mr. LAWLER. It is to get the sense of this Congress as to what may be done with this money. I ask the resolution be again read, as I do not think the Speaker, from the noise in the Hall, was able to catch the drift of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Still the Committee on Ways and Means has no jurisdiction whatever, under the rules of the House, over subjects relating to the appropriation of money, and this resolution does relate exclusively to an appropriation of money or the propriety of appropriating money for certain purposes.

Mr. LAWLER. With the leave of the Speaker I wish to suggest——

Mr. HAMMOND. Let it go to the regular committee.

Mr. LAWLER. The resolution merely provides for getting the sense of Congress as to whether this surplus could not be used.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands the resolution, but it proposes to take the sense of the House, or rather presents to the House for its consideration the question whether or not money shall be appropriated out of the public Treasury for certain purposes, a question over which the Committee on Ways and Means has no jurisdiction.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask, by unanimous consent, permission then to make that motion.

Mr. HAMMOND. I object.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let the resolution be again read.

Mr. BARBOUR. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

STABLE FOR HOUSE HORSES.

Mr. OWEN introduced a bill (H. R. 10091) for the construction of a stable for the use of the horses and wagons for the use of the officers of the House of Representatives; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE CORPS.

Mr. MATSON introduced a bill (H. R. 10092) relating to appointments and promotions in the Marine Corps; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH AND MARY GLASSBRENNER.

Mr. MATSON also introduced a bill (H. R. 10093) for the relief of Elizabeth Glassbrenner and Mary Glassbrenner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOSIAH STANDLEY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. 10094) to increase the pension of Josiah Standley, Company I, Ninety-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIE S. HOWARD.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ Willie S. Howard as a page in the committee-room of the Committee on Appropriations during the residue of the present session; the said Willie S. Howard to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the same compensation as now received by pages of the House.

LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Whereas the act of Congress entitled "An act to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes," approved May 31, 1878, provides that it shall be unlawful for the Secretary of the Treasury or other officer under him to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes, and when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury under any law from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; and that when mutilated notes are canceled and destroyed, new notes of like denomination shall be issued in their stead; and

Whereas, notwithstanding said provisions of law, various Secretaries of the Treasury have from time to time since the passage of said law pursued the policy of canceling and destroying Treasury notes of the denomination of one and two dollars, and issuing in lieu thereof notes of larger denomination; and

Whereas Congress did, by the act approved August 4, 1886, provide that no portion of the sums in said act appropriated should be expended for printing United States notes of large denomination in lieu of notes of small denomination canceled or retired; and

Whereas Congress did, by the said last-named act, provide for the reissue of said one and two dollar notes by an appropriation of money for said purpose; and

Whereas it appears from the late report of the Treasurer of the United States that there have been canceled and destroyed since the passage of the said act, approved August 4, 1886, more than one million dollars of said one and two dollar notes; and that none of like denomination have been again issued and kept in circulation: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this Hosue as soon as possible:

First. Whether any portion of the money appropriated by the act approved August 4, 1886, known as the sundry civil appropriation act, has been expended in issuing Treasury notes of large denomination in lieu of notes of smaller denomination canceled or retired; and whether any other money belonging to the Government of the United States has been expended for such purpose since August 4, 1886.

Second. How many, if any, one and two dollar notes have been canceled and destroyed since the passage of the act approved August 4, 1886, by what authority said notes were destroyed, and what sum has been expended in their destruction.

Third. How many, if any, of said notes canceled and destroyed were "mutilated notes," and whether notes of like denomination were issued in their stead.

CAPT. JOHN C. FORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the remainder of this day is set apart for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, if claimed by that committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. What business does the gentleman present?

SCHOOL-BOARD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9125) as a substitute for (H. R. 5235) to create a school-board for the District of Columbia, and to prescribe its powers and duties. I ask that this bill be taken from the House Calendar for consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. When this order of business is entered upon, under the rules is it not required that the bills shall be considered in the order in which they appear on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter entirely within the province of the committee. The rule provides that they may call up such business as they see proper.

Mr. SPRINGER. No order, then, is prescribed?

The SPEAKER. None. Of course it is always in the power of the House to determine, when a particular measure is called up, whether the House will or will not proceed to consider it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. What has become of the bill which was under consideration in the House on the last District day?

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman from Illinois refers is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and if the House should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole that bill would be the unfinished business and come up immediately, unless passed over by order of the House.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move to take up the bill which I have indicated, and which the Clerk will find on page 29 of the Calendar.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the rule require that this bill shall be considered first in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The bill now presented?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard what it is. If it makes an appropriation of money, or requires an appropriation of money to be made to carry into effect its provisions, the rules require that it shall have its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOPKINS. I claim that this bill does indirectly make an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That upon the passage of this act the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint three persons from and residents in each of the eight existing school divisions of the District, who shall constitute the board of education of the District of Columbia. The term of office of one-third of the number of the board first appointed shall end on the 15th day of July, 1887; one-third on the 15th day of July, 1888; and one-third on the 15th day of July, 1889; and all vacancies in the membership of the board resulting from expiration of term of office shall be filled by appointments for three years, and all vacancies resulting from other causes shall be filled by appointments for unexpired terms; but said commissioners may, in their discretion, at any time remove any or all of said members from office and fill the vacancies by new appointments. Each appointee shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to aid in executing the powers conferred and performing the duties imposed upon the board by law; and said oath or affirmation shall be filed of record in the office of the commissioners of the District.

SEC. 2. That the board of education of the District of Columbia shall have the power and it shall be its duty—

First. To appoint a secretary for the board, who shall perform such duties as the board may assign to him, and remove him at their discretion.

Second. To nominate (two-thirds of its members concurring) and, by and with the advice and consent of the commissioners, to appoint such superintendents in the public schools as may be authorized by law.

Third. To appoint supervising principals of school divisions, teachers, janitors, and such other employés as may be deemed by the commissioners necessary for the proper administration of the public-school system of the District under the provisions of this act, and which said commissioners may by order authorize it to appoint, and to change such employés at the discretion of the board: Provided, That no removals, appointments, or promotions shall be made except by an affirmative vote of a majority of the whole board: And provided further, That immediately upon any action by the board relating to the change of personnel, such action shall be formally certified to the commissioners for their information.

Fourth. To prescribe and ascertain, by suitable competitive examinations and other satisfactory evidence, the qualifications of candidates for teacherships and promotions: Provided, That the rules adopted by the board for the conduct of the examinations of candidates for teacherships shall be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Fifth. To prescribe courses of study and text-books for the public schools; but no book shall be prescribed or changed unless by a vote of two-thirds of the whole board; and the books in all the schools shall be uniform.

Sixth. To suspend, expel, or punish pupils who will not submit to reasonable rules of order and discipline, or to authorize the suspension, expulsion, or punishment of such pupils.

Seventh. To make frequent personal inspections of school-buildings, furniture, and the premises, and to cause monthly examinations and reports of all matters relating to the schools to be made by the superintendents and supervising principals or other competent persons.

Eighth. To report in writing to the commissioners whenever, in the opinion of the board, a new school-building, or an addition thereto, alteration of, or repairs to a school-building, are needed, showing the necessity for such building, addition, alteration, or repairs.

Ninth. To prepare and submit to the commissioners annually, in the month of September, a detailed estimate of the amount of money required for the support of the public schools during the next ensuing fiscal year, showing specifically for what purposes such money is required.

Tenth. To examine and recommend to the commissioners, for approval or disapproval, all bills and accounts against the District for the establishment and maintenance of the public schools.

Eleventh. To make to the commissioners annually, prior to the 1st of September in each year, a report in writing of the work and acts of the board during the preceding school year, including reports from superintendents and other officers and teachers, or such parts thereof as may be required by the commissioners or be deemed of general interest.

Twelfth. To make and execute such by-laws and rules, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary or convenient for the proper administration of the powers and duties herein granted and imposed, and to amend or abrogate the same at pleasure; but no by-law or rule shall be made, amended, or abrogated unless by a vote of two-thirds of the whole board.

SEC. 3. That upon the recommendation of the board of education the commissioners may change the number or limits, or both, of the school divisions as now established; and such changes, when so recommended and approved, shall effect corresponding changes in the composition of the board.

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like a decision on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not been able to discover, from the reading of the bill, that it makes an appropriation or requires an appropriation to be made if it shall be enacted into a law. No compensation appears to be provided whatever for the members of this board.

Mr. HOPKINS. But in the selection of the school sites it indirectly requires an appropriation of money to be made.

The SPEAKER. It does not appear from the bill that this board is more than an advisory board. They are to recommend only.

Mr. HOPKINS. But they are the moving power, and no money can be expended or action taken except with their approval. And while no money is directly expended by them, yet, at the same time, inasmuch as the bill provides that the school sites shall be designated and contracts made for the District in that respect with their approval, involving indirectly an appropriation of money, I claim that it should go to the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The powers of the board in that respect appear to be entirely advisory in their character. It may be that a site for a school-building can not be procured except upon their recommendation; but still, it does not follow that it must be procured upon their recommendation. And, in addition, it has been repeatedly held that unless the bill on its face makes an appropriation, or plainly requires it to be made to execute its provisions, it does not bring it within the rule requiring its consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARBOUR. There is no change from existing law on that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it may be considered in the House, under the rule.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then, Mr. Speaker, let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. It has been called for.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have asked for the reading of the report. I am not the special patron of the bill, but wish to give the House all the information in my power in reference to it.

The report (by Mr. BARBOUR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5235) to create a school-board, &c., respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration.

They have had several conferences with the Commissioners of the District and the citizens' committee (the latter is the propounder of the bill), and now present a substitute bill, embodying such change in existing law as is asked for and agreed upon by and between the commissioners and citizens, with a single amendment by your committee, which is, in their judgment, a wise and just settlement of the only point of variance, and which is believed to be acceptable to both. The amendment proposed (which is the second clause of section 2) is as follows:

"Second. To nominate (two-thirds of its members concurring) and, by and with the advice and consent of the commissioners, to appoint such superintendents in the public schools as may be authorized by law."

With this amendment your committee report the substitute to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that upon the language of that report it is shown that there seems to have been some little misunderstanding in regard to the consent of the commissioners. I understand that while at one time they were disposed to yield their objections to the measure, subsequently they withdrew their conclusion to consent to the passage of the bill.

This is a measure, sir, that the people of the District have a large interest in. It is a matter that comes home to everybody, the education of their children; and this movement has been started by a large body of citizens, who have come together and reported their sentiments, as embodied in the bill.

The competition is between the present system, which is the exercise of a one-man power, and the exercise of this same power by a large number of representative citizens whose action is subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District. It is a measure to popularize, as far as may be, the educational system of Washington city.

I desire to have read, in further support of that position, a memorial from several hundred of the most prominent citizens of Washington, and a letter addressed to me also by Chief-Justice Cartter, who presided as chairman at the citizens' meeting. When these are read I shall submit the matter to the consideration of the House so far as I am concerned, and yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

CITIZENS' COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS,
Washington, D. C., December 6, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a memorial of citizens, who have been, at one time or another, connected with the management of the public schools of this District, either directly, as trustees and superintendents, or indirectly, as mayors and commissioners, and who represent substantially all classes and localities.

These memorialists are among our best-known and most intelligent citizens; and if any body of citizens here is competent to represent the wishes of our people in respect to the proposed school legislation and to give a trustworthy opinion as to its propriety and necessity at the present time these memorialists are that body.

I take this occasion to renew, on behalf of the citizens' committee, our approval of the school-board bill as reported by your committee.

Very respectfully,

D. K. CARTTER, Chairman.

HON. JOHN S. BARBOUR,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives, United States.

MEMORIAL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 6, 1886.

To the House of Representatives:

In our opinion, House bill 9125, "to create a school-board for the District of Columbia, and to prescribe its powers and duties," including subdivision 2 of section 2 of said bill, which directs the mode of appointing the superintendents of instruction, ought to pass.

We think the best interests of the public schools will be promoted by intrusting their educational management to a board of citizens specially appointed for the purpose and vested with appropriate and adequate powers.

Such a board, with, as it seems to us, substantially such powers, is provided for in the bill referred to; and we therefore beg most respectfully to urge its early and favorable consideration.

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield ten minutes of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. ROWELL. I do not desire to occupy very much time in discussing this bill. I believe it to be true that the public-school system in all the States is organized upon the theory of bringing one portion of the school management as near to the people as possible. In other words, it is a decentralizing system. All the States that have advanced in the public-school system have a State superintendent with certain powers, have State laws prescribing the method of organizing the schools, the qualification of teachers, and certain general regulations. But then they have also county superintendents with certain powers. It is and has been the policy of the States to bring the employment of the teacher down to the smallest body of people interested. Under that system, I think, schools have thrived. The people to be affected have been interested in the schools, and they have prospered. While there are objections to the system because it brings mediocrity in competition, yet as a whole I think it to be the true system.

We have an anomalous form of government in this city. The purpose of this bill in part is to bring the employment of the teachers and the control of the schools near to the people. It proposes to divide this District of Columbia into eight districts and to have out of each of these three members of the board of education, so as to bring into each district a personal interest in the schools, and to that extent assimilate our system to the general system.

But, Mr. Speaker, it will not do to forget the peculiar form of government in the District, nor will it do to incorporate upon that form anything that is antagonistic to it. Therefore, to my mind, there are some things in this bill that ought to be amended. The commissioners of the District are its controlling power. To them must go all estimates for the support of schools. In their hands is the fixing of salaries. To them must go the general supervision of all the expenditures of the members of the board of education because they are the parties to whom Congress looks for information. It seems to me that this bill takes from them one power that they ought to have. The bill gives to the board of education the appointment of all teachers, of all principals and subsuperintendents; of all parties that have any connection with schools in the way of teaching.

The bill goes further and it gives to the board of education the nomination of the executive officer of the schools. To my mind, to that extent, it goes too far. It seems to me that the District commissioners ought to have an agent acting for them, supervising for them, looking over the action of the teachers and superintendents; and that agent ought to be the executive officer of the schools or their superintendent.

I heartily approve of the bill with that exception. I believe it would be perfected, and that the system would be better carried out by giving absolutely the power to nominate and appoint the superintendent to the District commissioners rather than to the board of education.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will my colleague explain the necessity for the increase of the board of trustees from eight to twenty-four members?

Mr. ROWELL. I will explain that.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will my colleague also explain to the House what the present system is?

Mr. ROWELL. Under the present system there are eight districts, with one member of the board from each district. The bill proposes to give to each one of the eight districts in the District of Columbia three members of the board of education.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the necessity for that increase?

Mr. ROWELL. The only necessity is to get a larger number of people in the localities where the schools are interested in the schools—to bring our system down to the people in the several localities; the idea being that the teachers selected for any particular locality will really be recommended by the three members of the board living in that special locality of the city.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will my colleague allow me to ask him this question? Will not each one of these three members coming from each district be particularly anxious to have a school-house built in that district, and get the money of the Government for that district?

Mr. ROWELL. I think that would be a very good anxiety. The more school-houses we have the better will we be off. We have not enough of them anywhere in the country; and it is no objection to my mind to this bill that under it you have parties interested in building school-houses and obtaining good teachers. The objection I have to the bill is that it absolutely puts the nomination of the executive officer, the man to whom the commissioners must look for their knowledge, into the hands of the board of education instead of into the hands of the commissioners themselves. By retaining the nomination of the superintendent in the hands of the commissioners themselves we obtain a harmony of the system with what exists in the various States. We will then have a dove-tailed system, bringing the appointment of teachers down to the smallest number of people, and having above them, as in the States, a superintendent not selected by the representative of this small number, but by the commissioners, and so harmonizing the school system with the system of government in the District.

For that reason, while I approve heartily and shall support the general features of the bill, believing it to be a great improvement upon the present system, I do believe that to give the nomination of the superintendent to the board of education is to take away from the schools of this District the opportunity to be improved as they ought to be. I am not satisfied that they have the best system here now, that the schools of Washington are what they ought to be, or are equal to the schools in the best-regulated cities of the country. I believe that by giving the commissioners power to select the best executive officer possible, without regard to local patronage or local influences, we shall get a better system, one which will improve the schools faster than any other and will make the schools of Washington city what they ought to be—the best schools in the United States. For these reasons I shall support the amendment in that particular, and shall heartily support all the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman sits down I should like to have an explanation of the existing powers of the board of education, and of the changes proposed by this bill.

Mr. ROWELL. There is a good deal of dispute as to the existing powers of the board. It has been claimed in time past that the board had the power to appoint all the teachers and make all the school regulations, the appointment of the superintendent being in the commissioners themselves. Within the last year or two it has been claimed by the commissioners that the power of appointing teachers, fixing their salaries, and regulating them generally, is in the District commissioners, and that the board of education as it now exists is simply advisory. There is some dispute as to the interpretation of the law. The passage of this bill will settle that controversy.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BARBOUR. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is a matter of too grave importance to be hastily carried through this House. The interests of over 30,000 school children in this District are involved, and it seems to me that when a bill of this kind is presented to the House it should be accompanied with a report of a character to enlighten the House as to the reasons for the proposed legislation. When I take up the report presented by the District committee I find that they assign no reason whatever for this proposed change. I find that they do not, in their report, allege the existence of any evils under the present management. The only cause that is assigned for this proposed legislation, so far as I can learn, is the letter and petition which have been presented to the House by the chairman of the committee and read by the Clerk. Now, Mr. Speaker, I claim that that petition and that letter do not represent the sentiment of the people of the District of Columbia.

In support of this statement I desire to call the attention of the House to extracts which I shall read from the Washington Critic and the Washington Star of December 9, showing the manner in which the committee was gotten up and its authority to speak for the District of Columbia. I read first from the Critic:

As was to be expected from such hasty work, dissatisfaction with the report was at once expressed. It was claimed that the list included only five from East Washington and three from South Washington. While in the warmth of debate over this matter a cool-headed man moved to adjourn for a week, and, the chairman putting the question, it was carried; and the meeting will accordingly meet on next Wednesday evening, when the committee's report will be considered.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is an indication that that committee and the letter and petition which have been presented to the House this morning are the results of hasty and ill-advised action on the part of a few persons who are seeking to obtain political power in connection with the school system of the District. I desire now to call attention to some statements which appear in the Washington Star of the same date, and which are in the line of the extract which I have just read from the Critic. I read a paragraph from the Star:

Mr. Pelham—and, by the way, it appears that this Mr. Pelham is a gentleman who has taken an active part in connection with this committee—Mr. Pelham objected to the adoption of the report. In the first place, he said there were but few people present at the meeting in comparison with the great number in the city. Another reason was that this meeting did not represent the 200,000 people of this city in any respect, either as to numbers, as to wealth, or as to inteligence.

Now, I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with this gentleman, who, it seems, is a resident of the city, but he states boldly that the persons who constituted that meeting did not represent the 200,000 people of this District, did not represent either the wealth or the intelligence of the District; yet the action taken at the meeting is the only reason assigned by the chairman of this committee for this proposed legislation.

Now, it is a safe principle for us to act on in legislation, never to attempt to enact a new law unless there is some grave reason for it. Unless the District Committee can show to the members of this House that there are some evils existing under the present system in regard to the school board and the schools of the District, it seems to me wise, Mr. Speaker, to leave matters as they are. I claim from the investigation I have made that there is no reason for changing the existing state of affairs; and in support of this I desire to have the Clerk read a statement which I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read, as follows:

It is with great pleasure that the Capital calls the attention of the people of Washington to the improved condition of the public schools and the excellence of school work done during the past year, as exhibited in the closing exercises that have just been held. It is the testimony of all who have had the privilege to be present at these exercises that marked progress has been made during the past year under Superintendent Powell, and that the schools were never in so good a condition as now. The teachers especially feel that this is the case and are encouraged in their work thereby. We are glad to observe that Commissioner Webb, who has charged himself especially with the duty of looking after the schools, has been present at the closing of many of them, has delivered the diplomas in person, and made addresses to the pupils. It will be a pleasure to all our citizens to know that so much care is being exercised in the management of the schools, and that there is so much reason to be satisfied with what has been accomplished during the past year.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, that article represents, I think, accurately and honestly the sentiment of this District, as expressed at the close of the school year. It is the sentiment of all who have investigated the schools and watched their progress under the superintendency of Professor Powell, that they have never been in better condition than they are now.

When I learned that the District Committee proposed to call up this educational bill to-day, I sent to Commissioner Webb a letter, which I desire to have the Clerk read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 10, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Is House bill No. 9125, "to create a school-board for the District of Columbia and to prescribe its powers and duties," including subdivision 2 of section 2 of said bill, which directs the mode of appointing the superintendent of instruction, favored by the District commissioners?

Second. Will the proposed increase of the board of education to twenty-four persons instead of nine, as under existing law, add to the efficiency of the management of the schools of the District?

Third. What is the condition of the schools under present management?

Respectfully, yours,

A. J. HOPKINS.

Hon. W. B. WEBB,
District Commissioner.

Mr. HOPKINS. In response to that letter I received a communication, which I desire the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 11, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant came to hand this morning. In reply I would say, first, that House bill No. 9125, to create a school-board, &c., and particularly subdivision 2 of section 2, directing the mode of selecting superintendents of schools, is not favored by the District commissioners.

Second. The proposed increase of the board of education from nine to twenty-four persons will not increase the efficiency of the management of the schools, but, in the opinion of the commissioners, will greatly detract from that efficiency.

Third. The condition of the schools under their present management is excellent. The commissioners say this without hesitation and without fear of contradiction. The present superintendent is a most efficient, capable man, and gives all of his energies singly and entirely to the advancement of the schools.

I inclose you herewith two letters, one to Mr. BARBOUR, the chairman of the Committee of the House on the District of Columbia, and the other to Mr. INGALLS, chairman of the Senate committee of District affairs. These letters will show just what the commissioners said about the matter of school legislation at their respective dates. You will perceive that the commissioners distinctly deny any intention to recommend legislation. I wish to say now that with the experience of the working of the present system, as interpreted by them, the commissioners are decidedly of opinion that nothing would be more detrimental to the excellence and harmony of the schools than the enactment of House bill No. 9125.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. WEBB.

Hon. A. J. HOPKINS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, the House will see from the article I first sent to the desk to be read, and from these letters, that there is no reason existing for this proposed legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. As he is a member of the District committee——

Mr. HOPKINS. No, I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desired to ask some gentleman who is a member of the committee whether there have been brought to the attention of the committee any complaints as to the management of the schools in this District.

Mr. HOPKINS. Although I am not a member of the committee, I can answer that question; and I say emphatically, no. Since Professor Powell, the present superintendent, has had charge of the schools, the work of the school system has been an unbroken success. It has been a pleasure as well as an honor to me to know Professor Powell for many years. He was for fifteen years superintendent of the public schools of my city before he was called to this new field; and in my judgment there is no man in America better qualified to take charge of the schools of the District of Columbia than the present superintendent. He is a ripe scholar, and a man of large and varied experience in school matters, and is enthusiastically devoted to the cause of education. He comes here independent of politics, and without any other interest than to render the schools of the District efficient, as efficient as we have them in Illinois, or in any other State in the Union. He is an educator, pure and simple.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Are we to understand that this bill is in effect simply to get rid of a man who is in the way of certain gentlemen?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir, that is what I understand to be the fact.

Mr. COBB. There is nothing in the bill authorizing such a statement.

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand there are in the District of Columbia a few discontented spirits who desire to get on this school-board—not, in my judgment, with a view to add to the efficiency of the schools, but for their own private ends. Among the men who have been most persistently lobbying this bill is one in particular, who, as I know, is without a dollar's worth of property in the District, and without a child to send to the schools. Yet he has been persistently laboring, in season and out of season, for the passage of this bill. As I have already said, unless the District committee can show to this House some evil existing in the present state of the school affairs, it would be bad policy to attempt any new legislation.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asked my colleague [Mr. ROWELL] whether there is any trouble between the board of school trustees and the commissioners under the existing law. I can answer that inquiry. Under the present law we have nine trustees. These men come from different portions of the District. They represent the different localities and the different elements in the city of Washington as fully as they would be represented if the number should be increased to twenty-four. In addition to that these men are in harmony with the District commissioners, who are charged in the first place with the proper administration of school affairs here. Now, when we have a law that gives nine trustees, in addition to the three District commissioners, this number being supplemented by the school superintendent and by the supervising principals, I ask whether these officers are not numerous enough to look after the interests of the schools.

Mr. GALLINGER. How does the number correspond with that in other cities as large as this?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not able to state.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very much less, I believe.

Mr. HOPKINS. It may be less; but the gentleman will observe that in the cities in the various States the people elect their boards of trustees, and here they do not. So that this is simply a proposition to increase the number, without the prospect of obtaining, so far as I can see, any advantage not now possessed.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is most vicious in character. It is not made, and the object of it is not for the good of the schools of the District, but for the purpose of finding places for those men who desire to be put on this board. I hope, for one, in the interest of the schools of this District, that the members of this House will say to these men who are seeking to pass it through the House, it shall not be allowed to pass until they come here and show there is some wrong to be righted. If that be not done let the House say to them the bill never shall be passed. I yield now for twenty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman sits down I would like to have some information, as doubtless other members would, on this one point. As I understand the gentleman from Illinois, the board of education in this city under existing law is merely an advisory board in its educational management.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not understand it in that way. I understand there is perfect harmony between them and the board of commissioners.

Mr. DINGLEY. But is the board of education anything more than an advisory board?

Mr. COBB. That is the general rule.

Mr. CANNON. Is not that enough?

Mr. DINGLEY. That does not constitute ordinarily the powers of a board of education. It is proposed to change that for a board having educational management, leaving out the business of financial management. Is that the change proposed?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not entirely.

Mr. DINGLEY. But largely so.

Mr. HOPKINS. It leaves it in some respects as before. These parties can hire teachers with the approval of the commissioners. It creates in no sense an advisory board, but it does increase the number.

Mr. DINGLEY. This question of numbers is of secondary consideration. I want to know what the changes of powers provided in this bill are in regard to the board of education. It is now simply an advisory board, and of no more consequence than any other advisory board. Does the bill put into the hands of the board of education as created the educational management of the District?

Mr. HOPKINS. In answer to the gentleman I will state, as the board now exist they exercise substantially the powers proposed to be placed in this board of twenty-four men. The difference is, this law increases the number to twenty-four, so as to render the board more liable to the creation of political combinations for selfish purposes.

Mr. DINGLEY. That hardly answers the question, not in respect to the increase of number, but as to the change in the power of the board.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not satisfy the gentleman. I must send him to the first sources of information, and let him examine the law for himself.

Mr. BUCHANAN. How much easier for twenty-four men are these combinations than for nine men?

Mr. HOPKINS. Very much easier.

Mr. BARBOUR. I wish to make an explanation.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] undertook to say to this House this movement had its intention and animus in affecting the present superintendency of the public schools of the District.

Now, sir, I desire to say as chairman of this committee, and as being somewhat cognizant of the proceedings in reference to the District of Columbia, that no such purpose has ever been manifest so far as the chairman or any gentleman upon that committee is concerned. I have never heard a word on that subject; and, while I know it is cheap for gentlemen to get up and impeach the motives of others——

Mr. HOPKINS (interrupting). So far as the chairman of the committee or the committee itself is concerned I did not mean my language to apply to them; but had reference to certain lobbyists outside, who have taken active part in this agitation.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have only risen, Mr. Speaker, to disclaim on my part as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia any such purpose as that alleged by the gentleman. I do not even know the man who is at present the superintendent of the public schools in this district. I know nothing whatever of his politics. I have, I think, heard in a general way that he is a Republican. I suppose that is the reason you are taking such an interest in the matter. It is enough for me to know, without reference to what a man's politics may be, that he is an efficient and faithful official; and if he is, it does not matter whether he be a Democrat or a Republican. His qualifications and the faithful discharge of his duty are the only tests I would require.

Mr. LONG. Are not the twenty-four members to be appointed by the commissioners?

Mr. BARBOUR. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LONG. Then the commissioners will control in the appointment of the superintendent, just as they do now?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly; in the first instance, the trustees are to be appointed by the commissioners, and then the trustees nominate the superintendent.

Mr. LONG. Then the present superintendent is in no more danger under the proposed plan than he is now?

Mr. BARBOUR. None whatever. He is just in the position that he is in now, so far as that is concerned. The whole power is vested in the commissioners originally, except that slight feature about the trustees making a nomination. In other respects they control it all.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question in good faith and for information simply. Who controls this appointment now? Do the commissioners control or is the control lodged in the nine trustees?

Mr. COBB. Why, in the commissioners; there is no question of that.

Mr. BARBOUR. Some question was raised last year in which the respective powers of the trustees and the commissioners was involved, and the commissioners assumed and maintained that the whole power was with them.

Mr. CANNON. So they control?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, sir; absolutely. They control now, and the same power would remain under the terms of this bill.

So far as the other remark of the gentleman from Illinois is concerned, that in reference to the people who have appeared in this thing, I only wish to say that this measure has come to our committee time and again, and from large and influential bodies of citizens of the District. It has come before us from people who have a marked interest in the good administration of the public-school system in this city; from ministers of the gospel, merchants, business men, and people generally who are interested in the education of their children. They are the people who came.

I have had little to do with the matter myself. The bill was reported by another gentleman on the committee, and I have only taken charge as the organ of the committee. But so far as personal motives are concerned, I disclaim them utterly, and I know nothing of the politics of any man connected with the matter, and care less.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire to occupy so much of the time as has been yielded to me, but I am not sufficiently advised as to the necessity for this measure from the debate which has so far taken place as to induce me to support it.

The first question to be considered, when enacting legislation, is whether there is an abuse to be corrected, some reform to be worked out. I am not aware that there is in the District of Columbia a condition of things, so far as the public schools are concerned, which requires the interposition of Congress to remedy existing wrongs or correct alleged abuses. I have been accustomed to hear the statement from time to time that the school system of the District of Columbia was a good one; that the schools were well officered, had good teachers, a proper system of instruction, and that, in fact, the whole system was satisfactory to the people of the District. If it were otherwise I would certainly be in favor of any proposition looking to a greater efficiency in the school system.

I am in favor of education in its largest sense; I am in favor of aiding every effort in the direction of the efficiency of the public schools in the District of Columbia, so that the children may have an opportunity of attending school for at least eight or nine months in the year. I have been informed that the system, as now in operation here, is giving satisfaction; that the present board of trustees is composed of gentlemen of high character; that they are representative men; that they are discharging faithfully and conscientiously the duties imposed upon them, and that the public schools are in a flourishing condition. I do not know whether or not the board, as now composed, is Democratic or Republican in its political sentiments. I do not know anything about its political sentiments. I do not want to know anything on that subject. It is a question that has no business here. I want to keep the school system entirely out of the domain of party politics. Nor do I know whether there is any movement contemplated by this bill to get rid of the present superintendent of the public schools. I have no knowledge upon that point. I only know that there is a superintendent, have heard his name mentioned, and have heard no complaint of the management. But as to whether or not some other gentleman could better manage the schools than he is a question which I am willing to leave entirely in the hands of the school trustees to deal with. It is a matter that does not concern me.

Mr. COBB. That is not the law. That is what this bill proposes to do. The commissioners make the appointment under the old law.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Indiana corrects me by stating that the commissioners of the District appoint the superintendent under the present law. That I think is quite as well, and I am perfectly willing that the commissioners should have this power.

The bill under consideration proposes to increase the school board of this city from the number of nine, as now constituted, to twenty-four. The school board of nine, it seems to me, is quite large enough to administer the affairs of the school system of the District. If you make twenty-four the number that shall constitute this board it will cease to be a board and become a legislative body. They will be compelled to organize as a legislative body; they will be compelled to adopt certain rules, to have secretaries, to have a sergeant-at-arms, to have doorkeepers and desks, and the whole paraphernalia of a legislative system is at once instituted. And as you enlarge the number of these executive officers you diminish the individual responsibility of each. It seems to me that a school board consisting of nine gentlemen is large enough to administer properly the affairs of the schools in this District. Unless gentlemen can show that there is some existing evil to be cured, some great wrong that ought to be remedied, I propose for my part to let well enough alone. I have heard no complaint myself—gentlemen on the committee may have heard it—I have heard, myself, no complaint of the management of the schools in this city; and, as I have said, I prefer to let well enough alone rather than to enact a new system of legislation with regard to the schools of the District.

There is no branch of the public service that ought to be dealt with more carefully than the public school system; and wherever I find a board discharging its duties and giving satisfaction in that respect, I think it is well enough to rest there. If these gentlemen are competent to manage these affairs—and I believe nobody has brought any charges against the personnel of the present board—let them proceed with their duties, and let the school system of the District go on as it has been managed heretofore.

I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] who has called up this bill, and also for the District Committee, who have reported it, but it seems to me there are other matters in the District of Columbia that are calling for relief that should have been brought up for consideration rather than this matter relating to the enlargement of the school-board. There are many matters in the District that ought to be legislated upon. There are many matters here that are demanding the attention of Congress; and I hope this bill will be laid aside until some future time, and that the House will proceed to the consideration of other matters pertaining to the District which really require legislation at this time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to say a few words in justification of the action of the committee in reference to this bill. So far as I am concerned I have no particular interest in it one way or the other. It is simply a question whether or not certain rights which the people of this District desire to be put into their own hands shall be given to them in the management of the schools or whether the whole management shall be intrusted to the three District commissioners in whose selection the people of the District have no voice.

It has been said there have been no complaints against the present management of the school system. I say the man who makes such a statement must certainly have lived in this District in a state of dense ignorance. He can neither have spoken to the people nor have read the newspapers. The committee has been waited upon by a large delegation of the most prominent and intelligent citizens of the city and of the District, who have importuned the committee to bring this bill up and have some legislation on this subject. They have finally agreed with the commissioners on this bill as a measure that would be satisfactory to them. And while the commissioners are themselves not in favor of the passage of it, they say that if the Congress of the United States and the people of the District are in favor of further legislation they do not feel called upon to make any opposition to it.

There are two changes in the law which this bill proposes, which seem to me important. The first is there shall be three persons appointed from the residents of each of the eight existing school divisions of the city. As the matter now stands the commissioners appoint nine school trustees, all of whom may be taken from one district, leaving the other districts without any representation, so far as locality is concerned. This bill provides for an increased number, and provides that the persons on the board shall be respectively residents of the district from which they are appointed.

The next and the only other amendment of consequence is that relating to the appointment of a superintendent, who is to be nominated by these trustees, and whose nomination is to be confirmed by the commissioners. As the law now stands, the whole matter is in the hands of the commissioners to select whomsoever they choose, without reference to the nomination of the board of trustees, and without consulting the wishes of the people. That power, I am informed, is exercised by one of the commissioners. Now, the simple question in reference to that is whether the people whose children are going to school shall have any voice whatever in the selection of the man who shall be the superintendent of the schools.

Now, if this gentleman that my friend speaks about is such a fine educator, the chances are that the people of this District will have sense enough to see it, and there can be no difficulty about his securing the position, if he is the man that he is represented to be, and if, as my friend states, there are but few people opposed to him. It is unfortunate for this bill that the discussion should have been given a personal turn, and it is exceedingly unfortunate for this superintendent that, in considering a matter of legislation which concerns the best interests of all the good people of this District, he should be brought forward here and represented as the man who is instigating all the opposition. I trust that members will determine this question upon the merits of the bill, without any reference whatever to the consideration of how it may affect the present superintendent of schools. I know nothing of him; I do not know him personally; I never heard of him before this occasion, and I desire to say that, so far as I have any knowledge as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, there is no purpose to injure him or any other person connected with the public schools. This bill is simply the result of an effort on the part of citizens of the District to exercise some influence in the management of the schools in which they are so greatly interested.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that, so far as the present superintendent of schools is concerned, I do not know whether he favors this bill or not, nor do I know whether it is in his interest or adverse to his interest. My opposition to the bill is entirely independent and outside of any consideration for the present superintendent of schools.

Mr. HOPKINS was recognized.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the balance of my time, and will yield a portion of it to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] after the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] shall have concluded.

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois, Mr. CANNON.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, so far as the interest of the presen. superintendent of schools is concerned, I have nothing to do with itt I have neither seen that gentleman, nor heard from him with reference to this bill. He may be a very competent man, or there may be others far more competent than he is. I do not discuss the bill from that standpoint.

This District, as we all understand, is under the control of Congress. There are two ways in which we can exercise that control. One way is directly, the other is by allowing the people of the District to control.

We have tried both ways. After the people had exercised control of the District through a legislative body authorized by Congress for some years, it resulted in very considerable scandals, and Congress, in its wisdom, saw proper to repeal the law and resume direct control of the District, and we now proceed from time to time, upon the recommendation of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to deal directly with District affairs. Under this system we have constituted a board of three District commissioners and made them responsible for substantially the whole management of the District. Of course it is not practicable for Congress to act directly in matters of administration. We must choose agents of some kind.

Now, as long as we retain the existing system, I think it is the part of wisdom to have as few agents as possible—to let the power remain lodged where it is now, in the hands of the District commissioners, who are nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and to hold them to a strict responsibility. If you divide the power, giving a part of it to a school board of twenty-four members, and then, perhaps, giving the management of the police to another board of twenty-four members, and so on, dividing up this power, we will soon reach a stage where nobody will be responsible. I understand that the law as it now is gives the commissioners control of school matters, as of other District matters, under Congress, they making annual reports to Congress.

It is true that they have a board of education, but the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has told us that the commissioners claim that they have exclusive power and that the board of education is merely advisory. I say again, I think that is a proper way in which to manage District matters. What does this bill propose to do? To divide responsibility? Yes. But it proposes also that the same District commissioners who are now responsible to Congress, having an advisory board of education to instruct their consciences or judgment—that these same commissioners shall appoint the twenty-four school trustees with power to remove them at any time, and then that the trustees, after their appointment, shall appoint the superintendent of schools, if not the teachers, subject to confirmation by the District commissioners. Now, I suspect that if you gave the District commissioners the power to appoint a board of this kind, it would be a board which would prove very subservient to the commissioners. That body, once appointed, would be a very convenient one for the commissioners to shove off responsibility upon when anything went wrong.

The creature of the commissioners, the trustees when once created, would serve to relieve the commissioners of their just responsibility, so that if errors crept in, or if maladministration should arise, the commissioners would be able to say, "Well, Congress has taken away from us the power, and we are not responsible." So far as I am concerned I am not willing to legislate in that way. If this board of school trustees is to be created at all, then amend this bill so as to give the President the power to appoint them, or lodge the power of appointment in the supreme court of the District, make them entirely independent of the District commissioners, and let them report directly to Congress. Then you have responsibility. I think we had better let the law remain as it is; but if it is to be changed, let us give the power to agents that shall be independent of each other for their official existence.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to feel called upon to say anything on this bill, though I am a member of the committee that reported it. But there have been made on this floor one or two statements to which, as a member of that committee, I wish to reply. One was the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that the object of this bill is to legislate out of office the present superintendent of the schools of this District. If there be any such purpose in this bill, I join the chairman of our committee [Mr. BARBOUR] in disclaiming all knowledge of it; and I believe a similar disclaimer could be made for the whole committee.

But the gentleman from Illinois, when corrected on that point, suggested that such was the purpose of the "lobbyists who are pushing the bill." I do not know of any "lobbyists who are pushing the bill;" if there be such, I am not aware of it. I am aware that certain citizens of this District are interested in this subject, and one of them is no less a person than the chief justice of the supreme court of the District. He has sent to the chairman of the committee a communication in which he speaks of "a memorial numerously signed by citizens of the District," and forwarded by him.

He speaks of those citizens as "among the best known and most intelligent in the District," and says, "if any body of citizens here is competent to represent the wishes of our people in respect to the proposed school legislation, and to give a trustworthy opinion as to its propriety and necessity at the present time, these memorialists are that body." So if there be any lobbyists here they are the most respectable citizens of this District, headed by the chief-justice of the District supreme court.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether in that letter the chief justice in terms approves of this bill.

Mr. GROUT. His language is—and I read again from the letter:

> I take this occasion to renew on behalf of the citizens' committee our approval of the school-board bill as reported by your committee.

This statement is signed "D. K. Cartter, chairman." He was chairman of a large meeting of citizens which has been in session more than once; and from that meeting comes the appeal to Congress for legislation on this subject. This will also answer the remark of the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that there did not seem to be any demand for this bill.

One word in reference to some of the provisions of the bill, and I shall have said all I desire to say. The bill simply proposes to carry into effect what, until the present board of commissioners took charge of the affairs of the District, was, under the confused system of laws prevailing here, understood to be the legal rule, as it was certainly the rule which had been followed. That rule was, in the first place, to leave to the board of trustees the appointment of the teachers of the District. When the present board of commissioners came in they announced the discovery of a statute—and the bill introduced to-day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] for the codification of the laws of the District will tend to throw light on this subject, we hope. They claimed that under a certain statute, previously undiscovered, the commissioners were clothed with power to appoint the teachers, and they announced their purpose to exercise that power, taking it from the trustees. Now, this bill lodges that power with the board of trustees.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that there are in this city thirty thousand children of school age. There are six hundred schools and eight school divisions or districts. Gentlemen here say that they think a board of nine trustees, taken perhaps from the same school district in the city, is quite sufficient to administer the school system. This bill proposes to give to each district three trustees, resident within the district. Now there are but nine trustees in all; and they can not represent all the different districts; at least, they are not, as a matter of fact, so selected. Under this bill three trustees will be chosen from each school district; and it will be noticed there are four thousand pupils, or a little less, in each district, there being eight districts in all.

Mr. HOPKINS. Under the existing law are not the members of the board of trustees selected from the different districts?

Mr. GROUT. They may or may not be. In point of fact, they are not so selected now.

It will be noticed that gentlemen from Illinois appear to be especially active in opposition to this bill. I have not heard the voice of any one else raised against it. They say that they are interested in behalf of a certain superintendent of instruction, who, they fear, may be displaced under this bill. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], has very properly suggested that if the present superintendent's reputation in this city as an educator is what is claimed for him he is in no danger. And I say if his work in the schools is not such, and his standing with the parents whose children are in the schools is not such that, with twenty-four men on this school board, selected from the various districts, he can continue to hold the position of school superintendent, then, in the name of popular government, he ought to step down and out. So I believe every man on this floor will say.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Whom are you for?

Mr. GROUT. Whom am I for? I will tell the gentleman whom I am for, always:

> I am for the under dog in the fight,
> Unless the other dog is clearly right.

And this puts me on the side of the disfranchised people of this District, who have no hand in the management of their public schools. And I am for this bill because, after a long and patient investigation of this subject in committee, and from the testimony of prominent citizens who are interested in these school matters, I have been convinced that some legislation of this kind should be adopted.

But if the gentleman wants to know whom I favor for superintendent of schools in this city, I will say I am not the advocate of any particular man for that position. Neither myself nor any other member on this floor has any business with that matter. That will be decided under this bill by the twenty-four school trustees created by it, subject always to the approval of the District commissioners.

Complaint is made that this bill proposes to give to the board of trustees the nomination of superintendent. But the commissioners will have a veto power on the nomination. The appointment must eman ate from the two bodies jointly; and it will be very strange if they can not agree upon a suitable man. Do these three commissioners hold themselves able—they do not claim it, but gentlemen here claim it for them—do the commissioners hold themselves able to attend to all the details of the administration of the government of 200,000 people in this city, that government embracing, as it does, the superintendence of the public works and the police system, as well as of the schools for the education of 30,000 pupils?

It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, for them to give personal supervision to all these matters. From the very nature of the case some one must be intrusted with the details of administration in the different departments of the District government; and who will say that three men in each school district in which, as we have seen, there are about 100 schools and about 4,000 pupils to be instructed, are too many to profitably take charge of the school affairs of that district? And who will say that these trustees ought not to be taken from among the residents of the district which they have in charge?

Who will say that this will not be an improvement upon the present system in which there are but nine trustees for the whole eight districts who may all be taken from some one school district? And who wonders that the people of this city, who pay one-half the taxes for the support of these six hundred schools and the instruction of these thirty thousand pupils, should not be accorded what this bill provides, namely, three resident trustees for each school district, who shall have power to appoint teachers and exercise the further poor privilege of advising, simply advising, the commissioners in the choice of superintendent for the whole school work of the city?

But these gentlemen from Illinois object to this through the fear that if twenty-four men from the different school divisions of the city are admitted to a voice in the matter the present superintendent, who is a citizen of their State, may be displaced. Now will these gentlemen allow the suggestion that possibly they flee while no one is pursuing. But still they are filled with fear, and I can not forbear saying to them in the language of a certain great student of the human heart:

> He either fears his fate too much,
> Or his deserts are small,
> That dares not put it to the touch
> To gain or lose it all.

Now, upon the strength of this comforting assurance, let not the friends of this superintendent longer tremble for his "fate," unless, indeed, his deserts be "small." Mark you, I am saying nothing against this superintendent, for I know nothing about him, except that these gentlemen say he is one of the foremost educators of the country; and I hope he is. If so, no harm will come to him from this board of trustees, who will presumably be taken from among the best men of the city. But remember that these twenty-four men have no power over his appointment except to advise; and remember, also, that they are themselves the creatures of the District commissioners, appointed by them and by them subject to removal at pleasure; and if the commissioners find that they have made such an unfit selection of trustees as that they can not be trusted to advise, coming up as they do from the people, as to who shall be appointed superintendent, then they have the power to remove these men and appoint others who will act more worthily and wisely. This feature is given to the bill to keep it in harmony with the idea that is uppermost in the act creating the present District government, namely, that the whole power of government is vested in the commissioners.

Mr. Speaker, the condition of this District is anomalous, located as it is in the midst of a free representative government, and yet with no power left the people to take any part whatever in the matter of government. The people are taxed, but have no voice whatever in the imposition of the tax, nor in the expenditure of the money thus taken from them. And under the construction given the law by the present commissioners they have no voice whatever in the management of their public schools. Now, for one, while I do not propose to attack the present system of District government, which in many respects works well, I am in favor of extending to the two hundred thousand people of this District the privilege accorded by this bill of having twenty-four of their number placed in charge of their public-school system, and of extending to these twenty-four men the further cheap privilege of advising the commissioners in the appointment of school superintendent.

This will meet the demands of the people of the District, will in no way contravene the supreme administrative authority of the commissioners, and will tend to promote the efficiency of the schools by bringing the people and the commissioners nearer together and more into harmony. It will admit the people to some little part in that important, that dear, work to them, the education of their children. It will be a timely and wise concession to a just and reasonable demand on their part for the exercise of some of the rights and duties of citizenship besides the payment of taxes.

When this bill is understood by the House I believe there will be no question about its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COBB. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that when gentlemen have given this subject the careful consideration it deserves, and which they should do, they will not fail to come to a right conclusion as to what action is required at their hands. There is a peculiar government established in this District, and this bill has grown out of occurrences in reference to which I have some familiarity, although not a member of the committee from which the pending proposition was reported. In the light of that familiarity with the affairs of the District, and in regard to the powers of the Government here, I can account for its production.

Heretofore this District was governed, as now, by three commissioners, with a school board consisting of nineteen members. That was changed some six years ago to nine members. It was thought then that a board of nineteen members was too cumbersome; and I am not sure that theory is not right as to this bill. But that provision in regard to the increase to twenty-four members is an improvement, as I think I can show, on the system as it now stands. That school board, until the past year, employed teachers and janitors, and made necessary improvements in school-houses. They had the power, it seems, to do that. The commissioners gave them that power, and they went on and exercised it from year to year for many years, until this board of commissioners—not the present, but the late board, or some of its members—had to check them. They made a ruling entirely overthrowing the power of the school board. They declared they had no power to do these things, as they supposed they had under the law before. And this bill is in the line of that ruling of the commissioners, by which they assumed to themselves the entire power.

Now, in regard to whether the system is the right one or not, from all we may hear the school system has been well conducted. I do not say it is not well conducted now, but I think it is in danger; and I will show, before I conclude, it is in danger of not being well conducted on the one hand by being limited to the board of commissioners alone. Do you desire the board of commissioners to assume the entire control of the school system here—to employ teachers; not only to build school-houses, but to repair them; to employ janitors—without some one of those more nearly interested approving of the action taken; to select and purchase school-books, and do everything else of the kind, not only hiring the teachers but paying them as well—do you believe, I say, in that system, or do you believe that the representatives of the people, coming up from each school division, can better direct and manage the school system here in this board than it can be done by the board of commissioners? My experience of the commissioners is this; and I think it is the experience of every man who has ever served on the District Committee, or on the Committee on Appropriations, on which latter committee I have had the honor to serve, and to have in charge in the House the bill making appropriations for support of the District. I endeavored then, as did other gentlemen, to find out everything which could be learned in regard to the exact condition of the school system in this District.

I looked into the matter as carefully as I could under the circumstances, and I think I understood the working of the system. I say, then, as I understand it, this can not be done; and what I was about to say is this: that one member of the board of commissioners—and I call the attention of the committee who produced this bill to that fact—that one member of the board of commissioners now controls the whole school system in this District, and has done so for years. That is done for the reason suggested by the gentleman who has just taken his seat—that this is a government by itself, and upon the assumption the government here is in perfection; so that they can build asylums, erect schools, establish sewerage, manage the police force, and do everything else necessary to the government of a great city containing within its limits 200,000 inhabitants. I undertake to say, sir, that no man can overlook the whole of it and understand it as he should, and practice it as the commissioners would no doubt like to do, but are unable.

Now you virtually, as the law stands, vest the whole power over the school system in the hands of one man. If he happens to run wrong, there is no corrective power behind him or elsewhere; and as this bill provides a board of what I may call supervisors, or in other words trustees, coming up from each of the school districts to advise as to the building of school-houses, to advise as to the employment of teachers, as to the repair of school-houses, as to the employment of janitors, to advise as to the text-books to be used, men representing each of these school districts, I ask is it not a good provision. Is it not worthy the consideration of this House to provide that the one man in charge of the school system shall be advised at least by the people directly interested in the perfection of the school system?

There is not now, and never was, and I hope never will be, politics in the school question. It has no place there. I would employ a Republican as readily as a Democrat in that connection; and the man who would not do it, or the man who would make his selection of teachers based on political considerations, is not fit to occupy a position in any department of the school system, no matter how insignificant. It should not be a question of politics; but the best material should be engaged to attend to the duties, no matter where found.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is more in harmony, I take it, with the public sentiment of the District, and with the spirit of our institutions; and while I would not go back to the system of fifteen years since, under the one-man government, the board of public works and legislative council, for I do not want that, I do claim that the present system should be assimilated, whenever it can be, to popular government, especially when it is plain that assimilation will produce good results, and reflect the will of the people who are directly interested. But they say there is a lobby here in connection with this matter. For my part, I have never known anything affecting the District in which there was not a lobby interested; but we have to strike out in the right line and do our duty, without reference to what may be attempted in such cases.

I know that certain men are opposed to this bill. I know there are men who are not only opposed to it but who have ever been opposed to a school system in this District. I know some of these men. But, Mr. Speaker, I know, also, that the men whom I have found standing up here in favor of this bill when I stood by the school system when it was under my charge, are the same men that I find now coming up and asking the passage of this bill. I know, also, from my own knowledge of the men, that they are the men who have devoted time and attention to the school system; who are interested in perfecting it, interested in securing the best skill as teachers; men who have children of their own to educate, and who watch the system carefully and industriously.

These men favor the passage of this bill, because they say it will give the board of commissioners the advice of the best men in the city through the trustees. They will get together and advise the board of commissioners, and thereby good will result.

I do not believe any board of commissioners ever existed here or will ever exist which ought to have committed to it the exclusive control of the school system of the District. Their time is usually taken up in other matters, such as I have suggested; and as a result they leave the school system to one man, who acts or may act possibly under the advice of some friend or friends, and not being controlled by the action of a body such as this bill suggests is always liable to get wrong.

Why, they say this bill provides for the removal of the superintendent of public instruction. So it does, and so it should. How? It requires two-thirds of the board of trustees to recommend to the board of commissioners a man or suitable person as superintendent of public instruction, and then the board reject or not as they please. Is there anything wrong about that? Is it not well that these twenty-four men, coming from the eight school divisions in this District, should meet and advise with the board of commissioners as to whom they believe is best capable of taking charge of the whole school system? Is there any man in the world who would raise objection to that? It does not give them exclusive power to appoint the superintendent of the public schools. It gives them power to employ teachers, and that is right.

Why, in my own State this system prevails, and our school system is not excelled on the face of the earth. We have the best school system, in my judgment, that exists in any State of the Union, and I will not except even the great State of Massachusetts, with all its interests in education and with all its investments in school property. We have over $11,000,000 as a school fund now in our State, and it goes out to every child, allowing them six months' time each year at the public schools for purposes of education.

But on the subject of teachers—to go a little into the details of that system—our law provides a director for each school-house. That director calls the people together—those who send their children to this school—and there they take a vote as to whom they will select for a teacher. We have not found it to work badly, but, on the contrary, it has given entire satisfaction. Our people are satisfied, our schools are prosperous, and our children are being educated. Then why should we not extend such a system here? Who would not be willing to send for the three trustees from each division—numbering eight in the District—and bring them to the board of commissioners to give their opinion as to what should be done? I take it that it is a system entirely in harmony with our popular government. It will produce good results; it will produce wholesome fruits, and take the power out of the hands of the commissioners.

Why, Mr. Speaker, when I read a decision of the board of commissioners a year ago declaring they had absolute control of the public school system here, I was shocked. I did not believe it was sound law, and do not now. I believe it to be an assumption of power on their part that ought not to have been tolerated; and hence it is the duty of Congress to take that assumption of power away from them and make the letter of the law plain in that respect, so there can be no mistake in future.

Mr. COMPTON rose.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move the previous question. I think the bill has been debated long enough.

Mr. COMPTON. All right.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BARBOUR. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has had his ample share of debate. There are other matters to get along with, and we want this bill disposed of.

Mr. HOPKINS. I only desire to have five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] to allow me to propose an amendment striking out the authority to the commissioners to appoint the board, and intrusting it to the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am opposed to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. As I understand, this came up as a question of power between the commissioners and the people. It was finally agreed there should be a compromise—that the nomination should proceed from the citizens and the appointment from the commissioners. That compromise was originally suggested by one of the commissioners. I thought it was a fair thing to do. I was opposed to the bill until that point was reached; but when it was left to one party to nominate and to the other to appoint, I thought it a fair compromise, and that no harm could be done. I insist on my motion for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. Then the gentleman does not yield for my amendment?

Mr. BARBOUR. No, sir.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 91; noes 33.

Mr. HOPKINS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. CRISP]. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR].

The House again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 122, noes 41.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 24, noes 95.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, on which the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be till next Wednesday at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS.]

Mr. GROUT. It seems to me that on a bill of this kind it is hardly profitable to enter upon filibustering proceedings. Let me propose, as a member of the committee——

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Vermont desires to submit a proposition.

Mr. GROUT. That is what I desire to do. If gentlemen object, of course they can prevent me from submitting the proposition. It is to allow all amendments, which gentlemen say they desire, to be offered at this time, and that by unanimous consent those amendments be received and voted on without discussion. The committee, I am satisfied, will be content with that arrangement, which will permit the bill to come to a vote on its merits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont proposes that by unanimous consent gentlemen who desire to offer amendments to the pending bill may be permitted to do so, and have a vote on them, notwithstanding the fact that the previous question has been ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. BARBOUR. Without debate?

Mr. GROUT. Without debate. That was my proposition.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think if consent be given to that proposition there should be an understanding that there will be no factious opposition to the bill; otherwise there will be nothing gained by our side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state the proposition. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having amendments to offer—the Chair supposes amendments that would be in order under the rules of the House—be allowed to offer them, and that they be voted on without debate.

Mr. BARBOUR. I ask, for information, how many amendments are proposed to be offered.

The SPEAKER. There has been no agreement reached as yet.

Mr. JAMES. I have one which I desire to offer.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And I have one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I shall object, unless there is an understanding that further opposition to the bill is withdrawn.

Mr. GROUT. Further factious opposition.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The difficulty about that is that those desiring to offer amendments are not making factious opposition.

Mr. DUNHAM. There are members of this House who are opposed to this bill, anyway, even if the suggested amendments were adopted.

Mr. ROGERS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Wednesday at 12 o'clock.

The question being taken there were—aye 1, noes 108.

Mr. HOPKINS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. GROUT. I call for the yeas and nays. It will save time.

The yeas and nays were ordered—twenty-four members voting therefor, more than one fifth of the last vote.

EEL RIVER BAND OF MIAMI INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the 8th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $22,000, prepared in the office of Indian affairs, to provide for the payment of the Eel River band of Miami Indians of a principal sum in lieu of all annuities now received by them under existing treaty stipulations. The matter is presented to the consideration of Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 13, 1886.

Mr. DUNHAM. Would it be in order to have the papers read which the President transmits?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would not be in order.

The message, with accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL WEDNESDAY.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 0, nays 229, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—0.

NAYS—229.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees;

A bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy, and to fix their pay;

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
December 13, 1886.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY, late a Representative from the State of New York; and

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the appointment of a joint committee to take order for attending the funeral of the deceased at his residence in the State of New York, and that the members of the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore of the Senate had appointed Mr. MILLER, Mr. RANSOM, and Mr. VOORHEES the committee on the part of the Senate under the foregoing resolution.

SCHOOL-BOARD DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The House resumed the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. For the purpose of testing the sense of the House on this bill, I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to lay a bill on the table after the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It is. The motion to lay on the table is the only motion directly referring to the measure itself which, under the rules of the House, would be in order at this time.

Mr. BARBOUR. I hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The motion must be decided without debate.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 54, noes 94.

Mr. SPRINGER. No quorum having voted, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. BARBOUR. I think we shall save time by having the yeas and nays. I call for them.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 47 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 43, noes 178, not voting 100; as follows:

Mr. SPOONER. I present a petition of the German Aid Society of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for a change in the naturalization laws of the United States and for a uniform system of suffrage laws throughout the country. This paper is addressed to the members of Congress from Wisconsin, but it comes to me with an official request that it be presented in the Senate. Coming, as it does, from a society of German-American citizens and relating to a subject of great interest, I ask that it be read at length and that it be then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be read and so referred.

The petition was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

MEMORIAL AND RESOLUTIONS.

To our Representatives in Congress and Legislature:

The philanthropic relations which the members of the German Aid Society have assumed toward new arrivals in this country can not possibly conflict with other obligations which as citizens of this Republic we owe to ourselves and the community in which we live. Paramount among these we recognize the duty of perpetuating our liberal institutions, by fostering an intelligent exercise of the elective franchise, this highest prerogative of American citizenship. We therefore feel justified in advancing the following sentiments, which are deemed timely, although non-political.

Experience has demonstrated that the people of these United States are still far from being a nation, because the conglomeration of native and foreign elements, which compose the population, has not as yet had sufficient time and opportunity to crystallize within itself, and to become one people, possessed of national character, prompted by common national impulses.

Not that we regret the broad liberality, which, for a century and more, has invited the oppressed of all nations to find refuge and homes on the American shores—quite the contrary.

This liberal policy has furnished to a great extent the very nerve and sinew for building up our present wealth and prosperity. It has converted a vast wilderness into a grand country, which we may justly be proud of when compared with others. And therefore it would be unjust if we found fault with any legislation of the past which was deemed advisable to direct immigration to our Western States.

But the condition of things has materially changed, and the time, in our opinion, has now come when (first of all) the suffrage laws need modification and national uniformity!

While we believe it to be highly improper to interpose a check or barrier to the settlement of those who earnestly mean to assimilate with the existing condition of things, and to make this a permanent home for themselves and children, and while we stand ready—in the future as in the past—to extend to all of these a hearty welcome, still there is no further necessity for artificially stimulating immigration to this country, and no satisfactory reason could possibly be assigned for conferring upon the foreign comer a State citizenship (16 Wis., 443), which entitles him to vote and to participate in all elections—national and local, executive and judicial—after but one year's residence, and while still unfamiliar with the wants, the laws, and even the language of the country.

A great many of our political vicissitudes—yea, the constant tremulousness, so characteristic in our public affairs—are, in our opinion, largely attributable to the fact that, after but a short abode among us, any one—who has declared his intention—may participate, alike with all the rest, in Federal, State, and municipal matters—yea, even the election of a President—when not as yet a citizen of the United States, even by name, and while still a foreigner in thought and purpose.

Such a State citizenship, entitling one to vote—yea, even to hold office, State and local, in advance of a naturalization under the United States laws, is an incongruity which ought to be abolished, the sooner the better!

True citizenship, and an intelligent exercise of the elective franchise, whether in State or in national affairs, presupposes a naturalization, not only in law or fiction, but in point of fact; and indispensable thereto seems to be a residence sufficiently long to become familiar with our institutions and the common language of the country.

We, the undersigned, most of us naturalized citizens of this Republic, therefore believe a revision of the respective laws to be timely, and we request that naturalization and suffrage be made to conform throughout the country to an uniform standard, so that the right to vote at national, State, or municipal elections be hereafter conferred only on those who have resided in the United States for at least five years and become citizens in accordance with the laws of Congress, applicable to naturalization.

Consequently, we resolve that our sister societies and other kindred associations be requested to join in the promulgation of the above sentiments, and that a copy thereof be forwarded to our Representatives in Congress and State Legislature.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE KOEPPEN,
President.

AUGUST STIRN,
J. L. BARTELS,
JOHN C. KOCH,
Vice-Presidents.

DR. LEO STERN,
C. A. MEISSNER,
G. E. WEISS,
H. ILHARDT,
F. W. COTZHAUSEN,

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that appropriations be made for naval fortifications at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of H. S. King, Charles L. Georgei, and 105 other citizens of New York, praying for legislation authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the improvement of the Harlem River, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a resolution, adopted by the Saint Paul (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring such legislation as will suppress cattle diseases in the States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 245) to prevent frauds on American manufacturers, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. On the 10th of June, 1886, the President of the United States transmitted to Congress a letter from the Secretary of State relating to the claims for the destruction of the private armed brig General Armstrong. The communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It should have been referred, I think, to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Therefore, the Committee on Appropriations instruct me to report it back and ask its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator what the nature of the claim is?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a claim for the distribution of a portion of the fund appropriated some years ago in reference to the brig General Armstrong.

Mr. HOAR. That bill came from the Committee on Claims, then.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to interfere, however.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move the reference of the message to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the bill was reported originally from the Committee on Foreign Relations. That is my recollection. Senator Pendleton, I think, reported the bill from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and on his report it passed.

Mr. HOAR. Very likely. The bill came originally from the Committee on Claims, but it is very possible that in the subsequent Congress it went to the Committee on Foreign Relations and came from them. I rather think it did. I waive the suggestion I made.

Mr. HARRIS. I am sure that claim has been before the Committee on Claims some years past, for I remember it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know it was; but the bill was passed on a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to a reference to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Appropriations can not look into the matter, because it requires legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the message, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. To the Committee on Foreign Relations, I understood the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If there be no objection that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRISON. I introduce, by request, a bill to increase the pensions of those who have had disabilities equivalent to the loss of a leg or an arm. The pension of this latter class was increased by a bill passed at the last session, and I have been requested to present this subject to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (S. 2974) to increase the rate of pension for disability equal to the loss of a hand or foot, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2975) granting a pension to George Schafer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2976) granting a pension to John Akers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2977) granting a pension to James H. Rinard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2978) granting a pension to Jackson

Beswick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2979) granting a pension to Lucretia Luckey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2980) granting to the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company the right of way through the Indian reservations in Northern Montana and Northwestern Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2981) for the support of the Washington Inebriate Asylum of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. I also offer a bill prepared by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and presented at their request.

The bill (S. 2982) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation of the streets by a railway, for the purpose of transporting material to fill about the base of the Washington Monument, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 2983) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain which separates the islands of North Hero and South Hero, in the county of Grand Isle, in the State of Vermont; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANSOM (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2984) granting a pension to Frank Thornton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2985) granting an increase of pension to Abram Kelly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2986) to amend the act of August 2, 1886, entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation and exportation of oleomargarine;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR subsequently said: In regard to the reference of the bill proposing an amendment to the oleomargarine law, I desire to state that that measure was originally referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The chairman of that committee is not present, and I desire, if that be the proper way of reaching the point, to enter a motion to reconsider the order of reference to the Committee on Finance so as to leave the matter open until the chairman of the Agricultural Committee may be present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered. The attention of the Senator from New Jersey is called to the motion made to reconsider the action of the Senate in referring the oleomargarine bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have no objection. I believe that the Committee on Agriculture considered the original bill on the subject. I will state, if permitted to do so, that this bill has only reference to a regulation of the export trade, which we find can not be made as the law now stands.

Mr. BLAIR. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, that change of reference will be made.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2987) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Mary Ringgold Archer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2988) granting a pension to Katharine Quick Pepper; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 87) providing for medals to the officers and enlisted men of the three months' service in 1861; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHOCTAW NATION CLAIMS.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be directed to inquire and report to the Senate what claims for professional or other services exist against the Choctaw Nation on account of the judgments rendered against the United States in favor of said Nation at the October term of the Supreme Court of the United States in cases No. 848 and 850, on appeal from the Court of Claims, and all other matters connected with the prosecution of said claims, with power to summon witnesses, send for papers, and administer oaths, the expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon the allowance of the chairman of the committee.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Calendar is in order.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 9) known as the electoral-count bill, and request a conference with the other House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, which will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the amendments of the House of Representatives, as follows:

On page 2, line 13, before the word "controversy," insert the word "a."

On page 3, line 13, strike out all after the word "vote" down to and including the word "elected," in line 14.

On page 3, line 30, after the word "State," insert the following:

Which shall have been regularly given by electors whose appointment has been certified to according to section 3 of this act.

On page 4, line 1, strike out the words "except by the affirmative votes of both Houses."

On page 4, line 22, strike out all after the word "which" down to and including the word "State," in line 24, and insert the following:

Were cast by electors whose appointment shall have been duly certified under the seal of the State by the executive thereof, in accordance with the laws of the State, unless the two Houses, acting separately, shall concurrently decide such votes not to be the lawful votes of the legally appointed electors of such State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate non-concur in these amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HOAR, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. PUGH were appointed.

USE OF STREETS, ETC., IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senate to consider at this time Order of Business 1883, being the bill (S. 2938) reported yesterday from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire whether the unfinished business has been laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock, which is the bill to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to tenure of office. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2938) regulating the use of avenues, streets, alleys, and reservations in the city of Washington. It provides that the streets, avenues, alleys, or reservations in the city of Washington shall not be used for steam railroads, street railroads, telephone, electric light, or telegraph wires, or pipes for heating or lighting purposes, or for any other than the ordinary public uses for which said streets, avenues, alleys, and reservations are established, without the consent of Congress first obtained.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, being entirely in favor of the bill, whether it would not be advisable to insert a section providing a penalty for violation of this prohibition, so that if a District commissioner, or a superintendent of streets, or anybody else, violates this law (as what I think is the law about these streets in respect of these things is now being violated), there will be an adequate, proper, and direct penalty for it that can be enforced.

Mr. INGALLS. The committee considered the view suggested by the Senator from Vermont, and it was thought better to make the inhibition absolute, understanding that the commissioners could proceed by injunction, if necessary, against persons illegally occupying the streets or public reservations for any other than the uses intended by Congress.

It is perhaps unnecessary for me to call particular attention at this time to the necessity that exists for this declaration of power by Congress. I have no doubt that this statute, if it should become enacted, would simply declare what is now the law; but within the last few months the commissioners of the District, while disclaiming power to grant to corporations the use of the streets for any purposes not now authorized, have assumed to give franchises, notably recently to a company for steam-heating and power purposes, by means of which three or four of the most important business streets of this city have been rendered practically impassable; and that action was taken in favor of a corporation, composed of citizens of Washington principally, who, desiring to evade the statutory liability and the imposition of taxation imposed by the laws of Congress, obtained their corporate powers under the laws of West Virginia.

It is due to the present board of commissioners to say that being interrogated, they denied the possession of any power whatever to grant the use of these streets for such purposes, but they declared that they found upon the records of the commissioners' office when they came into the discharge of their duties a prior grant of power by their predecessors, which they did not feel at liberty to countermand; and in pursuance of that the power has been granted to this corporation to try an experiment that has failed everywhere else, without compensation to the people of the District for the injury inflicted upon them, and to the great detriment, as I conceive, of the property-holders in the vicinity, and in violation of the laws of Congress upon that subject.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to know in regard to existing steam railroads, street railroads, telephone, electric light or telegraph wires, or pipes for heating or lighting purposes, whether those generally, the gas companies and the street railroads, have the consent of Congress now obtained?

Mr. INGALLS. The gas companies and the telegraph companies claim, of course, that, being chartered by Congress, they have all the necessary powers required for carrying out the functions for which they were incorporated.

Mr. HOAR. But my question is to see whether this bill as it is written would stop the operation of some useful or convenient public work which it is not intended by the committee to interfere with.

Mr. INGALLS. Unmistakably it would not.

The commissioners also had their attention called to the condition of the steam railroads in this city. Those who are familiar with the suburbs, especially in the northeastern parts of this municipality, I think will bear witness that values have been practically destroyed in that region by the unjust occupation of the streets, avenues, and public reservations by the steam railroad companies. Within three or four days, last past, while traversing the southern portion of the city I saw, I am safe in saying, hundreds of cars—freight cars, loaded and unloaded, passenger cars, cabooses, and flat cars—not passing through the streets and highways, but stored and standing therein. Those corporations have assumed to use the avenues, notably Virginia and Maryland avenues, for yard purposes, for storing their cars that are not in motion, and thereby practically destroying that portion of the city for purposes of business and residence.

I saw lately in one of the newspapers a statement to the effect that one of these corporations had succeeded stealthily, privily, without the knowledge of the commissioners, in gaining possession of three public reservations, which they were using for the purpose of switching and storing cars, and in various ways using them for private purposes, when, if they had been private persons, they would have been compelled to have paid hundreds of thousands of dollars for the property whose use and value they thus willfully and wantonly destroy.

Now, Mr. President, that there may be no question or controversy in the future, that no board of commissioners, being in doubt or uncertainty about their authority in the premises, shall yield to importunity, the committee thought best, in view of what has been done in the last three months, that there should be a positive and emphatic declaration by Congress of its power over the streets, alleys, avenues, and reservations in this District.

So far as a penal clause is concerned I think that immaterial. I venture to say that the District commissioners will not hereafter attempt, in view of this declaration, to grant any power to any corporation in violation of the rights of the public, and I am equally sure that if we pass this measure no corporation or individual being subject to injunction for its violation will venture upon any effort like those which have depreciated property and injured the rights of the public heretofore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that it is much safer to add a penal clause to this provision, and therefore I will venture to offer the following:

Every person who shall do any act in contravention of any of the foregoing provisions shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or by both said punishments in the discretion of the court.

The observations of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, so far as regards the commissioners doing anything hereafter would be undoubtedly correct, but I think I remember some instances within a few years when, in spite of the commissioners, and sometimes by night, some corporations have endeavored to lay down tracks, or change tracks and increase them in these streets, when the next morning it would be too late for a preventive injunction, and the question whether a court of equity could grant an injunction to redress a prohibited wrong which had been entirely completed, and to remove the tracks, would be a question for the lawyers and for three years in the Supreme Court.

Therefore, as against private offenders (and of course the words ought to be general as to everybody), I think that a penalty would be a great addition to the value and force of the bill, and I trust my friend will not object to its adoption.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection at all.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask for information, where the authority for the steam cars that first occupied the streets referred to was obtained. Was that given by the commissioners?

Mr. EDMUNDS. By charters of Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. It was given by Congress.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I mean the steam cars on Maryland and Virginia avenues.

Mr. INGALLS. Both the street cars and the steam railroads are chartered by act of Congress, and their occupation of the streets, alleys, avenues and reservations within the limits prescribed by their charters is lawful.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have got a good deal beyond it.

Mr. INGALLS. I know they have.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then how as to the occupation of the reservations which the Senator has referred to?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know that there has been any occupation of reservations; but I have seen a statement in the press, publicly made and not controverted, that one of the railroad corporations had, unknown to the commissioners, and, of course, without their consent, taken possession of three public reservations and was using them for private purposes. About that I make no statement, further than to reiterate what I have seen announced in the papers. I do not know anything about it, either officially or personally.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then the bill as now proposed would not reach any preceding unlawful occupation of reservations?

Mr. INGALLS. I think if there is any such occupation that every day's occupation under any unlawful precedent trespass would be a continuing offense, and an offense for which the party would be responsible.

Mr. SEWELL. Let me ask the Senator from Kansas how the grants by the commissioners to make connections with the main line authorized by Congress are to be affected by this bill, the grants for sidings to feed-stores, &c.?

Mr. INGALLS. In my judgment the commissioners are absolutely without authority to grant permission to occupy any single inch of territory beyond that prescribed and defined by the charter granting the company the authority originally. If there be any such occupation under any assumed grant of power by the commissioners, it is unlawful; and if after the enactment of this bill it shall continue, each day's occupation will be a new and continuing trespass, for which the company would be liable under the provisions of section 2 of the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. Then the hundred sidings, for instance, if there be so many, and there are a great many, authorized by the commissioners to be constructed from the main line of any one of these roads authorized by Congress to private property for the purpose of carrying on the business necessary for the community in this city, will be declared unlawful by the bill. Is that the state of affairs?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know anything about that. I do not know that there is any such case existing. My attention never has been called to a violation of law like that which the Senator from New Jersey defines. The power of the commissioners has been the subject of judicial determination in one of the courts since the last adjournment of Congress in a case in which one of these corporations sought to use a portion, I think, of Fourteenth street. Their authority was denied by the commissioners, and they attempted to occupy the street notwithstanding the refusal of the board to allow them to do so. Judicial proceedings were instituted, and the commissioners were sustained. So it is only a hypothetical question that the Senator from New Jersey raises, and one which does not affect in any way whatever the propriety of the passage of this bill.

Mr. VEST. Before this subject passes away, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia what is the condition of the bill or bills—I believe there are two of them—in regard to a union depot in this city, intended for the purpose of getting rid of these railroads through reservations. That bill has been pending several years, I believe—I know for five years in the Senate, and also in the other House—and it is by far the most important question to the people of this city that is now pending before Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. I quite agree with the Senator from Missouri, and for twice five years my attention has been directed to that subject and my best efforts have been in the direction of some solution of that difficulty; but I presume that the Senator from Missouri knows that the railroad interests in this city are conflicting and hostile. Whatever one corporation wants the other resists. Such has been the conflict, the clashing, that whenever any measure has been brought before the committee or by the committee before the Senate, there have been influences, subtle it may be and undetected, but powerful enough to prevent action, upon the ground, of course, that the public convenience would not be conserved by the measures that have been submitted for consideration.

I am aware, Mr. President, that the condition of the railroad termini in this city and the occupation of large portions of the area of the District by railroad corporations, under present conditions, is simply disgraceful. It amounts almost to a crime. Vast numbers of people have had their property practically destroyed and confiscated by the unlawful occupation of the portions of this city lying to the northeast and to the southeast and south of the Capitol for the purposes of locomotion and of car storage. Portions of the city have been rendered practically uninhabitable. The railroads have carried on their business so that it has been impossible to worship Almighty God in the churches erected for that purpose. And suits have been brought, and the people have been petitioning here and representing their wrongs, and measure after measure has been introduced and carried through certain stages; but one corporation having got a tract of land on a public reservation worth $500,000 without paying a cent, a site which it would be required to pay $500,000 for in any other city, has interposed, and interposed successfully, its opposition to all measures requiring it to withdraw from that reservation, to take up its tracks through Sixth street, to cease to bisect that magnificent mall extending from the Capitol to the Naval Observatory, and carry on its operations where it would be as much to the convenience of the public, two squares farther south, on that broad space at the intersection of Virginia and Maryland avenues.

Mr. PLUMB. May I ask my colleague how they came to be there? By what authority?

Mr. INGALLS. They got there by act of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. Is not Congress to blame then?

Mr. INGALLS. Congress is unquestionably to blame. I am not finding any fault with the railroad corporations. They have a valuable franchise, and they mean to keep it. Here is one of them, under the very eaves droppings of this Capitol, with a terminal station that is a shame and a disgrace to civilization; all its approaches are in the public highways, without decent accommodations for the public, and claiming that it has a vested right under a previous act of Congress to do as it pleases until 1910; and the other corporation, securing special privileges on account of the obloquy that was felt against its rival, has located its sheds and depot on a public reservation, destroying access to one portion of the city by the occupation of avenues and streets with its tracks, and both being able so to combine whenever anything is proposed which threatens their interests that, although absolutely hostile upon every other point, they are united in resisting every attempt to dislodge them from their present injurious occupation of the public property.

I do not blame, as I said, the railroad corporations for occupying this property. They acquired the right to do so lawfully. They claim that they afford better facilities to the people from the North and from the South by being thus enabled to land their passengers within one block of Pennsylvania avenue.

There is a good deal of secret history about this matter, Mr. President; there are a great many open secrets that perhaps it is not well to discuss; but when the Senator from Missouri inquires why it is that this matter has been left unacted upon, why it is the public have been left to suffer under these exactions, I can say to him that it has not been for the want of honest effort repeatedly made to secure the concurrence of these rival interests in some measure that would enable their friends in Congress and out of it to agree upon some site for a union depot, and thus relieve the people from this burden under which they now suffer.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I hope I may be permitted to say, without the slightest reflection upon the Committee on the District of Columbia, that it is very obvious that nothing will be done on this subject until some measure is reported from that committee to the Senate.

At the last session of Congress I introduced a resolution referring to the Committee on the Judiciary, of which the Senator from Kansas and myself are both members, the legal question as to the right of Congress to legislate on this subject. It is known very well that the attorneys and the stockholders and directors of these corporations claim that they have vested rights, that they have put improvements on their tracks and on the land that was given to them by Congress for that purpose, and that now we have no authority to interfere with those rights because they are vested.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me remind the Senator from Missouri that in the bill in relation to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad the right to alter and amend was specially reserved.

Mr. VEST. I was about to refer to that.

Mr. INGALLS. That act was passed in 1872, if I recollect aright.

Mr. VEST. It was passed in 1871 or 1872. I was about to remark that that very reservation of power is in that bill; but understanding that they made this claim my purpose was, with due deference and respect to the Committee on the District of Columbia, to refer to the law committee of the Senate that legal proposition in order that the only question then to be determined by Congress should be the one of expediency alone. After that resolution was offered the Senator from Kansas requested me to allow the matter to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as it might be conceived by the public to be a reflection upon the industry or the capacity of the committee of which he was chairman. As a matter of course, I permitted that reference to be made; and it is now in no spirit of cavil or criticism of that committee that I have mentioned the subject at all. I only mentioned it because I hoped it would be an occasion for that committee taking some action in order that we may determine both the legal question and the question of expediency if we have that power.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, it must strike those who take an interest in the legislation of Congress affecting the rights of individuals that the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia is a startling one that the steam railroads entering this city should use the franchise given them to arbitrarily and without authority take occupation of reservations or other property, and that that should be continued year after year and the American Congress denying to two hundred thousand people the right of self-control, should sit here nine months in one year and three in another and leave this community entirely at the mercy of the avarice, the greed, and the extortion of corporations of this nature. It is a startling proposition. There is no excuse for it anywhere; none whatever. There is no allegation that Congress is powerless before such great mammoth corporations. If there could be such an excuse, it would be a worse infamy than the crime alleged against them. Our crime is worse than that of the railroad companies, and the Senator has properly designated their occupation of this franchise as infamous, and so it is.

The citizens of this city will be rejoiced at the statement made by the Senator from Kansas, because it insures to them the coöperation and the power which that Senator from his position on this floor, and as the head of the District Committee, may extend to the people who have been long suffering in this city.

In 1872 the franchise was given to one of these railroad companies, as I understand from the Senator from Vermont; and may I ask him whether when this franchise was given to any railroad company that occupies the streets of this city, there was any provision for damages in any case, or any authority given to assess damages? Does the Senator from Vermont remember?

Mr. MORRILL. I think there was.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Damages for the occupation of the streets, to the adjoining owners? Does the Senator from Kansas remember?

Mr. INGALLS. I was not in the body at that time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Was there any tribunal fixed whereby damages could be assessed in favor of persons owning residences on these streets, which Congress deliberately turned over to the occupation of these railroad companies? Can any Senator who was in Congress at that time, or by reading afterward in the Judiciary Committee, give any information on that point?

Mr. MORRILL. I have not the terms of the law in my memory at the present time, but I will say that several of the occupants of these streets have obtained damages through the courts.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely. From that I judge that Congress did not furnish any tribunal. They gave authority to the railroad companies to occupy these streets without at the same time providing a tribunal whereby damages could be assessed in favor of the owners of property on these streets. I judge from the fact that the Senator from Vermont says they have been able to obtain damages in the courts that they were driven to the courts; they could only get damages by going to the courts. They were thrown on their common-law rights. Congress, so liberal in bestowing these privileges, I presume did not think it was wise to protect the citizens of Washington having residences upon either side of the streets which they generously turned over to the occupation of railroad corporations, and I think the Senator will find that these citizens were driven to the courts in order to obtain redress. So it seems these mammoth corporations can take Congress by the throat, and, although it sits nine months in one year and three in the next, the great representatives of the American Republic tremble before these huge corporations, and the only remedy for the individual, the citizen (who has no protection by reason of any self-control on the part of the people here or any regulation of their own affairs), is that he must go to the courts single-handed and alone to deny the right of a railroad company to enter the highways, the streets, and destroy the value of his property and make it useless. I judge so from the fact that the people of South Washington have petitioned, not only this year, but the last half-dozen years—petitioned, without redress, Congress to give them some protection, and until this time their request has passed apparently unheeded, until what?

The Senator from New Jersey asks how shall the company's sidings be protected? They have a hundred sidings on the streets of this city, he says. Does the Senator know whether they paid any damages for laying down those tracks and making those sidings? Has the Senator knowledge on that point? It was done by individual owners, he says. What right had individual owners to give this railroad company the right to lay down sidings in a highway of the city, will the Senator tell me?

Mr. SEWELL. I think the siding was for the individual owner's benefit—for the purpose of aiding his business. I know very little about it except the general principle.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But the siding would be of no use merely constructed along the line that belongs to the individual. The siding has to be laid down in the highway, laid down in the street, over which the individual has not the absolute control and ownership so as to deed it away or dedicate it to a use repugnant to the rights of others traveling on that street or others occupying residences on that street. Now, that hundreds of cars are stored in the avenues of this city without the railroad corporation paying a dollar for that privilege is a well-known fact. Did the Senator from Vermont find anything on the point we were speaking about?

Mr. MORRILL. It is fully provided for—that they are to pay damages.

Mr. VAN WYCK. By assessment? Does it say they shall pay them by judgment of the courts?

Mr. MORRILL. Nothing as to details.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In 1872 Congress then merely declared what was the law—that the owners should be entitled to damages for the occupation of these streets.

Now, Mr. President, I should have preferred, if it would meet the views of the Senator from Kansas, that something in this bill should be retroactive. The streets that are already occupied require the attention of Congress and require some legislation. Year after year the Senator from Missouri says that he has presented petitions or resolutions or bills looking to the construction of a union depot, which is demanded by the interest of trade and travel and commerce, by every interest; and yet there has been no satisfactory answer to why it had not been done in this city except that the railroad corporations were powerful enough to prevent action upon that matter. Why, sir, it would have been competent for this committee or any other suitable committee of this body to have reported a bill which in their judgment was right. That could have been done, and then we should have had an opportunity to see whether these subtle influences could have reached and controlled a body like the Congress of the United States.

Here it stands conceded is the unjust, the injurious occupation of this property, the villainous prostitution of a franchise to the injury of the people, and the Congress that gave it to them fails to demand the reason why.

The Senator says that the act of 1872 provided for the amendment or repeal of this charter. Then certainly Congress has reserved to itself all that is necessary.

The abuse of this franchise was flagrant, so much so that it has been deserved for years and to-day has received the truthful characterization which the Senator from Kansas has given it. I trust now that this may be a little ray of hope to the citizens of Washington that the day of deliverance may be approaching, not only from the exactions and demands and outrages of these corporations of steam railroads but of other corporations which for the last ten years through Congress have compelled a great city and nearly a quarter of a million of population to be subjected in their rights and in their interests to corporations started and created by act of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9918) to provide for grading and paving the approaches to the national cemetery near Danville, Va.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees;

A bill (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy, and to fix their pay;

A bill (S. 1990) to provide for the adjustment of matters connected with certain judicial proceedings in Pennsylvania, in which the United States was a party; and Joint resolution (S. R. 19) directing copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina to be furnished to said State.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9918) to provide for grading and paving the approaches to the national cemetery, near Danville, Va., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT REPEAL.

Mr. HOAR. I now move to take up the bill (S. 512) which comes over from yesterday as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of civil officers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of certain sections of the Revised Statutes was called for yesterday. They will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 1767. Every person holding any civil office to which he has been or hereafter may be appointed, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall have become duly qualified to act therein, shall be entitled to hold such office during the term for which he was appointed, unless sooner removed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the appointment, with the like advice and consent, of a successor in his place, except as herein otherwise provided.

SEC. 1768. During any recess of the Senate, the President is authorized, in his discretion, to suspend any civil officer appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, except judges of the courts of the United States, until the end of the next session of the Senate, and to designate some suitable person, subject to be removed, in his discretion, by the designation of another, to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the mean time; and the person so designated shall take the oath and give the bond required by law to be taken and given by the suspended officer, and shall, during the time he performs the duties of such officer, be entitled to the salary and emoluments of the office, no part of which shall belong to the officer suspended. The President shall, within thirty days after the commencement of each session of the Senate, except for any office which in his opinion ought not to be filled, nominate persons to fill all vacancies in office which existed at the meeting of the Senate, whether temporarily filled or not, and also in the place of all officers suspended; and if the Senate during such session shall refuse to advise and consent to an appointment in the place of any suspended officer, then, and not otherwise, the President shall nominate another person as soon as practicable to the same session of the Senate for the office.

SEC. 1769. The President is authorized to fill all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate by reason of death or resignation or expiration of term of office, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session thereafter. And if no appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is made to an office so vacant or temporarily filled during such next session of the Senate, the office shall remain in abeyance, without any salary, fees, or emoluments attached thereto, until it is filled by appointment thereto by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and during such time all the powers and duties belonging to such office shall be exercised by such other officer as may by law exercise such powers and duties in case of a vacancy in such office.

SEC. 1770. Nothing in sections 1767, 1768, or 1769 shall be construed to extend the term of any office the duration of which is limited by law.

SEC. 1771. Every person who, contrary to the four preceding sections, accepts any appointment to or employment in any office, or holds or exercises, or attempts to hold or exercise, any such office or employment, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than five years, or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

SEC. 1772. Every removal, appointment, or employment, made, had, or exercised, contrary to sections 1767 to 1770, inclusive, and the making, signing, sealing, countersigning, or issuing of any commission or letter of authority for or in respect to any such appointment or employment, shall be deemed a high misdemeanor, and every person guilty thereof shall be imprisoned not more than five years, or fined not more than $10,000 or both.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to express my earnest opposition to the passage of this repealing bill, which opposition I suspect, with a solid Democracy and a somewhat considerable support of this bill from people who are not Democrats, will be futile; but nevertheless I wish to express my earnest opposition to the passage of this bill.

The statute proposed to be repealed has been in existence for nearly twenty years. It was passed at a time when removals from office by a then acceding President—acceding to Democratic views of things—were being made with great rapidity, even greater than the rapidity of the removals under the present administration, rapid as they have been, and when it was obvious that these removals were in general greatly to the detriment of the public service. The law was then passed in the time of President Johnson. President Johnson did not believe it to be constitutional, but it passed notwithstanding by the requisite constitutional majority of the two Houses of Congress. But notwithstanding the fact that President Johnson believed it to be unconstitutional, he obeyed it and did not choose to risk the question in the judicial courts as he might readily have done by making a case, and of having it determined as between the particular officer removed and the power of removal—of having it determined as to that man whether the law could stand upon constitutional grounds or not. President Johnson obeyed it. I do not remember an instance—and if there were one it was an accident—of his not executing it fairly and in good faith. All his successors, covering a period, as I say, of nearly twenty years, have recognized its validity as the guide and direction and restraint upon the Chief Magistrate of the United States in respect of vacating and so filling offices without the consent of that body that the Fathers in the Constitution provided to be a consenting and an advising body as well for the selection of these persons.

Everybody saw when this law was passed and went into operation that the chief executive power over the patronage of the country, the chief executive power over influencing elections and bending everything to executive will, rested not so much in the power of selecting persons for office—although that is great—as it did in the power of making innumerable and continual vacancies; for if a man were nominated to the Senate and confirmed after consideration by the unanimous vote of this body, without this statute, according to the previous practice of Executives, he could be the day after the Senate adjourned dismissed from his office and a vacancy created, and if thus lawfully dismissed and a lawful vacancy created the President of the United States by the express letter of the Constitution was authorized to fill it of his own motion, and without any advice or consent of the Senate, until the expiration of its next session, which would be on the average at least six months if not more. And without such a law embracing some of these sections, if at that next session of the Senate the President of the United States proposing the man that he wished to fill the office found that the advice and consent of the Senate could not be given to it, the Senate again adjourning he had the constitutional power to again appoint to this existing vacancy the same man over again, and so on infinitely, if you can use the term "infinitely" as regards an office held by one man.

In other words, without the restraints of this statute and according to the practice that had existed before, the whole real power and patronage of this Government was vested solely in the hands of a President of the United States; his will was the law. No matter how clearly the Senate may have been of opinion that a given nominee ought not to be intrusted with public confidence or employed in public concerns, it was still left within the legal and technical power of the President of the United States to employ him continually. You may say this would rarely happen, and that if it happened often it would be a great abuse, which would deserve being dealt with in another constitutional way. But that does not prove that it is right to open the door to such abuse; far from it. It proves the reverse, as I think.

So then, Mr. President, if there be anything of value in the provisions of the Constitution that have now lasted us on these topics for a hundred years, lacking one or two or three, it is that the restraint on the power of the Executive, which was vested in the Senate of the United States, in regard to what persons should be employed in the public service, that value is to be entirely destroyed by the repeal of this statute, and you turn over, as if you had done it in affirmative language, to the President of the United States not only the power of immediate removal of every one of the public servants who are confirmed by the Senate, and of course indirectly through his heads of Departments every one of the public servants who are not confirmed by the Senate, the power of immediate removal, the power by his own selection and without the advice and consent of the Senate of an immediate filling of those offices, to be repeated as often as his will and his pleasure should think it proper, whether the Senate thought the officer proposed was a suitable appointment or not suitable. That is a very grave and serious step to take.

Certainly it was found, I repeat, that in the state of things which existed when this act was passed, the public service was immeasurably promoted by its passage and the obedience of the President of the United States to its provisions, not only in respect of the personnel and character of the persons who were employed in the public service, but in respect of saving the public treasure; and, as I say, every President from that time to this has been enabled to carry on the Government well and faithfully, and, without any serious embarrassment, obeying its provisions.

Now we have an Administration of which it is said on one side that it is not making removals fast enough, and that it is laboring under the restraint, legal or otherwise, of this long-time statutory provision, and that the experiment of very numerous suspensions, universal suspensions under its provisions, would either turn out to be a failure because there was no cause in the conduct of the suspended officers to justify it, or turn out to be a failure because if the suspensions were made for political reasons that body of people in the United States whose votes elected the present President would see that the civil-service pretensions and platforms and proclamations and letters and statements of the Chief Magistrate were not being at all lived up to—one thing or the other. And so, as I said when I began, this bill is brought forward in apparent aid of the wishes of our friends on the other side to relieve the President from the difficulty and embarrassment of having to suspend an officer that he wishes to get rid of, and who by law would be restored to the office if the Senate did not agree to the appointment of his successor and be subject to suspension again, and to invite him, by the action of the Senate and the House of Representatives, if it should concur to make short work of all this civil-service business, and to expel from office at once all the officers of the United States who are now within the purview of this statute by an instant removal, being required to give no explanation and make no suggestions to the Senate or to the House of Representatives upon the subject, and give us five or six or eight or ten or fifteen or twenty or thirty thousand vacancies, whatever the number may be, and I do not know, which are to be filled up by the President according to his own free will and according to the pressure that can be brought to bear upon him by members of the House of Representatives and Senators, &c.

It is, as it looks to me, as if we were to turn our backs now and here upon the principle of civil-service reform, as it is called, and I think it is a reform if it is only carried out. It is a reform in name and would be a reform in practice and is a reform in practice, as I believe, just as far as it is followed fairly and honestly and faithfully. It is to relieve all that, and that we shall all agree that the victors are the persons who are entitled to the spoils, and that every place, every employment under the Government of the United States is a spoil that belongs to the set of men who can carry an election in favor of a man who thinks that way too, and who will therefore gratify the soldiers of the war for spoils in giving them and their friends the places under the Government that has been the object of the contest they have engaged in. I do not believe in that. There are a good many other people in this world who do not believe in it, and who believe that employments under the Government are just as much as possible like the employments under the governments of our respective States, where, either by election or appointment, nearly every officer in a State is secure in the administration of the office the duties of which he has been selected to perform for the period fixed by the constitution of the State or by its law for which he was elected or appointed, and that nothing but his official or personal misconduct—which is something else than having an opinion and expressing it in an honest and manly way—should be the cause of his dismissal from it.

So, Mr. President, it appears to me, with great respect to my friend from Massachusetts who reported this bill, and who I am sure thinks the law he proposes to repeal to be unconstitutional, that the passage of this bill would be the greatest practical step backward on the theory of the reformation of the civil service of the United States, taking its ordinary work and employment out of being the mere contest of politics between parties as distinguished from broad differences among men as to the polity of a country, either foreign or domestic, as we have so many instances of, and where I am glad to say we rarely divide upon pure party lines, as they are called, about such affairs—taking out from what is now a certain amount of security and retardation of those eager political hungerings for place, these employments and occupations, and leaving the administration and Congress with some larger and better things to do than to struggle and scramble once in four years to elect a President for the sole purpose of putting your friends out of office and putting my friends into office. That is the way it looks to me, and therefore I am opposed to it.

Now, as this debate is entirely unpremeditated by me, for I did not know until this morning that the bill was up, I wish to say a single word on the constitutionality of the law that it is proposed to repeal. I have said that my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, for whose legal opinions I always have the greatest respect, sincerely believes that it is contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator passes from his first topic, I should like to call his attention to the fact that, unwittingly, undoubtedly, in the beginning of his remarks he spoke of this law as having been passed in the time of Andrew Johnson, not by name, but by the description of the period. This particular law was passed later than the time of Andrew Johnson.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Massachusetts is not quite correct, I think, in the way he has stated that. The law was passed in the time of Andrew Johnson. When General Grant came to be President of the United States in 1869 he was led to believe by friends of his who were eager partisans—not eager merely in the sense of public policies, as we all are and all ought to be, but who were eager partisans of place and of having the power of the Executive as large as possible if they had the ear of the Executive to have it exerted in the way they wanted it—that the law would be a great embarrassment to the success of his administration, and he was induced to exert whatever of influence he felt that he properly might—and I will not stop to measure it or to go into it—in favor of its total repeal. The House of Representatives, I believe by a very large majority, passed a bill for total repeal. The Senate did not take that view of the subject, and it resulted in a conference and a report of a conference whereby the duty of the President reporting causes of suspension to the then next session of the Senate was annulled, but whereby the structure and theory and effect of the law as it then stood as a restraint upon the abuse of executive power was left, as it was thought here, in full vigor and force.

Mr. HOAR. Will it disturb the Senator if I call his attention to one proposition?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not in the least.

Mr. HOAR. The law which was passed in the time of President Johnson enacted that all civil officers should hold office through their term, except that it gave the President the power of suspension and temporary appointment whenever the officer had been guilty of misconduct in office, or crime, or for any reason had become incapable or legally disqualified. In other words, the original law deprived the President of any discretionary power of suspension or removal whatever in regard to those officers. There must be a legal disqualification, an incapacity or a crime—nothing else. Then, in the first term of President Grant, the present law was passed which authorized the President to suspend at his discretion, which would operate as a removal on the confirmation of a successor, requiring of the President no reasons whatever, and under which the power of suspending at discretion for mere political reasons, or for any other, has been exercised ever since at the will and according to the sense of public duty of the successive Executives. And so far as I am aware, there is not a single instance, since this new law passed, of any officer once suspended being restored practically to his official functions. So, without now, of course, interrupting the Senator from Vermont to reply to his argument as to the expediency of the existing law, I respectfully submit that it is not historically accurate to say that the existing law was a law passed during the administration of Andrew Johnson.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the same amount of respect, I most respectfully submit that it is, that all that was taken out of it in the year 1869 was merely a question of method and procedure; for the law of 1867, while it enumerated, as my friend says, the scope and proper constitutional and beneficial suspension, was broad enough in its language and was intended to be broad enough in its language to include every case except that of mere political opinion.

Mr. HOAR. May I read those lines to my friend?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I will not interrupt the Senator again, but I would like to have this point understood by the Senate. This is the law of 1867:

That when any officer appointed as aforesaid—

After first providing that all officers, except the Cabinet, should hold to the end of their term—excepting judges of the United States courts, shall, during a recess of the Senate, be shown, by evidence satisfactory to the President, to be guilty of misconduct in office, or crime, or for any reason shall become incapable or legally disqualified to perform its duties, in such case, and in no other, the President may suspend such officer and designate some suitable person to perform temporarily the duties of such office until the next meeting of the Senate, and until the case shall be acted upon by the Senate, and such person so designated shall take the oaths and give the bonds required by law to be taken and given by the person duly appointed to fill such office; and in such case it shall be the duty of the President, within twenty days after the first day of such next meeting of the Senate, to report to the Senate such suspension, with the evidence and reasons for his action in the case, and the name of the person so designated to perform the duties of such office. And if the Senate shall concur in such suspension and advise and consent to the removal of such officer, they shall so certify to the President, who may thereupon remove such officer, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint another person to such office. But if the Senate shall refuse to concur in such suspension, such officer so suspended shall forthwith resume the functions of his office, and the powers of the person so performing its duties in his stead shall cease, and the official salary and emoluments of such officer shall, during such suspension, belong to the person so performing the duties thereof, and not to the officer so suspended: Provided, however, That the President, in case he shall become satisfied that such suspension was made on insufficient grounds, shall be authorized at any time before reporting such suspension to the Senate as above provided, to revoke such suspension and reinstate such officer in the performance of the duties of his office.

That was the law which the Senator from Vermont thinks is substantially equivalent to the one now on the statute-book.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am extremely glad that my friend from Massachusetts has read so carefully the precise clauses that were repealed in the act of 1867. I had some hand at that time in making them, as I presume my friend had at the other end of the Capitol, though I do not remember about that, and some hand in the conference report, as I happened to be one of the men who composed the Senate conferees, which agreed upon the modification of 1869; and with great respect to him I again repeat that the enumeration of causes for suspension, and so if the Senate were satisfied with those causes for the removal of the officer, covered every case in which a person ought to be removed from the place that he holds until his time is out, except the matter of political opinion. There was misconduct; that is clear; there was incapability as distinguished from disqualification, incapacity like extreme sickness or insanity, and when you come to the other branch of it on misconduct, negligence, unfaithfulness, inattention by an officer who has been intrusted with an important trust, and every trust is an important trust in the public service—his misconduct either by doing what he ought not to do or failing to do what his full and bounden duty would require him to do in performing his functions. And then being innocent of misconduct, the old law provided for the other case of a person becoming unable, however good he was, to do his duties. Then he might be set aside. So that by a process of algebra you will see that this enumerates all the cases for which a person ought to be relieved from service and excludes a case where he ought not to be relieved from service, and that is the fact that, like an American citizen, he had a political opinion. That was where it stood.

Some friends of General Grant and his administration—we were all his friends on both sides of the Chamber—but some of his friends got up the idea that it was derogatory to the Presidential office to be called upon to specify and enumerate in his own act which he was responsible for and which the Senate could review, the precise reason and ground and name the thing that he suspended a particular man for; and so this modification was made.

Mr. BUTLER. Will it be agreeable to the Senator now to read the modification in that connection? I should be very glad to hear it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir. The modification was made thus; section 1767 was left to read:

Every person holding any civil office to which he has been or hereafter may be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall have become duly qualified to act therein, shall be entitled to hold such office during the term for which he was appointed, unless sooner removed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the appointment——

Which made two separate things of it, in one case an appointment of a successor would effect the removal of the other man, but the first section provided for his being removed even if the President was not ready to suggest somebody to take his place.

or by the appointment, with the like advice and consent, of a successor in his place, except as herein otherwise provided.

Now we come to the suspension clause—

SEC. 1768. During any recess of the Senate the President is authorized, in his discretion—

Which, I suppose, is a constitutional discretion, a solemn discretion—to suspend any civil officer appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, except judges of the courts of the United States, until the end of the next session of the Senate, and to designate some suitable person, subject to be removed, in his discretion, by the designation of another, to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the mean time; and the person so designated shall take the oath and give the bond required by law to be taken and given by the suspended officer, and shall, during the time he performs the duties of such officer, be entitled to the salary and emoluments of the office, no part of which shall belong to the officer suspended.

Then—

The President shall, within thirty days after the commencement of each session of the Senate, except for any office which in his opinion ought not to be filled, nominate persons to fill all vacancies in office which existed at the meeting of the Senate, whether temporarily filled or not, and also in the place of all officers suspended; and if the Senate during such session shall refuse to advise and consent to an appointment in the place of any suspended officer, then, and not otherwise, the President shall nominate another person as soon as practicable to the same session of the Senate for the office.

Then, section 1769:

SEC. 1769. The President is authorized to fill all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate by reason of death or resignation or expiration of term of office—

Not by reason of removal; that was not tolerated—

by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session thereafter. And if no appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is made to an office so vacant or temporarily filled during such next session of the Senate, the office shall remain in abeyance, without any salary, fees, or emoluments attached thereto, until it is filled by appointment thereto by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and during such time—

That is the time of abeyance—

all the powers and duties belonging to such office shall be exercised by such other officer as may by law exercise such powers and duties in case of a vacancy in such office.

Now, therefore, you will perceive, Mr. President, I think, with great respect to my friend from Massachusetts, that the fundamental theory of a constitutional (if it be constitutional, which is another question) regulation of the exertion of the power of removal from office was intended to be preserved, and was preserved, and that the result under the act of 1867 and the act of 1869 would be precisely the same. In either case the President was to suspend, if he found good occasion for it in his solemn and official discretion; and in either case, if the President of the United States would not make known to the Senate, or the Senate could not find out any good reason for advising and consenting that that man should be removed from office and another man put in his place, there was the end of the exertion of that power.

Then, in order to guard it still more perfectly under this modified section 1769—and the parts that were retained were left untouched as far as I know—it was provided (and we propose to repeal that, too) that in respect of the case of an ordinary vacancy occurring in the recess which the Constitution gives the President the power to fill up, and which is reaffirmed and named in that section, if he can not, during the next session of the Senate, name somebody to fill that place permanently—that is, for the full term which the law provides for it—he shall not be allowed thereafter, as he had been allowed theretofore, to fill it up without the advice and consent of the Senate; and so on, from year to year, through a whole administration, having the whole service of the Government in respect to that office—and it might be true as respects them all—carried on by a body of persons not one of whom had been selected by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. This law forbids that, and says if the President is unable to nominate to this branch of the Government, upon which the Constitution has imposed the duty of advising and consenting according to the light we have, a person who would meet the approval of a majority of the Senate, he shall not fill it up himself in spite of the Constitution, but that the office shall remain in abeyance, and its duties be performed by whatever person the law provides for it, as it does now probably in every instance, to go on as in the case of a vacancy.

There is where the roads part as broad as can be. Repealing this statute is affirming that the Congress of the United States is willing and desirous that the President of the United States should exercise the power of selecting people to fill offices, whether the Senate advises it or consents to it or not. It is not a mere matter of removal taking the scope of this bill repealing the section I am commenting on. It goes to the extreme in the other direction, and that upon the suggested constitutional ground to which I was coming that the President must not only have the power to remove everybody from office in the civil service of the Government except judges of the regular constitutional courts, in order that he may take care that the laws are faithfully executed, but that he must also have the power of filling every office by somebody in spite of the Senate refusing to advise and consent to the selection of that particular man, for the same reason that it is his duty to take care that the laws are faithfully executed, and if he does not choose to nominate a person to an office under the Constitution that the Senate thinks is fit for it, he may employ him in that office constitutionally although the Senate do not think he is fit for it, and so keep on. That is the logic of the proposition.

I do not believe in that kind of constitutional law. I do not believe in that kind of political expediency, and I use the word "political" in its just and proper philosophical sense, and not in the sense of party politics at all.

Now, then, the question is whether this law as it stands in the Revised Statutes is an invasion of the constitutional rights and powers of the President. If it is it ought to be repealed, because no one Department of the Government, and no all Departments of the Government ought to invade or justly embarrass the exercise of the constitutional functions of any other Department. That is as clear as anything can be. Security, order, liberty, welfare depend upon a scrupulous regard for preserving the rights of every Department with their checks and limitations and balances, one holding against usurpations by the other and asking for no usurpations in favor of itself. All that is clear enough. If, therefore, I had the slightest doubt as to the constitutionality of this law that has existed for so long I should be willing to consider with the utmost seriousness how far we had trenched on the executive powers as they were created and established by the Constitution, and by just so far as we found that we had trenched upon them to immediately retreat. But if I find on study and examination, and reflection, and observation that these provisions, as they are are only conservative of the public good, exercised for the objects that the founders of the Government had in view, wise and just objects of restraining unlimited power in every branch of the Government, then we ought to stand by them; and I think that is the policy of this law.

Sir, what is there in the Constitution out of which this supposed invasion of executive power is to be evolved? It is only, I believe confessedly, in this one phrase, that it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. That is his duty, clearly. It would be his duty if that phrase were not in. That is the function of every executive office; the inherent nature of it; it is to execute the law. But the President of the United States in taking care that the laws are faithfully executed cannot invade the laws. He cannot invade the Constitution in order to faithfully execute the law. If he could, then if the Congress of the United States by both its Houses should refuse to pass an appropriation to pay his salary, he could go to the Treasury and make his sign-manual order on the Treasury of the United States, "Give me $50,000; I can not execute the law without pay, and the law says I shall have pay; Congress has been derelict in its duty in not providing this appropriation; I will take the money without it," although the law has regulated how money is to be got out of the Treasury, and it is by the will of the Representatives of the people and of the States, and in no other way.

In another case—and I only take two or three as they occur to me to illustrate, because, as I say, this discussion, as far as I am concerned, is entirely precipitated—the collector of customs in the city of New York has a salary by law, and he has a thousand or two thousand subordinates. His duties and their duties are fixed by law. What they are to do does not depend upon the will of the President of the United States or upon his discretion. Their salaries are fixed by law. Now, if the President's duty to take care that the laws are faithfully executed is of the immeasurable and unlimited scope as to means that must be drawn from this argument made against the constitutionality of this statute, in case Congress fails to provide means for carrying on the custom-house in the city of New York, the President of the United States must execute the customs laws; if there are not officers enough he may appoint others that the law has not created at all, and vindicate himself on the ground that he is to execute the customs laws of the United States, which say that every vessel that comes into port shall report, make its manifest, return it to the custom-house, and pay its duties. Congress has not given him deputy collectors enough in the city of New York to do it. He therefore, of his own free constitutional will, and under his constitutional duty, has appointed a hundred more in order to take care that the laws for the collection of the revenues may be faithfully executed. That will not do.

What Attorney-General Black said to Mr. Buchanan—if I am correct in what might be called my hasty recollection going into this debate in this way—about the year 1860, always appeared to me to be as clearly stated and as sound a proposition of constitutional law in this country as could be stated, and that great man knew how to state it. It was urged upon President Buchanan that it was his duty to do certain things that the statutes of the United States, as it was said, had not provided for, in order to preserve the Constitution and execute the Constitution itself; and that he must do this thing and do that thing without any intervention of Congress to give him authority to do it, because it fell within his duty of faithfully executing the laws. Mr. Black, however, advised him that his very oath to faithfully execute the law was an oath to obey the law, and to obey it as it stood, and not to create new laws that Congress had not passed or to violate old ones that they had passed, no matter how great the patriotic temptation was to do it, if he would follow the Constitution. I am not using his language, but stating the substance, which we can all understand. I thought so when I read that famous opinion of Mr. Black; I think so still; and therefore I am not able to see that the duty of the President of the United States to take care that the law be faithfully executed involves the right or the duty to put one man into an office that the law has not provided for or to turn one man out of office where the law has not given him the power and provided the right for him to turn out of office, as it has of course in three-quarters of all the offices of the United States, for the Constitution has declared wisely—and I have introduced a bill to carry it still further in respect of its effective administration—that Congress may by law, vest in the President, in the heads of Departments, or in the courts of law, the appointment of the whole mass of the subordinate officers of the United States, and we all agree that these include everything except judges of the courts of the United States, ministers, and consuls.

Then, sir, as it seems to me, the duty of the President of the United States to see that the laws are faithfully executed—not to execute them himself, but to take care that the public will, as found in the Constitution and in the statutes, is exerted and executed—does not by any means imply an authority to remove a postmaster any more than it implies an authority to remove a Senator who he thinks is conducting himself in a way to embarrass the execution of the laws.

Historically it has been said a great many times that the first Congress put this construction upon that phrase, and came to the conclusion in creating some of the first offices in the Government—the first in point of time and the first in point of dignity, the heads of Departments—that Congress gave a legislative recognition to the idea that the clause in the Constitution requiring the President to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, involved and implied the power of removing any officer, no matter how appointed, whether by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or otherwise, from office and creating a vacancy, and then putting in his own man, to whom the Senate had not consented to fill the place. If he had the right to make a vacancy he would have a right to put in his own man during a recess of the Senate, because the Constitution says so. That is clear enough. When the first tenure-of-office bill of 1867, therefore, was brought forward, and the friends of the then administration of Mr. Johnson opposed it on constitutional grounds, and asserted this legislative and alleged historical recognition of the power of removal as a part of the Executive power and in order to the faithful execution of the law, I made as careful an examination as I could of the whole debates in the House of Representatives—at that time there were no printed debates of the Senate—to ascertain exactly how the question stood, what it meant that Congress had inserted in the clause as to one of the Secretaries—no matter which one—a provision to be removable at the pleasure of the President of the United States, or whatever the phrase was, because on the face of the statute that would be capable of two interpretations, "unless sooner removed by the President of the United States." Perhaps that was the phrase, but no matter about that.

One interpretation was that that statute conferred upon the President a power that he did not possess by the Constitution, but which it was constitutionally lawful for Congress to impose upon him—to give him. Another interpretation might be that it was a simple recognition of an existing constitutional power. Therefore, on the face of the statute, certainly, no more could be implied in favor of the recognition of an existing constitutional power than could be implied in favor of a conferring upon the President of a power that Congress thought it expedient that he might exercise. On going through the debates, and reading all that was said of these various views, which they stated, and then counting up the votes on the yeas and nays, it was obvious to my mind—but perhaps I was mistaken, and I went over it again in 1869, when a tremendous rush was made to repeal the whole thing—it was obvious to my mind that no such deduction of a recognition of a constitutional power inherent in the President to remove from office could be made from the votes of that House of Representatives, and from the debates, and I think so still.

But let us pass that now; let us come to see what the Constitution does mean. Here are these other clauses which provide that Congress may vest in the President of the United States, the heads of Departments, or the courts of law, the appointment of all officers of the United States, with these exceptions that I have named. I have named them by classes. I state it in this way merely for brevity. That is all the power that is given to Congress, to vest the appointment merely in the President, in the head of a Department, in a court of law. The Constitution does not say by the use of any such words that they are to vest the power of appointment and the power of removal. It simply says you may vest the power of appointing these officers in the President, in the head of a Department, in a court of law.

Now, can it be maintained that Congress, having created the office of collector of customs for the District of Columbia, an office that does not exist by the Constitution, and declared that that office should be an office with such and such duties, that the term of it should be six years, and that the President of the United States should make the appointment on his own responsibility alone and without any advice or consent of the Senate, and that that man should not be removed from office during that six years except by a judicial proceeding in a court of law, as it is in nearly all the States, would that be an unconstitutional law? It has been stoutly maintained that it would be an unconstitutional law, and that, as the Constitution in terms only says you may vest the appointment in the President, if you vest it at all you must vest it at large, with everything that would be implied, by giving a simple power of appointment without any limitation or other regulation about it. But the Supreme Court of the United States has held, and held unanimously, that when Congress vests the power of appointment of any of these officers that the Constitution authorizes Congress to vest in the President, the heads of Departments, or the courts of law, Congress has the right and the power to regulate the term and tenure of that office and the removal or non-removal from it. It is impossible to maintain that proposition consistently with the proposition that where the Constitution vests the power of appointment of officers that the law creates in the President, by and with the advice and consent of another body, the same law which creates that office and fixes its salary and its term may not provide the conditions and the methods of investigation by which the holder of it shall be expelled from it. To my mind it is impossible to make the distinction.

Let us look a little further. Longer than the memory of man runs back, the laws of the United States as to the military service have provided that no officer should leave the Army of the United States or the Navy of the United States except by due process of law; that is, by a judicial trial, being cashiered and dismissed from service, with the exceptions that from time to time have been stated and have continued for a limited period and perhaps continue yet, that in time of actual warfare the President of the United States may dismiss an officer of the Army or Navy without a trial by a court-martial. If it is unconstitutional to say that the President of the United States shall not have the unlimited and unregulated power of removal of a civil officer, it is unconstitutional equally to say that he shall not have the power unlimited and unregulated of removing a military or a naval officer. The Constitution makes no distinction between civil or military and other officers. They all fall in the same clause; they are all provided for in the same way as officers of the public service of the United States. And if, therefore, we are to repeal these statutes upon the doctrine that they are an invasion of the constitutional prerogative of the President of the United States to remove officers that the Constitution has provided for, or that the Constitution has authorized Congress by law to provide for, you have asserted in him by the passage of this bill the power to dismiss the General of the Armies of the United States and all of his subordinates from day to day according to his free will and pleasure, and to make a vacancy in those offices which he in recess may fill up without the advice and consent of the Senate; or failing their advice and consent after a session of the Senate, he may fill them up again, and so on continuously, thus making every officer in the Army and Navy of the United States the mere servitor, the personal dependent of the one Executive of this nation, when in some time of stress, as times of stress do come, it would be very inconvenient to the liberties of the country that such a power should exist, and such a power as, I believe, has never been claimed; and yet, I think, with great respect that it is impossible to find in the Constitution any warrant for a distinction as it regards the inherent right of removal under the Constitution in the President, between a civil and a military officer.

So, then, without enlarging upon it, it does appear to me that the Senate of the United States will make a mistake which it will live to regret in repealing these statutes: first, because they are a wholesome restraint upon the temptations to abuse in executive power; they are a wholesome promotion of the theory, the just theory, as I believe, that has taken hold upon the public mind in this country of the great value to public interests of taking out of the mere spoil and prize of political contentions mere office-holding, and making them honorable and responsible employments of the Government for fixed terms; and in addition to that, as I believe, you are invading the theory of the Constitution of the United States, and are giving away powers in the Senate that are essential to the safety and welfare of the people.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this bill, which the Senator from Vermont has discussed so elaborately and fully, was introduced on the 14th of December, 1885, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary at that time. It was reported by the authority of a majority of that committee at the last session. It did not seem to me quite becoming to ask the Senate to deal with this general question while the question which arose between the President and the Senate as to the proper interpretation and administration of the existing law was pending. I thought as a party man that I had hardly the right to interfere with the matter which was under the special charge of my honorable friend from Vermont by challenging a debate upon the general subject from a different point of view. That question has subsided and is past, and it seems to me now proper to ask the Senate to vote upon the question whether it will return to the ancient policy of the Government, to the rule of public conduct which existed from 1789 until 1867, and which has practically existed, notwithstanding the condition of the statute-book, since the accession to power of President Grant on the 4th of March, 1869.

Nobody doubts that this question is one susceptible of good arguments on both sides. It was not necessary to hear the powerful statement of my honorable friend to know that a powerful statement could be made of the reasons which influenced him in defending the law as it stands upon the statute-book. Whenever there has been any political discussion of the limits of the power of the Executive and the Senate, on all the great political occasions in our history when the Senate has been in the hands of one political party and the executive power in another, this debate has come up. The debate in the First Congress in 1789, conducted by Mr. Madison in the House of Representatives on one side and some of the Federal leaders on the other, determined by a majority of eight or ten in that body, and by the casting vote of John Adams in the Senate, has been pronounced by great constitutional authority to be the ablest debate in our history. The debate was renewed in the great contest during the administration of Andrew Jackson, where Mr. Webster, Mr. Calhoun, and Mr. Clay ranged themselves on one side of the question, and the Democratic party under the leadership of President Jackson on the other. It was renewed again during the exceptional condition of things in the administration of President Johnson. And, Mr. President, the question has never been raised that it was not decided by the American people of all parties against the policy now advocated by the honorable Senator from Vermont. The question never has been raised, in my judgment, in the Senate that the claim to control the executive power in this way has not been injurious to the authority, to the reputation, and to the character of the Senate itself. The Senate always has been worsted and always will be worsted in this encounter.

No sooner did a new Congress assemble and a new administration come into power on the 4th day of March, 1869, than, notwithstanding the unpopularity of President Johnson, notwithstanding the vast Republican majority which was returned to both Houses of Congress by the elections of 1868, the House of Representatives almost by its first vote passed a bill wholly repealing what is called the tenure-of-office law by a vote of 138 to 16. That action was repeated in the following year by a vote of 159 to 25, and in 1872 by the House without a division. I believe it is true that every member of this body who has served in the other House, with the single exception of my honorable friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], whose service there was before this question arose, whether Republican or Democrat, is committed by his repeated votes to the repeal of this law. Both the Senators from Massachusetts, both the Senators from Maine, as well as their distinguished predecessor, Mr. Blaine, both the Senators from Illinois, the colleague of my honorable friend [Mr. CULLOM] who now sits near me [Mr. LOGAN] having taken, as he has repeatedly reminded the Senate, a very earnest and active part in promoting the attempt to repeal that legislation.

But the Senate, with whom the memory of the controversy with Andrew Johnson still lingered, held on to a little shadow and remnant of the vast power which they had undertaken to claim during the controversy with Andrew Johnson, a controversy which they believed, as I believe, was a controversy for the constitutional life of the Government as much as the war for the suppression of the rebellion itself.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] undertook in the beginning of his argument to claim that the law now upon the statute-book was the law which was passed in substance and in essential particulars by the Congress of the United States during the administration of President Johnson. I should like to ask the Secretary to read once more, in order that it may go into the report of my remarks, the law as it was originally passed. The Secretary will read the second section of the act of 1867.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That when any officer appointed as aforesaid, excepting judges of the United States courts, shall, during a recess of the Senate, be shown, by evidence satisfactory to the President, to be guilty of misconduct in office, or crime, or for any reason shall become incapable or legally disqualified to perform its duties, in such case, and in no other, the President may suspend such officer and designate some suitable person to perform temporarily the duties of such office until the next meeting of the Senate, and until the case shall be acted upon by the Senate, and such person so designated shall take the oaths and give the bonds required by law to be taken and given by the person duly appointed to fill such office; and in such case it shall be the duty of the President, within twenty days after the first day of such next meeting of the Senate, to report to the Senate such suspension, with the evidence and reasons for his action in the case, and the name of the person so designated to perform the duties of such office. And if the Senate shall concur in such suspension and advise and consent to the removal of such officer, they shall so certify to the President, who may thereupon remove such officer, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint another person to such office. But if the Senate shall refuse to concur in such suspension, such officer so suspended shall forthwith resume the functions of his office, and the powers of the person so performing its duties in his stead shall cease, and the official salary and emoluments of such officer shall, during such suspension, belong to the person so performing the duties thereof, and not to the officer so suspended: Provided, however, That the President, in case he shall become satisfied that such suspension was made on insufficient grounds, shall be authorized, at any time before reporting such suspension to the Senate as above provided, to revoke such suspension and reinstate such officer in the performance of the duties of his office.

Mr. HOAR. I now ask the Secretary to read section 1768 of the Revised Statutes.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 1768. During any recess of the Senate the President is authorized, in his discretion, to suspend any civil officer appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, except judges of the courts of the United States, until the end of the next session of the Senate, and to designate some suitable person, subject to be removed, in his discretion, by the designation of another, to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the mean time; and the person so designated shall take the oath and give the bond required by law to be taken and given by the suspended officer, and shall, during the time he performs the duties of such officer, be entitled to the salary and emoluments of the office, no part of which shall belong to the officer suspended. The President shall, within thirty days after the commencement of each session of the Senate, except for any office which in his opinion ought not to be filled, nominate persons to fill all vacancies in office which existed at the meeting of the Senate, whether temporarily filled or not, and also in the place of all officers suspended, and if the Senate during such session shall refuse to advise and consent to an appointment in the place of any suspended officer, then, and not otherwise, the President shall nominate another person as soon as practicable to the same session of the Senate for the office.

Mr. HOAR. It is almost unnecessary to point out the vast difference between these two enactments. The first compelled the President to submit to the retention in office of an officer obnoxious to him, unless there was evidence of guilt or misconduct in office or that the officer had become legally disqualified or incapable, which evidence was to be submitted to the Senate with the President's reasons, and the removal could only be made if the Senate thereafter advised the President of its concurrence in his reasons and his judgment upon that evidence.

The statute of April, 1869, authorized, without reason, without responsibility, a suspension of an officer, which should be reported to the next session of the Senate and which should be effectual until the close of that session, permitting the President to renew it, and of the officer being wholly displaced from office if the Senate concurred in the appointment of a successor. Unquestionably the operation of the statute of 1869, in my judgment, is that the suspended officer is restored to his place, subject, however, to an immediate repetition of the suspending process, unless the Senate consent to the nomination and appointment of a successor in the interval. So the only thing left of the law of 1867 is the power on the part of the Senate to force back upon an unwilling Executive an officer once by him suspended, with the power on the part of the President to immediately repeat the process of suspension in the next vacation, if he see fit.

That modification of the law, though assented to by President Grant, in April, 1869, was exceedingly distasteful to President Grant, and in his message of December, 1869, he urged the repeal of this modified act with the following reasons:

It could not have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution, when providing that appointments made by the President should receive the consent of the Senate, that the latter should have the power to retain in office persons placed there by Federal appointment against the will of the President. The law is inconsistent with a faithful and efficient administration of the Government. What faith can an Executive put in officials forced upon him, and those, too, whom he has suspended for reason? How will such officials be likely to serve an administration which they know does not trust them?

The House of Representatives acted upon this recommendation also and passed a bill for the repeal of the statutes of 1867 and 1869 by a vote of 159 to 25. So, Mr. President, I think I am acting under pretty substantial Republican authority in desiring to get rid of what remains of this old legislation of the time of Andrew Johnson.

It seems to me, with all deference to the Senator from Vermont, that it is totally inconsistent with the constitutional theory of our Government that a President who is responsible for the faithful execution of the laws, and in whom the executive power is expressly lodged by the Constitution, should be compelled to answer to that responsibility when the instruments without whom it is impossible for him to act are forced upon him against his will, and are instruments in whom he has no confidence. The effect of this legislation is to destroy executive responsibility, so far as it has any effect at all. The President of the United States, with the very few exceptions of special duties with which he is intrusted, acts through subordinate officers appointed either by himself or the heads of Departments whom he appoints. And has not a President of the United States a perfect right at the close of his official term to go to the people not to answer for the success of an executive administration, as the Constitution pre-supposes, but to go to the people with the declaration that he is under no manner of responsibility whatever for the success of an administration, if the doctrine which is advanced by the Senator from Vermont has been in force? The Senator likens it to the town and county governments in New England and other States, where the officers are chosen for a term of time, and are not subject to removal except for misconduct in office in certain cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I may interrupt the Senator, I would say that I likened it to the State governments, which embrace a good deal more than the mere town and county governments.

Mr. HOAR. Well, those town and county governments are not intended to be conducted under the theory of executive responsibility. Their duties are in many cases legislative. The town itself raises the taxes and determines the amount of public expenditure, and so do the county officers in the same cases, or the amount of public expenditure in the county is determined by the Legislature of the State. These are intended to be a quasi kingdom or realm, with an administration and an executive power of their own, obedient to and regulated by the Legislature of the Commonwealth. But the Constitution of the United States is established on a totally different theory.

The Senator says that this power of the Executive of unchecked removal from office is the last refuge of the spoils system. He did not use that exact phrase, but that is the substance. I do not concur with the Senator in his views upon that question. I have for many years been of the opinion, which I have advocated in season and out of season, that the civil service of this country should be removed from political influence, and that the civil officers, except those whose conduct in office is to be determined by political theories or opinions, should be selected as the officers of a bank or the officers of a church are selected, without the slightest regard to their political opinions; and my belief in that doctrine has kept pace with and been attended by my belief in the doctrine of executive responsibility.

I do not believe there is a single person in this country, in Congress or out of Congress, with the exception of the Senator from Vermont, who has studied the methods of accomplishing this reform in the civil service, who has not been led to the belief that the first step in this direction must be to impose the responsibility of the civil service upon the Executive. Taking from the President of the United States the total control of this subject has been the policy under which the abuses that have grown up of late in the civil service have obtained. I recognize the temptation and I recognize the necessity of the action of the Congress of the United States in their struggle with Andrew Johnson, but everybody knows that out of it among other evils grew the fact that Senators undertook to make the civil service of the Government in many instances an organization for the advancement of their own political fortunes. The appointments in custom-houses, in the internal-revenue service, and in the Post-Office, which had been made in the interests and in the service of party almost ever since the foundation of the Government, ceased to be made even in the interest of a party, and came to be made in the interest of the political fortunes of special political leaders. It was out of such a condition of things that the civil service movement arose, and I believe it will be difficult to find anywhere a serious and thoughtful discussion of this subject in which the person who is engaged in it does not demand as the first step for a reform and purification of the civil service the total overthrow of the claim of individual Senators to keep the obnoxious officials in office against the will of the Executive.

Mr. President, I do not intend to follow my honorable friend into the elaborate and impassioned argument which he has submitted to the Senate. I think the mind of the Senate is made up on this question after more than eighty years of discussion. What practically does any Senator, who is opposed to the present administration in political opinion, think is to be gained by keeping this little scrap of the law upon the statute-book? Has there been an instance in our history for the last twenty years in which any official whom the President of the United States suspended has gone back into his office? Does the Senator from Vermont recollect any? Does anybody believe that the President of the United States, either he who now holds the office or any of his predecessors, refrained from suspending an officer because of the fact that that suspension must be submitted to the Senate and would have to be renewed again at the end of the next session of the Senate, if it were not by them approved? Practically the people of the United States expect and demand that no person shall be kept in office for the discharge of executive functions whom the person responsible for the success of those executive functions does claim is not an instrument in whom he has confidence.

As I said, I do not propose to detain the Senate by any full discussion of the question at this time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would the Senator like to go on this afternoon? We ought to have an executive session.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall not speak five minutes.

I do not propose, Mr. President, to enter into any extended discussion of this subject at this hour or at this time. I rose for the purpose of correcting a very serious historical error into which the Senator from Vermont has fallen. In speaking of the history of the passage of the first act of Congress upon this subject and in regard to the phrase "to be removable at the pleasure of the President," which is equivocal in its nature, ambiguous, incapable of being construed exactly, meaning either that Congress conferred a power upon the President by the act to remove or as recognizing in the President the constitutional power to make a removal, I understood him to say that that phrase was left in the act and it was passed in that form. The true history of that enactment is as follows: When the bill establishing the Department of Foreign Affairs, now called the Department of State, was introduced into the Congress of the United States, it contained in the first section the phrase referred to by the Senator from Vermont, "to be removable at the pleasure of the President," or, to quote it exactly, as I have it before me, "to be removable from office by the President of the United States." A motion was made to strike out that clause upon the ground that no such power ought to be vested in the President of the United States. A debate for several days occurred upon that motion, in which it was developed that a majority of the House of Representatives entertained the opinion that by the Constitution of the United States the power was vested in the President to make removals.

Mr. Benson, a Representative from New York, then moved to strike out the words "to be removable by the President of the United States," upon the express ground that the language was capable of the construction stated by the Senator from Vermont, as either implying a power in the President by the Constitution to make removals, or, on the other hand, as conferring that power by Congress on the President. Because the language thus used was ambiguous and doubtful, and because it was capable of these two constructions, Mr. Benson moved to strike it out and to insert another clause, which now stands in the statute, and which is incapable of being misunderstood, affirming directly and unequivocally the constitutional power of the President to make removals, and disaffirming any right on the part of Congress to confer the power on the President.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from Mississippi will pardon me for a moment, I wish to add to what he has so well said, that, beginning with Mr. Madison, the friends of the position that the power was under the Constitution with the President, opposed the retention of the clause, which was stricken out on motion, upon the very ground that it assumed that Congress had the authority to confer upon the President a power which he had under the Constitution. That appears by the debates.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator from Mississippi the language before him?

Mr. GEORGE. I have the language which was stricken out.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the Senator read it. I have it here if the Senator has not got it.

Mr. GEORGE. I have the language here. It is to be found on page 455, volume 1, of the annals of Congress.

The first clause of this bill—I quote from the annals of Congress, volume 1, page 455—after recapitulating the title of the officer and his duties, had these words:

To be removable from office by the President of the United States.

That is the language, as I understood the Senator from Vermont, which he supposed was in the statute to-day, and which he claimed was of an ambiguous and equivocal character, capable of both constructions. It was so, and for that very reason, for the very reasons urged by the Senator from Vermont to-day, on motion of Mr. Benson, of New York, supported and seconded by an able speech by Mr. Madison, that language was stricken from the bill. Curiously enough after striking it from the bill, they did not intend to leave it doubtful as to what was the meaning of the Constitution. Some insisted that the Congress of the United States had no right to put a construction upon the Constitution. Mr. Madison replied to that, and affirmed in a powerful argument that upon political questions it was within the competency of Congress to put a construction upon the Constitution. He argued also in favor of the necessity of putting in this new clause that was offered, and which I shall repeat to the Senate directly, as settling forever the question of the constitutional power of the President to make removals. It was got in in rather an awkward way, I admit, but it was put in, and it now appears in the second section of the act creating the Department of Foreign Affairs. I will read it. The second section provides:

That there shall be in the said Department an inferior officer, to be appointed by the said principal officer, to be employed therein as he shall deem proper, and to be called the chief clerk in the Department.

Now follows the language which was inserted for the purpose of removing all doubt as to the meaning of the Constitution.

And who, whenever the said principal officer shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacany, shall, during such vacancy, have the charge and custody of all records, books, and papers appertaining to the said Department.

There was the language put in this second section, avowedly by the consent of everybody, all agreeing that that is what it meant, those who opposed it as well as those who favored it affirming the absolute discretion and power of the President in case of removals.

I desire to add that this language was repeated in the same way in the act creating the Department of War, and also in the same way in the act passed at the same session creating the Department of the Treasury. Afterward, in 1798 or 1799, when Congress came to create the Navy Department, it was inserted again. I assert that up to 1867 every single act of Congress which related to this subject either affirmed expressly the power of the President to make removals, or it proceeded upon the idea that it was acknowledged by every one and uncontested by anybody that he had that power. I have examined all the statutes carefully so far as I could find them by the imperfect indexes, and there was no attempt on the part of any Congress up to the year 1867 either to deny in the passage of an act the power of the President to make removals or any attempt to confer on him the power. All the acts proceeded upon the idea that it was a power vested in the President by the Constitution which Congress could neither enlarge nor diminish.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire, if I may be permitted, whether there is to be any further discussion of this subject. If there is not, I will ask the Senator to allow a vote to be taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to speak further on it myself.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 15, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 14, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the formal introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

TREASURY ESTIMATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations for the service of the several Executive Departments of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; and also a statement of the proceeds of the sale of Government property and of expenditures for contingent expenses of the independent treasury.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, there was some dispute between the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Naval Affairs as to which of the two committees had jurisdiction of certain items of appropriation embraced in the estimates just submitted to the House. I endeavored to point out on last Saturday that these items in dispute properly belonged to the Committee on Appropriations. Since that time I have had occasion to examine the question more thoroughly in connection with the Committee on Naval Affairs, and have come to the conclusion that I was then mistaken. I have no such pride of opinion as would prompt me to adhere to an erroneous opinion when once convinced of a mistake.

There is no doubt but that at the time the new rules were being considered by the House the House did intend to refer—at least I so understood and think the House did—all those items which had theretofore been embraced in the ordinary naval appropriation bill, as it was called, to that committee, and no more. Adverting to this fact, and having that precedent in mind, and also seeing that in the Book of Estimates the items heretofore considered and embraced in the appropriation bill, called the bill of appropriations for the naval service, were all placed under the head of the "naval establishment," and that those items, and those alone, had constituted that bill heretofore, it occurred to me, and I so argued, that the words "naval establishment" must be understood with reference to that caption and with reference to the items embraced in that chapter.

But, sir, on looking at the rule as it existed prior to the adoption of the new rules or the amendments to the old, we find this subdivision 12 of Rule XI provided—

That all proposed legislation relating to the naval establishment, other than appropriations for its support, shall be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There in the old rule we also find these words:

Relating to the naval establishment.

There is no doubt that up to that time these words were considered as conferring upon the Naval Committee full and complete jurisdiction over everything relating to the navy-yards, docks, stations, and everything else. A bill authorizing the construction of docks, for instance, was at the last session introduced, and was referred without question to the Committee on Naval Affairs. So a bill authorizing the establishment of a naval station, before the change of the rules, under those words was also referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. If, then, that be a correct construction of the meaning of these words as they stood in the old rule, and it undoubtedly was the practice prior to the adoption of the new rules to consider all proposed legislation relating to the Navy, as proper subjects to be submitted to that committee, then, in that event, with these words left as they were in the rule then existing unchanged, as I have shown, they are still to have the same construction. All legislation relating to the naval establishment means now just what it meant before the change of the rule. The only change in the rule was the striking out of the words "other than appropriations for its support" from the old rule, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "including appropriations for its support."

These words must necessarily refer to the words "naval establishment" used in the preceding portion of the sentence, and must be construed as they had been construed prior to the adoption of the amendment.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I have concluded, after some hesitation and a somewhat thorough examination of the subject, that the Committee on Naval Affairs were right in instructing me to introduce this resolution:

Resolved, That the estimates submitted under the titles "navy-yards and stations" and "new naval observatory," on pages 163 and 164 of the Book of Estimates for 1888, and which aggregate $4,418,961.16, under the rules of the House should be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. HERBERT. I know that was not the understanding of the rule at the last session; but it seems to me, on examination, that it is the only correct construction of it, and I therefore offer that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to know if this resolution is in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the resolution, as now offered, leaves the remainder of the estimates submitted from the Department undisposed of. They should all be referred or distributed in some manner.

Mr. RANDALL. I was about to say, in answer to the gentleman from Alabama, that the object of the Committee on Appropriations was simply to secure an intelligent consideration by the House of these estimates, and as the subject is now up, it occurs to my mind that the distribution of the estimates should be made under the direction of the Speaker. If the gentleman from Alabama will modify his proposition to that extent I think it will be in the line of useful legislation and reach the object desired.

Mr. HERBERT. For one I am quite willing to agree to that if the remainder of the committee consent. For myself, I should be quite satisfied with any disposition of the estimates that the Speaker would make, and I am quite willing, for one, to consent to the modification of the resolution to that extent, so as to leave the Chair to decide the question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] the other day made a very fine speech, as I thought, in reference to the correct construction of the rules as to the distribution of the estimates. I concurred with him entirely, and I have no doubt a great many other gentlemen did. This morning he seems to apologize for having made a mistake in the argument he then presented, and endeavors now to make amends by stating his apology to the House. I do not think, however, he has succeeded in correcting the impression he has made on the minds of several of us.

I think the position occupied by the gentleman from Alabama in his speech the other day was entirely correct. The gentleman has only read a part of the rule in regard to the distribution of appropriations. He has not read, among other things, section 3 of Rule XI, which provides that all proposed legislation on subjects relating—

To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely: for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for pensions, and for all deficiences—

Shall be referred—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, sir, it has always been the practice of the House—at least it has been the practice for ten or twelve years, from the Forty-third Congress within my personal observation—to place appropriations for docks and yards in the sundry civil bill. And when you come to inquire what the House meant in adopting the rule of sending sundry civil expenses to the Committee on Appropriations, how do you ascertain it? It is not defined in any express forms of words. The only way of reaching it is to take up your sundry civil bill and see what it is by examining the items, and in that way ascertaining what the House did mean.

It is true, as the gentleman from Alabama has said, that the old rule declared that all the legislation on subjects relating to the naval establishment—

Other than the appropriations for its support—should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and that appropriations for the support of the Navy under the new rule go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. That is true; but it is coupled with the other provision that the appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government shall go to the Committee on Appropriations, that has always had charge of them.

Therefore, I take it, the rules of the House intended that the ordinary current expenses for the pay of the Navy, the estimates of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, and the usual items connected with the naval appropriation bill should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I take it that the House in adopting that rule meant that and nothing more.

Now, sir, it is important that this House, having adopted its rules, shall see to the correct execution of them. It does not lie within the power of any committee of this House, the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Naval Affairs, to determine whether or not this is a correct distribution or an intelligent distribution of the estimates and so undertake to revise it. The question involved is not only as to the duties of the Committee on Appropriations; it is not only as to the duties of the Committee on Naval Affairs. If it was confined to that I should have had nothing to say. But the very same question will arise in reference to postal matters with which I am more immediately concerned, and with reference to the duties of other committees charged with appropriations. And I trust that when this question shall be raised as to what are the duties and powers of committees under the rules of this House it shall not come from any of the committees interested in the question, but shall be brought up by the Committee on Rules and take its regular course.

I conceive it, therefore, to be my duty under the circumstances to object to the consideration of this resolution. It is not in order at this time, and I am not willing for one to consent to the adoption of any other mode than that which we have fixed in our caution and wisdom for changing the rules of the House.

Mr. HERBERT rose.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote. I want to get on.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Georgia. I only want two or three minutes. The gentlemen has twitted me with having changed my mind. I have already admitted that I have done so. I have a friend that divides mankind into two classes, the teachables and the unteachables. I always prided myself that I belonged to the teachables; and if I have come to the conclusion that I am in error, I have always been ready to say so.

As to the point of order, I submit that it comes too late. The gentleman from Georgia discusses the merits of the question, and then, after discussing the merits of the question and after having permitted me to discuss the merits of the question, he concluded by saying the resolution is not in order. I say he makes the point too late. And in the second place I contend that the resolution is in order under Rule XLII, which is as follows:

Estimates of appropriations and all other communications from the Executive Departments intended for the consideration of any committees of the House shall be addressed to the Speaker, and by him submitted to the House for reference.

That is exactly what the Speaker has done; and so this resolution is in order, and it is competent for the House to act upon it. I am willing, however, to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], and allow the Chair to decide this question, if there be no objection. I am satisfied he will decide it correctly; and that is all I desire and all that is desired by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am certainly content to take the opinion of the Chair, if that satisfies other gentlemen as to the construction of this rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has simply, in compliance with the rule of the House, submitted this communication, with the estimates, to the House for reference. The resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] relates only to a very small part of the Book of Estimates, leaving the remainder of the estimates undistributed. The Chair thinks that the resolution, if it is to be passed, ought to be so amended as to dispose of the entire Book of Estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. The Speaker of the House presents those estimates under the rule; therefore the interpretation of the rule belongs to the Speaker.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, there are now, so far as I know, no other items than these about the reference of which there is any dispute.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not true that the President's message, with accompanying documents, is now pending in Committee of the Whole for disposition by that committee?

The SPEAKER. It is. So is the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and the report of the Attorney-General. The Chair would state that in the ordinary routine business of the House, when a communication is received from an Executive Department which relates to only one subject, the Chair simply lays it before the House and indicates the committee to which it shall be referred; but when there is a communication which relates to a variety of subjects, some of which belong to one committee and some to another, the Chair has never assumed the authority to distribute the several parts of such a document, but has left that for the action of the House itself.

The case here is that the Book of Estimates transmitted with the communication which has just been read relates to all the appropriations for the support of the Government in all its branches. Some parts of it go to the Committee on Military Affairs, some to the Committee on Naval Affairs, some to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and so on throughout the entire list of committees having jurisdiction to make appropriations. The Chair thinks, therefore, that the House should either pass a resolution providing for the distribution of these documents, or should adopt some resolution or agree to some motion which will authorize the Speaker of the House to make the distribution so that all the estimates may be disposed of.

Mr. HERBERT. Then, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House I will modify my resolution so as to require the Speaker of the House to distribute the estimates where they properly belong under the rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. The resolution involves the construction of the rules of the House. Does not that carry it to the Committee on Rules for inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can move to refer it to the Committee on Rules if he desires.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I do move to refer it to the Committee on Rules. I simply want to have this matter decided right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] moves to refer the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], with this communication and the Book of Estimates, to the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] whether this depredation was made under order of the army.

Mr. GOFF. It was not a depredation; it was a case of cattle being taken.

Mr. RANDALL. Were they taken by military order?

Mr. GOFF. They were taken by an officer of the commissary department, and used.

Mr. MORRISON. That does not appear.

Mr. GOFF. The report states that it is fully proven; the evidence is in the Department.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. CABELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CINNABAR AND CLARK'S FORK RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at 3 minutes before 1 o'clock, and the pending proposition is the bill (H. R. 5880) granting a right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, &c. The gentleman from Illinois has fifty-five minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. PAYSON. The bill is pending in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of that bill. And pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I move that debate on the bill and amendments thereto be limited to a quarter of an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only make his motion in regard to general debate by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. COX, of New York. I object. The gentleman might extend it at least to thirty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us take the whole time.

Mr. PAYSON. I will consent to that extension.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be compelled to suspend public business unless order is observed. There is too much conversation on the floor and in the rear of the seats.

Mr. PAYSON. I will modify my request, and ask that debate be closed after thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I object.

Mr. PAYSON. I move, then, that general debate be closed in fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. I now move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5880) granting a right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, &c., on which general debate has been limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Let the report of the committee be read.

The report (by Mr. PAYSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom were referred the bills (H. R. 2881 and H. R. 3756) granting right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, respectfully report:

That they have given these bills very careful consideration, and unanimously recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute bill. They have reached this conclusion after careful review of the facts.

The company was chartered in 1884, under the laws of Montana, to construct a railroad from Cinnabar, a point on the Livingston branch of the North Pacific Railroad, to Cook City, in Southern Montana, a total distance of about 56 miles.

Cook is the central point of the New World, or Clark's Fork, mining district. Over five hundred mines have been located and well prospected, and many of them in successful operation, within the range of a few miles from that point. This district is one of remarkable richness, and your committee believe it to be of national importance that its development should be promoted. It is located in a mountainous region, wholly inaccessible by any practicable route except that proposed in the bill. The turns of the river necessarily carry the road into the northern border of the National Park, running out of it again to reach its terminus in Southern Montana.

The park at present is 65 miles in length from its northern to its southern boundary, and will be over 75 miles if the bill to change its boundaries now pending in the Senate should become a law.

By the Government exploration under Professor Hayden, in 1878, the railroad following the course of the river would lie close along the northern boundary of the park, reaching, by a sudden bend of the East Fork to the south, a point about 6, and not exceeding 7, miles below the northern boundary, and this for only a short distance. If, however, the county map of Gallatin County, said to have been made from an actual survey of the river in 1884, be correct, the river, so far as it would be followed by this railroad, lies outside of the park for most of its distance; and the farthest point south which it would reach would not be more than 2 miles below the northern boundary and for a distance not exceeding 10 miles; but whichever map be correct, there is nothing of interest except these mines to attract tourists or travel of any kind to that part of the park which this road would traverse. It would be merely a mining road for ores and bullion and mining supplies.

That these mines are of great value is beyond all question. A large number of mines are being already worked. Three smelters are in partial operation, but the expense of transportation is so great that they must be abandoned if greater facilities be not supplied.

The only access to this district is by a rude wagon road, which for more than half its distance is upon the natural surface of the ground, picking its way among rocks and stumps and over marshes and up and down the sides of steep ravines, where teaming is often dangerous and so expensive as practically to preclude the working of the mines.

It has been represented to the committee that an experimental shipment of about 150 tons of ores from the Black Warrior and Elk Horn Mines at Cook City was made to Omaha, the nearest reduction works. The ores averaged $112.50. The cost of reduction was $16 per ton, and the transportation was $92 per ton, giving to the miner $4.50 per ton to cover mining and other expenses. With railroad facilities the total transportation would not have exceeded $15 per ton.

The committee deem it appropriate further to say that they favor the preservation of the park for the purposes for which it was set apart, but they are unable to see how any such purposes can be interfered with by granting a right of way to a road which merely dips into the northern border of the park for a short distance, in a part of it which contains no objects of interest, and where no other practicable route exists by which those mines can be reached.

The bill carefully guards the interests of the park by prohibiting the taking of any material for construction outside of the limits of the right of way, which is limited to 100 feet each side of the center line, and there is no timber in that portion of the park along the proposed route.

The following extracts from official and other sources are submitted as part of the evidence on which the conclusions of the committee are based:

Daniel C. Kingman, Engineer Corps, United States Army, in charge of improvement of Yellowstone National Park, in his report for 1883 (Senate Ex. Doc. 47, part 3, page 10, Forty-Eighth Congress, first session), recommends an appropriation of $20,000 "for the repair of the Clark's Fork road from Yancies via Soda Butte to the boundary of the park, in the direction of the Clark's Fork mines, and says:

"This route is off the ordinary line of tourist travel. The mines, however, are said to be of unusual richness, and a large mining camp is growing up at Cook City. The inhabitants of this region receive their mail from the terminus of the railroad at Cinnabar, Mont., over this road. In the same way all their supplies, tools, and machinery reach them, and the products of their mines must seek the market by this route.

The present road is in a very bad condition, almost impassable at certain seasons, and there seems to be no way of improving it unless it is done by the National Government. Being in the Park, it does not belong to any county, and these people can hardly be expected to build it for themselves."

On the 29th of February, 1884, Hon. H. M. Teller, Secretary of the Interior, in reply to an inquiry from Hon. G. G. Vest, says:

"It [the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad] would therefore extend into the park but a comparatively short distance along its northern border. The principal objects of interest to tourists are in portions of the park remote from the route above mentioned, and the operation of a railroad over this route [the same now asked for] would not, therefore, detract from their beauty or grandeur, nor would it interfere with the game of the park to a greater extent than the wagon teams by means of which communication between the points named is now carried on.

"It is known that a flourishing mining camp has been established at Clark's Forks, and valuable and productive mines have been opened at that point.

"To refuse to afford those interested in the development of this mining region the benefits of the cheaper means of transportation a railroad would supply, merely because the road must enter the park, and where its construction would not tend to subvert the purpose for which the park was set aside, or interfere with the public enjoyment of its wonders, would be unreasonable.

"In view of the apparent commercial necessity for its construction, I do not know of any sufficient reason why the desired right of way should not be granted"

Mr. Henry Gannett, of the United States Geological Survey, who made the exploration of the northern portion of the park under Professor Hayden from which the map of 1878 was compiled, in a letter dated February 19, 1884, submitted to the committee, says:

"The road proposed is the only one practicable to reach those mines. The ridges of the Shoshone and Yellowstone range trend in a general north and south direction, and any railroad attempting to reach these mines from the west must cross them nearly at right angles. These mountains are extremely rugged, and contain very few passes practicable even for pack animals. That at the head of the East Fork, which it is proposed to use for this railroad, is the only one available for this purpose.

"In my judgment a railroad on this route cannot injure the park as a pleasure resort. It traverses a region in which there are no objects of interest, with the exception of the third cañon of the Yellowstone and of the Shoshone Mountains, which differ in no essential particular from similar scenery elsewhere."

General A. Anderson, chief engineer of the Northern Pacific Railroad, in a letter of May 10, 1884, says:

"Any route to the Clark's Fork mines, leaving the Northern Pacific Railroad, east of Livingston, must cross the main range of the Snow Mountains, which is very high, of very steep descent on the north side, and can not be surmounted at reasonable cost without the use of grades of probably 150 feet or more per mile. The Snow Mountains are noted for their heavy snow fall, which commences early in autumn and lies late in the spring. It is doubtful if a road could be operated except at an expense far beyond any possible return of cost. To conclude, a railroad to Clark's Fork mines across the Snow Mountains will be so costly of construction, and so difficult and expensive to operate, that it will never be built. The only feasible route is by way of the Yellowstone River. It would pass across a corner of the National Park but little visited by tourists, and wholly devoid, I believe, of those natural features calculated to attract them."

In a letter of January 28, 1886, in reply to further inquiry, General Anderson reiterates his statement that the route up the Yellowstone River is the only practicable route, and says:

"There is no other practicable route existing for a road to the Clark's Fork mines. Several others have been suggested, the principal ones being to build up the stream known as the Clark's Fork from near Billings, and the other to ascend the Boulder River. It is perhaps possible to build a railroad on one or the other of these lines, but from information derived from army officers who have had occasion to pass through the country, I am confident no practicable route exists. Clark's Fork runs for many miles in a cañon, through which, I believe, no one has ever been able to pass.

"The Clark's Fork mines are situated on the headwaters of a stream entering into the Yellowstone River in the National Park, and to reach them through or by the Clark's Fork would require the line to cross the main divide between Clark's Fork and the Yellowstone River, the elevation of which is probably about 9,000 feet above the level of the sea, and can not be surmounted except at great cost, and by using excessive grades, exceeding 200 feet to the mile.

"The route by Boulder River is equally bad, if not worse. It would require crossing the Snow Mountains, one of the most rugged ranges in Montana and covered with perpetual snow."

The richness and value of the Clark's Fork mining district have been known for many years.

Professor Hayden, in his report for 1872, says:

"About the sources of the Middle Fork and Clark's Fork are some very interesting silver mines, not yet developed to any extent, but the ore, which is galena, looks well; but the mines are so difficult of access, so far from the market, and the seasons are so short, that their value is nominal at this time."

He adds:

"Still, the rapidity with which this Western country develops under the stimulus of rich mines and railroads is so great that these far-away ores may become valuable sooner than we could anticipate. A regular mining district has been formed here and numerous lodes staked out."

Subsequently, and several years after the park had been established, the New World, or Clark's Fork, mining district was legally established, taking in 12 miles from east to west and 6 from north to south. The Government has received and continues to receive the price of all mining claims located therein. Good faith seems to require that the Government, which has established this mining district and invited purchasers, and received the proceeds of sales, should afford to such purchasers reasonable access to their property by railroad, which is the only practicable means, and by the route proposed in this bill, which the committee is satisfied is the only possible road by which these mines can be reached.

These views are confirmed by letters from several other engineers familiar with the country, all of whom concur in saying there is no other practicable route to reach the Clark's Fork mining district, except by the way of the Yellowstone River.

Many letters, memorials, reports of public meetings, &c., have been submitted to the committee, showing an intense interest of the people in Southern Montana, and most earnestly praying that the right of way through the park be granted for this road.

All these papers, and others not cited, and the maps referred to, are in the hands of the committee, and accessible to all who desire to inspect them.

The committee believes the present bill carefully guards the park against any abuse, fully protects the public, and requires the road to be built and running within three years, or the right of way granted shall be forfeited.

[H. R. 5880, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported the following bill as a substitute for H. R. 2881 and 3756:

A bill granting a right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, and so forth.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a right of way is hereby granted the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Montana, across such portions of the northern border of the Yellowstone National Park as may be necessary to reach, by the nearest practicable route from Cinnabar, the Clark's Fork mining district, in said Territory of Montana, by the way of the Yellowstone River to its junction with the East Fork of said river; thence by the way of said East Fork to the Soda Butte Creek; thence by said creek to the Clark's Fork mining district, upon such location as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875. Said right of way hereby granted shall not exceed 100 feet on each side of the center line of said railroad, except at such points, not nearer than 7 miles from each other, as may be designated by said railroad company for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, at which points the right of way shall be not exceeding 200 feet in width on each side of the center line of said railroad, and shall be not exceeding 2,000 feet in length; and no rights of any kind shall vest in said railroad company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual surveys for the definite location of said railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior and be duly approved by him. No timber or other materials to be used in the construction of said railroad shall be cut or taken from any portion of the Yellowstone National Park, except such as may be cut or taken within the right of way hereby granted; and the grants hereby made are limited also so as not to include any coal or other mineral found on said right of way; nor shall said company, or its successors, use the property given hereby for any purpose except in the construction and operation of a railroad.

SEC. 2. That all charges for transportation of either freight or passengers over said railroad shall be reasonable, and without discrimination as to persons, shippers, or consignees; no rebates or drawbacks of any kind or nature shall be allowed, directly or indirectly, to any patron of the railroad; nor shall there be any unjust discrimination in the facilities afforded shippers or consignees at any station on the line of said railroad; and as to these and all kindred matters Congress reserves the right to make all necessary regulations as to said railroad, in consideration of this grant, as well as to alter or amend this act.

SEC. 3. That if said road shall not be constructed and in running order within three years from and after the passage of this act, the right of way hereby granted shall thereupon be forfeited, and this condition is expressly understood to be a condition precedent as to all rights granted hereby; and in case of a breach of the condition of this section, all rights granted hereby shall revert to the United States by operation of this provision, without the necessity of any action by Congress: Provided, That the grant hereby shall not be held or construed as exclusive, so as to prevent the allowance of the locating other roads along the valley or route adopted under this act, under such grants and regulations as Congress may make and provide and the courts equitably administer.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was last under consideration, and the time limited under the rules had expired, I was stating that the location of mineral claims in this district that I proposed to be reached by this line of road mainly were individual locations. As to the richness of the mines there is no dispute. Placer mining has been carried on in that locality for the last twenty-five years, long before there was any railroad of communication within a thousand miles of it. All the rights of the Government are so carefully guarded by the provisions of the bill that nothing is left to the railway company except the bare right to maintain and operate a railroad from Gardiner to Cook City. No other right is given, and every other thing that is done in reference to it is under the absolute control and direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

There is no other line by which this location can be reached, as surveys have demonstrated, except this one. Two other trails across the mountains have been followed, but on neither is it possible to construct even a narrow-gauge road.

The wagon-road from this mining district to the end of the railroad as now constructed is a fair mountain road. Freights over it have reached $35 a ton for 56 miles of carriage.

I believe that is all I desire to say in respect to the bill, unless some question may be asked in reference to it as to a question of fact. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana, and then will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent a constituency that is directly interested in this legislation. I undertake to say that the passage of this bill is absolutely a commercial necessity in the interest of these men, the best part of whose lives, energies, and fortunes have been spent in what is known as the Clark's Fork mining district.

In that locality there are between five and six hundred mineral locations—locations that were made long before the establishment of the National Park, and locations which have been kept alive by the performance of the necessary representation work under the laws of the United States, which entitle these parties to remain in occupancy and possession of these claims.

As has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], these are claims which in the main belong to individual citizens of the Territory of Montana, and who reside within that mineral district. The provisions of this bill so guard the rights of the Government, so guard the objects and purposes for which the park itself was originally created, that it can result in no possible detriment either to the Government or to the National Park itself. It simply provides for a right of way of 100 feet on each side of the central line of the road through a portion of the park, being the extreme northeastern corner.

Mr. BLANCHARD. For how many miles?

Mr. TOOLE. Through the northeastern corner of the park for a distance not to exceed 25 miles; and it passes over the only natural route by which that point can be attained.

It is wholly an unattractive country.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman permit me? Is this not the only home for the game now in the park? Is it not the only place that has been left to them?

Mr. TOOLE. I undertake to say that that is not a correct statement with reference to it. The game passes up further into the park, what there is of it. This provides for the right of way through this northeastern corner only; but there exists a very exaggerated idea as to the extent of the game there. But, Mr. Chairman, even if it were otherwise, is it true that the rights and privileges of citizenship, the vast accumulation of property, and the demands of commerce of this country are to yield to the mere caprice of a few sportsmen bent only on the protection of a few buffalo in the National Park? If this is so, then it seems to me that it is the duty of the Congress to see that some change is made in the rules and regulations respecting the character of game permitted in that park, or that its borders shall be curtailed. In superficial extent the park is 65 miles long by 55 miles wide, an empire in itself.

But, sir, I was proceeding to say that it is wholly an unattractive country. There is nothing whatever in it, no object of interest to the tourist, and there is not one out of twenty who ever visits for purposes of observation this remote section. There is scarcely any timber there, and the bill, which is now being considered, provides that no timber or material out of which the road is to be constructed shall be taken from any portion of the National Park, or any part except this limited amount of land which is granted as a right of way.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me again?

Mr. TOOLE. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. If the sole purpose of this bill is to grant the right of way to reach this mining district, what is the object of granting additional land at every 7 miles? For the purpose of erecting hotels?

Mr. TOOLE. Well, it does not provide for anything in the way of hotels. It does provide additional ground at specific points for the erection of station-houses, turn-outs, and the necessary equipments of the road.

Mr. STEELE. This is every 7 miles?

Mr. TOOLE. Yes, sir; that is the provision.

Mr. STEELE. And at every one of these points—at every 7 miles—they are to have an additional 200 feet in width?

Mr. TOOLE. Yes, sir, for the erection of station-houses, &c.

Mr. STEELE. And they come to Congress asking only the right of way to reach a mining camp, as they claim, and yet they want land for station-houses every 7 miles?

Mr. TOOLE. Yes; because it is believed to be necessary for the proper equipment of the road to provide station-houses.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill is wrongly entitled. It should be denominated "A bill for the spoliation of this Yellowstone Park."

This measure is opposed by the Secretary of the Interior in his recent report; and in that report, as well as in the views of the minority of the Senate Committee, the House will see how many gentlemen, military men, engineers, scientists, &c., distinguished in this country, have been and are opposed in toto to this proposition.

This is a measure which is inspired by corporate greed and natural selfishness against national pride and natural beauty! It is a shame to despoil this park for mere mercenary purposes, such as running a railroad to these mines, however valuable, in its northeastern corner.

If the gentleman had not cut us off by so brief a debate, it could be demonstrated that the mines in this location could be reached by other railways already projected, and some, perhaps, partly built. It can be established that they could be reached by connection with the main route to the east by other railways. Besides, we could show that this park would be utterly spoiled by the advent of the locomotive; not merely because the locomotive burns up trees, but fires the forest; and thus denudes the country, making thereby bad sanitation. This produces ruin in various ways to the natural beauties of this "Wonder Land." This bill has a mere limited and mercenary object; the reaching of a few mines in that region is the entering wedge to take away from us absolutely and forever one of the most splendid marvels belonging to the country.

Suppose, sir, this corporation has bestowed on it the privilege for the transportation of their ores, and of reaching the park in another way. Then, my friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] will doubtless say that it will cost more to build a road on the Billings route than to build this Yellowstone road running along the Yellowstone valley. I know it will cost more. It will cost perhaps four or five million dollars. It is on a higher elevation. It will therefore be more difficult to construct; while this road will be shorter and cheaper.

But in dealing with this question we have not merely to do with a matter of mines or money, transportation or commerce. It is a question of preserving this rare laboratory and its surroundings. It is laid out, fixed, and guarded by our law and custodians. It was fixed prudently and carefully. It is some 55 miles by 60 in its proper shape. Not merely for the preservation of game, which are there herded and protected, but to protect the scenery itself against the fires that follow the locomotive. The reports show how the forests of that country have already been burned by the improvidence of the settlers and the carelessness of hunters and tourists. Some sixty fires have been reported. When you regard the fact that it is a national duty to preserve this remarkable park, to say nothing of its sanitary, æsthetic, and scientific value, would it not be well to consider wisely before we allow this railroad, for mere pecuniary profit, to enter upon this charmed land?

I wish I could, in the short time allotted to me, read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior. He dedicates some four or five pages to this subject, together with other communications. He makes a protest that we ought to understand. It is not a question for Montana nor any other Territory or locality. It is not a question for a few people in a territory who desire to be incorporated for mining. It is a question for the United States, and for all that gives elevation and grace to our human nature, by the observation of the works of physical nature.

Again, I oppose this bill because of the way in which it is being engineered through this House—no doubt without the connivance or the help of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], who does so much to reclaim our acres. I would not charge him with seeking to authorize any railroad monopoly in this splendid part of our country. But I say at the bottom of it and behind it all are men who have but one object—to reach the mines that may be increased in value by the proposed railroad. The mines may be valuable. They desire to reach those mines, not in the interest of the people of the United States, but for their own self-aggrandizement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to amend in line 23 of the first section of the bill by striking out "200" and inserting "100;" so that it will read:

At which points the right of way shall be not exceeding 100 feet in width, &c.

That leaves the right of way to be 100 feet wide. We know what sort of premises will require to be occupied by this railroad, and the right of way ought not to be 200 feet wide, which is 100 feet wider than ordinary railroads have.

This bill authorizes the railroad company to take the timber and stone and other material along the line of road for such purposes as they may desire in building this road and the station-houses; and I submit that 100 feet is more than enough for all practical purposes for a mere railroad. I am, therefore, opposed to conveying in this way the right to take this timber and stone upon a greater width of territory than 100 feet.

Mr. PAYSON. I think there is no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, and I hope the committee will adopt it so as to make the width of the right of way on each side 100 feet.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether the bill is now before the committee under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been read by sections for amendment. The Clerk will read the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a right of way is hereby granted the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Montana, across such portions of the northern border of the Yellowstone National Park as may be necessary to reach, by the nearest practicable route from Cinnabar, the Clark's Fork mining district, in said Territory of Montana, by the way of the Yellowstone River to its junction with the East Fork of said river; thence by the way of said East Fork to the Soda Butte Creek; thence by said creek to the Clark's Fork mining district, upon such location as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875. Said right of way hereby granted shall not exceed 100 feet on each side of the center line of said railroad, except at such points, not nearer than 7 miles from each other, as may be designated by said railroad company for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, at which points the right of way shall be not exceeding 200 feet in width on each side of the center line of said railroad, and shall be not exceeding 2,000 feet in length; and no rights of any kind shall vest in said railroad company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual surveys for the definite location of said railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior and be duly improved by him. No timber or other materials to be used in the construction of said railroad shall be cut or taken from any portion of the Yellowstone National Park, except such as may be cut or taken within the right of way hereby granted; and the grants hereby made are limited also so as not to include any coal or other mineral found on said right of way; nor shall said company, or its successors, use the property given hereby for any purpose except in the construction and operation of a railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23 strike out the word "two," and insert the word "one."

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish either to support or oppose the amendment. I do not attach any importance to the question whether the right of way be 100 feet or 200 feet in width. Practically it is a matter of no consequence, and does not remove any of the objections to the bill. One objection I have to the bill is that there is no real necessity for it; that is to say the mines in the neighborhood of Cook City can be reached by another road equally practicable, but perhaps more expensive, and on that point I wish to call the attention of the committee to what is said on the subject by Professor Arnold Hague, who has spent many years in that park in the employment of the United States Geological Survey. I ask that a question addressed to him and the answer given by him under oath last year before the special committee of the House to inquire into the expenditure of public money in the Indian service and Yellowstone Park may be read to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Q. How far, if at all, does a scheme for constructing a railroad to a mining point east of the park called Cook enter into the question made as to a change in the northern boundary of the park?

A. The people who desire a railroad to Cook City wish to make the Yellowstone River the boundary of the park, in order to follow up the north bank. This would make the north boundary of the park considerably south of the forty-fifth parallel, and would leave a wedge-shaped area of Wyoming north of the park. The effect of this would be to throw open an extensive region of timbered country and a large area drained by the east fork of the Yellowstone, which, in my opinion, would be detrimental to the interests of the park and the Yellowstone River. A railroad, if really necessary, could be constructed to reach Cook City from Billings, on the Northern Pacific Railroad, without invading the park.

Mr. HOLMAN. Gentlemen ought of course to understand that this proposed road is virtually a part of the Northern Pacific system, and the professor makes the statement in effect—and he speaks with a more complete knowledge of the subject than perhaps any other living man, because he has been in the park for many years in the employment of the Government Geological Surveys—that the route from Billings, on the Northern Pacific, is just as practicable as the one proposed by the pending bill. I therefore submit that if it is important and necessary that these mines should be reached—mines to which the professor attaches no great importance—there is still a practicable route to reach them without invading the park.

Now, a word with regard to the objections to this project. The proposed railroad would pass along the East Fork of the Yellowstone River, its most important tributary. The Yellowstone River, draining Yellowstone Lake and a great portion of the park, is of special value as a great branch of the Missouri for irrigation, traversing a magnificent valley—probably there is no stream in the West of more importance in that respect, for irrigation is indispensable and the valley of vast extent—and the vast forests on the East Fork of the river are indispensable for the purpose of regulating the flow of water in the Yellowstone and Upper Missouri. But if you denude these vast mountain slopes of their timber—and if you pass this bill this immense area of timber is sure to disappear under the ax or be destroyed by fire—then, instead of a gradual and steady flow of water in the Yellowstone, and instead of a steady supply of water to the Upper Missouri, you will have the water coming down in vast floods and irresistible torrents, which will be destructive of a vast region of country. It is well known that the Upper Missouri River even now is subject to very great and sudden variations of volume; but this would be enormously increased by the destruction of these forests.

It was proposed, as I understand, in the interest of this same railroad enterprise, to remove the northern boundary of the park further south. As to the effect of that measure, in the probable destruction of these forests in this mountain region, Lieut. D. C. Kingman, of the Engineer Corps of the Army, who had been engaged for years in constructing roads and bridges in the park, testified before the same special committee of the House last year as follows:

I will consider first the injury that will result from the greater change; that is, to the Yellowstone River. This change would take from the park 150,000 acres, in round numbers. The greater part of this area is on the northern bank of the Yellowstone River, and forms part of its watershed. It is generally heavily timbered, and from its exposure it is admirably adapted to catch and hold the snow; it allows the snow to melt gradually during the summer, and so maintains a uniform flow in the streams and springs tributary to the Yellowstone, and thus tends to secure a uniform discharge in the river itself. If this tract of land was taken from the park it would soon be stripped of its timber, for the river would assist very much in logging. The snow would then be unprotected by the timber, would melt quickly in the spring, would cause a sudden freshet, and a corresponding period of very low water.

A uniform and abundant supply of water in the Yellowstone River is of the greatest importance to the farmers all along the Yellowstone valley, from the park down, for they must resort to irrigation in order to secure a crop. The valley of the Yellowstone is wide and continuous, and the slope of the river is such as to make irrigation easy to apply to the whole valley. The valley is fertile and capable of supporting a large agricultural population with unfailing irrigation.

The lower portion of the Yellowstone, I think for about 150 miles from its mouth, is navigable water, and the Government is annually expending money to improve and facilitate its navigation. The improvements, in order to accomplish good results, require a uniform supply of water.

The Yellowstone River is one of the largest tributaries of the Missouri, and whatever affects the water supply of the Yellowstone will affect in the same way that of the Missouri. The Yellowstone is one of the first tributaries to break up in the spring. It discharges a vast quantity of ice into the Missouri. If it breaks up with a freshet instead of gradually, as it now does, it is likely to cause destruction to property and loss of life along the Missouri valley clear to its mouth.

Another reason is that the Yellowstone River in the park is a very clear and beautiful stream. It is filled with trout, and is therefore an object of the greatest interest to all visitors to the park who are fond of fishing. If both banks of the river are in the park and under the direct control of the superintendent of the park, these fish can be protected, and they will be an inexhaustible source of pleasure and amusement to the visitors; but if the north bank of the river is removed from the control of the superintendent by this change of boundary, then it will be impossible to prevent people who fish for the market from using the net, the spear, and dynamite for their capture. This would soon exhaust the stream.

The country about Slough Creek, a tributary from the north of the Yellowstone, is a fine game country, perhaps the best in the park. It is one of the few places where buffalo are found, and elk and bear are very abundant there. All of these would, of course, be destroyed in a few years if this proposed change of boundary is made.

It is thus the judgment of men experienced in that region—it is the judgment of Professor Hague and Lieutenant Kingman, set forth in their statement before that committee—that the preservation of the forests of these elevated ranges is of the greatest importance for the purpose of regulating the flow of water in the Yellowstone and in the Upper Missouri; and I submit that if there is another and practicable route to be had to these mines without interfering with the park, even this consideration alone ought to be sufficient to prevent the passage of this bill. And who shall tell the effect of the destruction of these forests on the climate of our country!

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out the last word, and I yield to my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I am much obliged to my friend. Another consideration, sir. I believe there has been a great deal of interest felt throughout the country in the fact that the park is the final resort and the last shelter of a portion of the great game—buffalo, elk, deer, and bear—which at one time occupied in countless numbers the forests, prairies, and mountains of our country. If there are any wild buffalo left in the United States, they are in the park. There are a few; they are found in the northeastern portion of the park, not remote from the region which is proposed to be invaded by this railroad. It is a vast and almost inaccessible region, to be sure, but so far as it was visited by the gentlemen who composed the select committee I have named a year ago last summer, by order of the House, it was found to be a very interesting region, filled with the great natural beauties of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has so fitly spoken, a region of rugged and sublime scenery; and certainly those beauties can not be preserved if we are to adopt legislation which dooms these majestic forests, the grandest feature of the whole region, to destruction. For, let fire and the ax once invade those vast forests, and there will be a speedy end of the existing attractions of the extended regions of these vast mountain slopes.

The select committee I have referred to speak of these forests in their report to Congress as follows:

But on the subject of "utility," mentioned in the provision of law under which this committee was appointed, connected with the real interests of the park for the enjoyment of all the people of the United States, the preservation of the forests, which clothe with verdure the valleys, rugged declivities, and mountain peaks of the whole region, are of special moment.

These magnificent forests, while adding beauty to the rugged grandeur of these mountain ranges, are of the highest value to extended regions of country. In the park are found the sources of the great rivers west of the Mississippi, the Yellowstone and Snake Rivers; the one, traversing an immense region of fertile land, swells the waters of the Missouri, while the other is the main branch of the Columbia.

It is made very clear by the practical and scientific views presented of this subject in the testimony already presented that the regular flow of water in these rivers is greatly dependent on these forests. These mountain regions are of no value for agriculture, while their wealth of forests is of the highest economic value, besides the beneficent influence they probably exert over the rainfall, temperature, and climate of a vast region of country.

The irrigation of the magnificent valleys of the Yellowstone is believed greatly to depend on the gradual and regular flow of water in that beautiful river, greatly dependent on these protecting forests. It is believed that the rapid flow of water from these mountain regions, from barren range of peaks and declivities, would produce widespread disaster in valleys even remote from the mountains.

It is, therefore, in the judgment of the committee, of the highest moment that these forests should be protected from destruction either by fire or the ax. To this extent, having in view at once the beauty of the park as a delightful resort for the people and the value of the great streams of water that issue from the mountains, as well as the benign influence of the forests on climate and health, this park should receive the special care of the Government.

Again, two bills are pending to authorize the construction of railroads into the southern portions of the park. How can you pass a bill to permit the construction of this road without passing those other bills also? Will you not, by this legislation, throw the whole park open to railroad invasion and the vandalism of improvement? These, Mr. Chairman, are my objections to the passage of this measure.

I think that vast forest region should be preserved in its present condition, not merely because of its great natural beauties, but also for its effect upon climate and upon the flow of water in the streams of that region. All these considerations should urge upon Congress the propriety of maintaining the park as it is.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct some misapprehensions which may arise from the remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

First, as to this railroad running along the Yellowstone River and leading to the destruction of the timber there, I wish to state that it will not touch the river at any place except one, and there not exceeding half a mile in length.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it passes right along the timbered slopes.

Mr. PAYSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it does not, and if he will give me his attention I will convince him that it does not, because he was over a portion of the route at the same time that I was. From Gardiner to the East Fork of the Yellowstone River is the only place where this road is proposed to be built, and there is scarcely a tree within sight along the Yellowstone throughout that distance. The gentleman from Indiana will agree that what I say is true. The railroad leaves the Yellowstone River about 4 miles to the northeast of the Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel and bears off eastwardly to Cook City.

Mr. HOLMAN. Undoubtedly the region affected is on the east branch of the river.

Mr. PAYSON. And there is not a tree within sight for miles.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, there is no extensive region of country there which is not covered with pine forests.

Mr. PAYSON. As to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that railroads are contemplated and in process of construction from the Northern Pacific toward this mining camp, I will say no line of railroad is in process of construction and none is contemplated, except one proposed and entered upon from Billings to Cook City along to the east, a distance of 127 miles; and it is agreed by men who were on that engineering trip that the country can not be traversed by a buckboard. There is no way of reaching this Cook City mine which is deemed accessible by men engaged in engineering enterprises, except this one.

As to the criticism made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this is a scheme in the interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and by men who are concerned in that road, I will say to the gentleman that there is not upon the list furnished to the Public Lands Committee of the men engaged in this enterprise any man who now is or ever was connected with the Northern Pacific Railroad, directly or indirectly. As to this being a scheme for greed——

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. PAYSON. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Undoubtedly the gentleman from Illinois while at the park met Professor Hague?

Mr. PAYSON. I am coming to him in a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman no doubt knows Professor Hague's thorough acquaintance with that whole region of country?

Mr. PAYSON. Professor Hague says that in his judgment a railroad can be constructed with equal facility from Billings, but I have it from Professor Hague that he never was on that line at all; and the judgment he expresses is based upon statements which have come to him from men whom he regards as reliable. His duties confine him to the park; and as to matters connected with the park his judgment is no doubt good. But he says in the same report, a portion of which has been read, that the mines at Cook City are comparatively valueless; that he does not think there are any mineral deposits there which are worth anything. Now I have seen, and the gentleman from Indiana has doubtless seen, coming down that road from Cook City to Cinnabar wagon-loads of ore of such richness that the freight paid upon them for transportation to the railroad, and thence to Omaha to be reduced, was $35 a ton—ore which would yield from $140 to $160 a ton. Hundreds of tons of this ore are lying there to-day upon the dumps of those mines and can not get access to the outside because of the enormous expense attending the transportation.

Now, on the question of sentiment, I agree with the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Indiana that this park should be preserved in its present condition, so far as that goes; but you might as well say that the building of a street-railway in the city of Baltimore would interfere with the objects of beauty here in the city of Washington as to say that this proposed railroad will interfere with the natural beauty of Yellowstone Park. I call upon the gentleman from Indiana to attest the truth of what I now say, that there is not an object of natural beauty or curiosity within 4 miles of the line of this proposed road except the Mammoth Hot Springs and the little Soda Butte, which is in the mouth of an extinct geyser. All the other objects of natural curiosity or wonder are in different geyser basins to the south and east of this locality. The shriek of the locomotive whistle can not be heard anywhere in that park from the line of this road, except at the Mammoth Hot Springs Hotel, 4 miles distant. I ask the gentleman from Indiana whether I am not strictly accurate in this statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. Cinnabar is 4 miles from Mammoth Hot Springs.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes; and there is not another object of natural curiosity within 40 miles.

With all my desire to see the National Park with its natural wonders kept intact, I know, from personal observation, that this proposed road will not interfere with that condition; and I confess that I can not understand the sentiment which favors the retention of a few buffaloes to the development of mining interests amounting to millions of dollars, giving profitable employment to perhaps thousands of men, and with all the desirable results flowing from such a condition, and which can, in this case, be made available only by the construction of some railroad, and this is the only one proposed.

Mr. COX, of New York. If in order, Mr. Chairman, I desire to move an amendment to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I renew it.

Mr. Chairman, I have already stated that the Secretary of the Interior protests against this bill——

Mr. PAYSON. So he does.

Mr. COX, of New York. As a subversion of the original law for the protection of this park. He protests against it, as I said, because of fires that might take place there. He says:

> I can not but believe that the establishment of a railway in the park would prove a permanent injury to the reservation, and tend to subvert the purposes for which the park was originally set apart. The danger arising from forest fires would be very great, and the large game would disappear, as it has everywhere else, with the appearance of railways. With a railway in the park 50 miles in length, with stations every 7 miles, disagreements difficult to settle would immediately arise between a powerful railway corporation and the management of the park.

When this bill came in—it has now been amended—it was proposed to grant a right of way—

> One hundred feet on each side of the central line of the said railroad, except at such points as may be designated by said railroad company for station-houses, water-tanks, wood-sheds, turn-tables, side-tracks, and spur-tracks, at which points the right of way shall be 400 feet in width, 200 feet on each side of the central line of said railroad, and 2,000 feet long.

Mr. PAYSON. Not exceeding that.

Mr. COX, of New York. Not exceeding that. Now suppose this railroad goes through the meadows of this park, how will it cut them? It will cut them diagonally and in various ways. What becomes of the remnant of the property? It is very likely rendered useless.

The atmosphere is dry there; and when a fire begins in those mountains, as I once saw it in the town of Truckee, it leaves nothing but charred stumps, which are not attractive. I have never visited this park, and never wish to visit it if this railroad should be built.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman had been there he would not come in now to make this opposition.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have seen places in other countries where fire has destroyed the timber. Spain is denuded to-day of forests. In Southern Spain, at places I have visited, you can only get one crop in four years unless you have artificial irrigation. Go to Judea, go to Syria, go to Greece, go to Turkey if you please [laughter], and you will see the whole country denuded of trees by the improvidence of the peasantry and the shepherds with their goats and by the fires which occur so frequently. In this way a land which once supported its millions becomes useless for the purpose of agriculture and for advancing otherwise the welfare of the people.

I now protest in time against constructing this railroad through the Yellowstone Park. This is the entering wedge. If we authorize this road other railroads will follow. We are an advancing people. With the aid of water and its vapor, electricity and the prompt and careless navigation of bills through this House, we know what will follow in the wake of this progress.

The gentleman says there is only one other road projected. I did not mean to say absolutely that some other roads were being constructed, but projected. In fact other roads are projected, according to the Secretary of the Interior. This bill blazes the way for other bills and projects.

This bill sweeps away the park, if not at once, but in the future, by its being the pioneer. We will stop at no point where we can save this park for our people, unless we stop here and now, whether for our tourists, for pleasure, for science or recreation, it will have to go. Why, sir, six thousand tourists visited the park last year. Hotels are placed there for them. It is properly guarded under present legislation. General Sheridan, Mr. Powell—not only Powell, but Phillips, special agents, investigating the park. Professor Arnold Hayne, Professor Kingman, of the Corps of Engineers, and many others are quoted in the reports as having knowledge of the facts. They have entered their earnest protests against the spoliation by this railroad. I hope, therefore, the bill will not only not be amended to make it better; for the better it is the worse it is. [Laughter.] Let us vote it down and preserve this marvelous scenery for our people to-day, and for our posterity. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to implore the House to stand by the sanctity of the one national park on this continent. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], who so ably marshals this bill, admitted there are only a few buffaloes still within the limits of the park. Then he tells us when the tramp of civilization was heard the buffalo inevitably departed. I think, sir, the roar and scream of the locomotives have banished the buffalo. I crossed that portion of the continent in which they herded, in the first sleeping-car that ever passed from the waters of the Atlantic to those of the Pacific. Buffaloes so abounded then that trains were frequently detained until the herd should have passed, and our sportsmen amused themselves by shooting from the car-windows, merely to show that they could take the life of so large an animal as the buffalo, and the remains were allowed to lie and rot upon the plains. When next I traversed that region there were men employed to gather the bones of the buffalo for manufacture into a variety of articles in far-off New England, and the skins were gathered for what might be made out of them in the Eastern States also. But the herds of buffalo had disappeared. Now, if there are a few remaining in that park, and they are protected, there will be more to be seen by the tourists who go there.

It is admitted there are hot springs and soda buttes. I think it is admitted that both will be affected. Now should not the traveler near the northern part of that park, who has not time to traverse its whole length, see what these things are by devoting a few hours to them?

But the great argument is, that if we enter this portion, and another in the south, others will be yielded to and others still, and the sanctity of the National Park will be destroyed. It is safe to stand by it. The Government has pledged itself to maintain it, and all its wonders of still and animal life, for posterity. Why shall we not do it? Why shall we begin at this day? If we yield to any one, then any corporation which wants any portion of it can have it. I protest against any action which will afford any encouragement to any other speculators to ask the American Congress to invade that territory. ["Cries of Vote!"]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have been greatly interested in the fervid eloquence and Oriental imagery of the distinguished gentleman from New York in opposition to this bill, but while his words please the ear, they fail to persuade my mind. He opposes the bill on purely sentimental and visionary grounds. It is said that the beauties of the Yellowstone Park are to be destroyed if the shriek of the steam engine is to be heard on its very margin and the locomotive sparks are to consume every vestige of vegetation in its track. A few years ago I listened to just such talk in my own State. When it was proposed to charter a railroad to the top of Mount Washington our legislative halls resounded with eloquent protests against thus invading the White Mountain region. The most direful prophecies were uttered in words almost identical with those which have fallen from the lips of the gentleman from New York.

But the good sense of our people recognized the necessities of the case, sentiment gave way to public exigency, the railroad was built, and no harm resulted. A few years later a proposition was made to charter a railroad to the famous Crawford Notch in the White Mountains. Again our house of representatives was the scene of eloquent protests against the proposed innovation. Again it was declared that the magnificent scenery of the Switzerland of America would be destroyed, the forests would be consumed, and the region be utterly ruined as a place of summer resort. But this railroad, too, was built, and none of the dire disasters prophesied have come to pass. The scenery remains, no fires have invaded the forests, the locomotive shriek disturbs no one, and the travel to the White Mountains from all over the world grows larger and larger year by year.

The gentleman from New York says six thousand tourists visited the Yellowstone Park last year. Why, ten or twenty times that number go annually to the White Mountains of New Hampshire, and not one of those tourists, and not a citizen of the State, so far as I know, would for a moment think of dispensing with these railroads, the construction of which was fought with the same zeal and bitterness that are displayed to-day in opposition to the measure now under consideration.

I know, Mr. Chairman, the influence that sentiment wields in matters of this kind, but I will venture to express the hope that sentiment will yield to public policy, and that the bill will be enacted into law. This is all I care to say, and I thank the committee for listening so attentively to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume that the pro forma amendments are withdrawn in the absence of objection.

Mr. CANNON. I renew the pro forma amendments.

Mr. Chairman, I only want to say a word about this bill. It was my fortune to visit this park a year ago with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and some other members of the House of Representatives. So far as I am personally concerned I care but little about the buffalo and other game said to be there, though I do acknowledge that many gentlemen in this country desire the preservation of the game. That, however, is a question that does not enter into my opposition; and if that was the only objection to the construction of this road I think I should vote for the bill.

My opposition is based upon information gained from those who I think are fully able to give information upon the subject, having had opportunities in connection with their duties touching this park.

The lieutenant of engineers, who has spent several years there, or at least portions of each year, whose duty it is to be there in connection with the improvement of the park, is one from whom I have derived information; also from Mr. Hague, connected with the Geological Survey, and others. They take this position, Mr. Chairman, which strikes me with a great deal of force: This park in the main is covered with timber, small pine timber. There is some large growth, but in the main the growth of timber is small. There is a wonderful snow-fall in the park, and the timber holds what soil there is, and consequently the snow is held, allowing it to melt gradually. Now, gentlemen will understand that the Yellowstone River and also a tributary of the Columbia River have their origin in the park, and if the snow-fall were not preserved to a certain extent by the soil and timber, instead of melting gradually and thus feeding these streams through the dry season, it would suddenly melt and produce great freshets in the spring. And not only would you have great freshets, but the water supply for the summer is gone. If it melts gradually, on the other hand, it feeds the Yellowstone during the summer and can be utilized for purposes of irrigation in that magnificent valley.

The great danger, then, Mr. Chairman, is, if the road is allowed to be built, that the timber will be burned. It burns very easily. Large portions of it have been already burned; and the fear in the mind of the gentlemen to whom I have referred and others who are conversant with the matter is, that if you open this park to the construction of railroads you make it more subject to danger from fire.

There is another thing: These mines spoken of are just outside of the park on the northern border. This engineer officer to whom I have referred says in his evidence that a creek along this border, a tributary of the Yellowstone, carries gold in the gravel of its bed. I suppose from the best information I can get that there is a great deal of mineral wealth in that portion of the park along the Yellowstone and its tributaries, and I submit to the House that if you construct this railroad and throw it open, with the mines being developed just outside of the park, that in the park you can not keep the prospector off, and you had as well throw it all open, not only to the railroad and the miner as well, but to the public generally, and abandon it as a park.

So, to my mind, it is far more important to preserve the timber for the reason I have stated, to feed these streams, one of which runs to the Pacific and one to the Atlantic, for purposes of irrigation along their borders, than to open up this mining camp; and while I sympathize with those gentlemen who desire to construct this road along the route designed, it being the cheapest route they can find, yet I think that in the interest of the whole people of the country it is important that their interest should be preserved by shutting all railroads out of this park.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, there is a more radical objection than any I have yet heard to the passage of this bill. This objection lies in the general condition of the land laws and the rapidly diminishing public domain, which makes it wise to preserve every acre that now belongs to the United States and keep it for the present out of the market. This portion of the public domain is 60 miles by 40. If the pressure ever becomes too great this very large tract can be opened to actual settlers and traversed by as many competing railroads as its business will bring into existence.

The true policy of the United States, in my opinion, in the present crisis of land affairs, is to preserve as much as possible of the public domain. It is an acknowledged fact that there are not to-day over 5,000,000 acres of arable land belonging to the United States subject to settlement under the public-land laws. For one, under this state of affairs, I shall endeavor, so far as my vote in this House is concerned, to preserve all of the public lands that can be possibly saved for the present.

A land-famine is approaching. Our population from natural causes and a tremendous wave of immigration is rapidly increasing. It may be in the near future that the possession of sixty by forty miles of good arable land, subject to settlement, will be a great public benefit. This bill menaces that portion of the public domain. It is the entering wedge. If this railroad is built other railroads will follow, and the public park will disappear, not into hands of honest and thrifty settlers, but to the insatiate land-grabbers, speculators, and corporations.

I agree also with what has been so eloquently said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]. Here is a great wonder-land to be preserved for the benefit of our people, for that innumerable caravan that every year go out to see in the great West the inspiring sights and mysteries of nature that elevate mankind and bring it into closer communion with omniscience; and I believe this park should be preserved upon this, if for no other ground. The glory of this territory is its sublime solitude. Civilization is becoming so universal that man can only see nature in her majesty and primal glory, as it were, in these as yet virgin regions. As a people we are lacking somewhat in sentiment. Let us preserve the wondrous Yellowstone from railroads as New York State has saved the great Falls of Niagara from the vandals of trade and avarice. For that she deserves the blessings of humanity the world over.

But, as I said at the start, this bill takes away from the public domain this great reservation, and at a time, too, when the public-land question is the most important question before the people of the United States. No member on this floor need be afraid to cast his vote against this bill or any bill that takes an acre from the rapidly decreasing domain of the United States. Every member of this House knows that in the recent canvass for the Fiftieth Congress there was no question so pertinent in which the people were so vitally interested as that of preserving the public domain from spoliage and from land robbery.

I hope this bill will be defeated for another reason. This railroad will be a monopoly. If one railroad can go into the park, why not ten railroads? This railroad will be used by tourists, and have the exclusive control of that class of passenger trade, besides being the sole means of carriage between the mines which have been referred to and the Northern Pacific Railroad. The statement, moreover, has not been refuted here that these mines can be reached by another route which will not interfere with the game, the scenery, and the very existence of the park itself. These, in addition to others, are the objections I have to offer to this bill, and I hope it will be defeated.

Let us prefer the beautiful and the sublime and the interests of millions to heartless mammon and the greed of capital.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read sections 2 and 3, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all charges for transportation of either freight or passengers over said railroad shall be reasonable, and without discrimination as to persons, shippers, or consignees; no rebates or drawbacks of any kind or nature shall be allowed, directly or indirectly, to any patron of the railroad; nor shall there be any unjust discrimination in the facilities afforded shippers or consignees at any station on the line of said railroad; and as to these and all kindred matters Congress reserves the right to make all necessary regulations as to said railroad, in consideration of this grant, as well as to alter or amend this act.

SEC. 3. That if said road shall not be constructed and in running order within three years from and after the passage of this act, the right of way hereby granted shall thereupon be forfeited, and this condition is expressly understood to be a condition precedent as to all rights granted hereby; and in case of a breach of the condition of this section, all rights granted hereby shall revert to the United States by operation of this provision, without the necessity of any action by Congress: Provided, That the grant hereby shall not be held or construed as exclusive, so as to prevent the allowance of the locating other roads along the valley or route adopted under this act, under such grants and regulations as Congress may make and provide and the courts equitably administer.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to strike out the enacting words of this bill. I make this motion in order to have a test vote in the committee.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COX, of New York, the CHAIRMAN stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYSON. I call for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 107, noes 65.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise and report its action to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5880) granting a right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company, &c., had instructed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting words be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

CONSIDERATION OF REVENUE BILLS.

Mr. MORRISON. In view of the absence from the House of several members I desire to give notice that on Saturday next I will move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider revenue bills.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes. Further general debate is limited to one hour. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries a little over $12,000,000 less than the estimates and a little over $3,000,000 less than the law for the current year. I deem it proper in this connection briefly to call the attention of the House to some matters or estimates omitted from the bill.

The Secretary of the Treasury says that he needs for construction of public buildings in the next fiscal year $3,444,014.56; but the committee has given in this bill but about $1,000,000 for that purpose. The law for the current year carries over $2,000,000 for that object.

I do not myself believe it wise legislation to be continually making appropriations for the construction of public buildings in driblets. Certain officials are employed in connection with the construction of every public building, and their salaries run until the building is completed; therefore, where it is proposed to make an appropriation for the completion of a building within the next fiscal year, I submit that it is economy to do so. Either the Supervising Architect is incompetent and unfit for his office, or else the Committee on Appropriations has disregarded in this bill the needs of the public service. The estimates for light-houses aggregate $1,380,900. Of this sum, the committee gives in this bill but $247,900, about one-half the amount appropriated in the current law, and, as the House has already been advised, nearly four and a half million dollars of estimates for the Navy Department have been lifted bodily from this bill and transferred to another committee.

For the purpose of reconstructing and making fire-proof the east wing of the Interior Department $160,000 is asked. That has been denied altogether by the committee. Five hundred thousand dollars is asked for to continue the work on the Library building. This has also been rejected by the committee. Now, I do not believe that all of that amount is required, but I am advised and I do believe that $250,000 is absolutely necessary, if there is any disposition on the part of Congress to press the work. For surveying the public lands, the Secretary of the Interior asks, for the next fiscal year, $250,000. Practically we give nothing. It is true we appropriate here $50,000, but $25,000 of that is to be used for inspecting the surveys already made, and the other $25,000, I am advised, will be used for resurveying where imperfect surveys have been made, so that, as I have said, practically we give nothing for the survey of the public lands during the next fiscal year.

In this connection let it be borne in mind that we are carrying on the salary-roll a large list of officials whose duties relate solely to the survey of the public lands. In other words, we are maintaining a plant, so to speak, for the survey of the public lands at a cost of $125,000 per annum, and yet we refuse to survey an acre of them. Another thing I desire to call the attention of the House to is, that in connection with this bill, which covers the service of the Government in every department all over the United States, estimates commonly called "miscellaneous" estimates or "supplemental" estimates are constantly coming in from the several Departments during a session of Congress. These are, of course, in addition to the regular estimates. Evidently these supplemental estimates can have no consideration in this bill, because it is presented altogether too early in the session for that. It has been the practice in the past in the second session of a Congress to present the sundry civil bill in the latter days of February, so that ample time has been given for the consideration of the supplemental estimates in connection with that bill; but in this case, if the estimates which are to come in during the present session are to be considered at all, they must be considered by the Senate and must come before the House in the form of Senate amendments. During the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress sixty-nine executive communications, or supplemental estimates, were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, involving the appropriation of about $3,750,000. These were in addition to the sums submitted in the regular Book of Estimates, and were considered in connection with the sundry civil bill.

During the first session of this Congress, forty-nine, executive communications or supplemental estimates were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and considered in connection with the sundry civil bill, aggregating over two and a half millions of dollars. From this, we may reasonably infer that we shall receive during the present session of Congress supplemental estimates to an amount in the neighborhood of from two to three millions of dollars properly belonging to this bill.

Another thing I desire to call the attention of the House to in connection with this measure, that is, that the Secretary of the Treasury asks Congress to make specific appropriations for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and sends us specific estimates for that purpose, giving the number of employés and their salaries, or, the salaries which in his judgment ought to be paid them. This has always been regarded as a wholesome method of legislation, and undoubtedly it is so, for nothing can be more vicious than appropriating large sums of money in bulk and pouring it into the lap of the Departments, leaving the executive officers to employ as many or as few as they please at whatever compensation they choose to pay. That practice is vicious in many respects which will readily suggest themselves to the minds of those whom I am addressing. I know of no reason why this request of the Secretary of the Treasury has been refused by the committee unless it be that by making that specific appropriation twenty-seven only of the four hundred and sixty employés of that bureau will come within the provisions of the civil-service law. It seems to me, however, that if the spoils system is so precious, and so desirable to the other side, they might retain it in regard to this bureau by making an appropriation of $30,000 in bulk for "additional clerk hire," and then be specific as to all the rest.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have done all that I desire to do; I have called the attention of the House to certain features of this bill, and I now wish to know how much time I have remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-eight minutes remaining.

Mr. RYAN. Of that I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, my impression is that there is no complaint to be made with regard to the extent of the appropriations embraced in the sundry civil bill of this session. If there is any fault in the bill, I believe it is not that it appropriates too much money, but that it appropriates too little. In the reduction there is some merit and a good deal of humbug. Some credit is claimed because the bill appropriates three and a half million dollars less than the bill of last year. But everybody knows perfectly well that this bill will go from this House elsewhere, and when it comes back, and even by amendments which we shall make here, additions will have been put to it to the extent of three and a half million dollars or more, and that every item in those additions will be just as necessary, and proper, and meritorious as the items now in it.

It is said, also, that this bill (and some credit is claimed on this score) appropriates twelve and one-half million dollars less than the estimates of the Departments. But what does that mean? Mr. Chairman, it means that we are putting into this bill twelve and one-half million dollars less than the Executive Departments of this Government under a "reform" administration are claiming to be necessary, not only for the proper but for the economical administration of the Government.

Nor is the reduction as real as it is apparent. Many of these estimates which we have not included in the bill are estimates for new buildings, for new light-houses, for new vessels, for new improvements. We do not include them in this bill, because there is at present no authority of law for them; and the committee is bound under the rules to report no appropriation unless there be authority of law for it. But every one of these propositions for new works—new buildings, new vessels, new light-houses, &c.—will be referred to the appropriate committee, the Committee on Commerce, or whatever other committee may be proper; and in most cases authority of law will be granted, because the public service requires it and the expenditure is bound to come. So here again an apparent reduction will turn out to be no reduction at all. For instance, the Secretary of War recommends what everybody knows to be necessary—that there should be an appropriation of $30,000 for a supply of water at Fort Douglas, in the Territory of Utah. That comes before our committee. We do not refuse to make that appropriation; we simply refer it to the Military Committee. The Secretary of the Navy estimates $4,000,000 for necessary expenditures in connection with the care and preservation of our navy-yards and naval stations. We do not include those in this bill, and hence arises one-third of that reduction of $12,000,000 from the estimates for which we are getting credit. But we do not refuse to make the appropriation. We simply refer the matter to the Committee on Naval Affairs, because the rule requires that all matters relating to the naval establishment shall go to that committee.

There is another class of cases, however, in regard to which we have taken it into our hands—when I say "we" I mean the majority of the committee—to refuse absolutely the estimates of the Department or to cut them down with a ruthless hand, not so much, I fear, with an eye to the needs of the service as with regard to what is becoming a traditional policy here, perhaps on both sides, to make sure that no appropriation bill of one year shall exceed the appropriation bill of the preceeding year, which I do not believe to be good policy. For instance, the wharf at the Government insane asylum across the river here is so rotten and worn that the director of that institution says it is unsafe for use and he will not permit cargoes of coal to be landed there. Upon his suggestion the Secretary of the Treasury sent in an estimate for the repair of that wharf at a cost of $3,500. The Committee on Appropriations—by that I mean a majority of the committee—refuse to make the appropriation. What is the result? The result is that coal can no longer be landed at that wharf and must be brought by railroad. It costs 50 cents more a ton to bring it by railroad than to dump it on the wharf. The hospital will consume this year 3,500 tons of coal. There is a dead loss of $1,750 to the Government. Continued year after year it would soon make the refusal to repair that wharf a piece of extravagance instead of a piece of economy.

Yet this is one of the ways in which we proceed; not with an eye to the public service, but to this traditional policy, unreasonable policy I think, of making sure that the sum of appropriations in this bill shall not exceed the appropriation of the preceding year.

I will give another case. Last summer, at the last session of Congress, you passed on the report of the Committee on Commerce a law authorizing the construction of a supply steamer for the light-house service, for the purpose of carrying supplies of oil to light-houses. It would seem as if nothing were left except for the Committee on Appropriations to make the necessary appropriations for that purpose, the law having been passed. You of this House passed the law and said the expenditure is necessary; the Department charged with the execution of the light-house service estimated it as necessary; we of the committee, I mean the majority of the committee, take the bill under our control and say, although Congress authorized the construction of that steamer, and so recommends it, although the Department estimates for it and says it is required, you shall not have it. And so we leave it out—less again, I believe, with regard to the needs of the public service than to keeping down the bill below what it was last year.

The Coast Survey, on the accuracy of which depends the safety of life and property of our immense sea-going commerce, makes its estimate for an expenditure of $561,000. That estimate is returned directly to the bureau officials asking them to cut it down so it shall not exceed the appropriation of last year. The request of course is complied with and the result is that an appropriation is reported of $165,000 less than is estimated for by the Department; still, with the view and purpose, I think, of keeping down the appropriation more than with a careful and full regard for the wants of the public service. Certainly nothing is of more importance than that our harbors should be thoroughly charted and made safe. The result is that the work of surveying in the harbor of New York, a most important work, the work in the survey of Delaware bay, another most important work, and many other places are crippled. Instead of appropriating $10,000, as called for, we appropriated half that sum for the resurvey of San Francisco harbor, which has not been surveyed for thirty years. If you were to attempt to navigate it according to the present Coast Survey chart you would run up streets of that city, streets which have been built and lined with houses where thirty years ago there were fifteen feet of water.

It ought to be said in justice that the Coast Survey is in a condition of suspension, owing to the unaccountable and, I think, culpable neglect of the President to appoint a man of scientific attainment at its head. The Committee on Appropriations have some reason for saying that they do not feel like giving full weight to the recommendation of a superintendent, unless that superintendent be a man of scientific acquirements. The gentleman who is at the head of it—an estimable man, who is doing the best he can, and is to be credited for what he has done—is not and does not pretend to be a man of any fitness or any training for the place. He would frankly say, I have no doubt, that he regards himself merely as a locum tenens, transferred from a two thousand-dollar clerkship in the Internal Revenue Bureau to the office of superintendent of the Coast Survey—one of the most scientific in the Department; an office which commands a salary of $6,000, perhaps the largest salary paid to any office to which the President can appoint without confirmation by the Senate; an office filled in the past by Hassler, Bache, Peirce, Patterson, and other scientific celebrities. I presume, as I say, that the present incumbent would frankly admit he holds his place simply as locum tenens, and is ready to give it up whenever the President will select the proper man. And yet, sir, for nearly two years the President of the United States, turning a deaf ear to the demands of science and commerce, forgetting that public office is a public trust, neglecting, as I think, his duty, refuses to fill this post, for which there is no lack of worthy material, and is making this Coast Survey the sport almost of public opinion.

One other feature in this bill I desire to refer to, for it is a question of policy. That is in regard to the construction of our public buildings. There has become a settled practice in regard to this matter, which is, I think, a practice such as no good business man would follow in his own affairs. For instance, it is determined to erect a public building, and it is estimated to cost, say, $300,000. Good business policy would certainly require that that whole sum should be made available at once, in order that contracts may be made with reference to the availability of the fund, having the whole amount in hand; and in that way, and that alone, can the work be done promptly and efficiently. But as a matter of fact we adopt just the other course. We begin by appropriating one-fifth or one-quarter of the sum. Instead of making entire contracts, partial contracts are made; delays ensue, and the work is suspended for want of funds. This year you get an appropriation in February; the next is not available until twelve months from the following June. Meantime plans are changed and enlarged; there is a constant and steady friction going on, the result of which is to insure delay and largely increased expenditure. I take it, sir, that the post-office of the city of Boston was some dozen years in building, if I remember aright, and I believe that any private individual erecting that structure on his own account would have completed it in two, three, or, in most, four years, and at 25 per cent. less cost.

I think it is certainly worth while for us to consider whether or not these large gross and ultimate losses are justified by this, as I have called it, questionable policy of keeping down for a single year the annual appropriation bills.

There is another matter, Mr. Chairman, upon which I wish to touch briefly, and which has been referred to by the gentleman from Kansas. I refer now to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Mr. Graves, at the head of that bureau, one of the most efficient officers in the Department, who is not only a preacher but a doer of civil-service reform, has increased the amount of work which is done in that bureau, and at the same time diminished the force of employés, reducing it to the extent of some 20 per cent. Employing some eight hundred persons, he has sent us a classification of them, and urged upon us for the second time to embody them in such a classified list as will tend to bring them, or some of them, within the civil-service rules.

It is a fair question whether this bureau, with eight hundred employés, liable, under a spoils system, to be extended into a less efficient force of one thousand or twelve hundred, shall become a part of the civil-service system or be a resource, in less firm hands than those of its present head, for the dispensation of party patronage.

Mr. RYAN. Let me interrupt the gentleman to state that of the four hundred and sixty embraced in his classification only twenty-seven would come within the civil-service rules. The difference is that if his recommendation is adopted it would make the appropriation specific, although it embraces only twenty-seven within the classified civil service.

Mr. LONG. And yet on that small ground our committee reject his recommendation. He wants to embrace them within the civil service, and recommends that the committee report in favor of the adoption of such legislation. I do not know but that the President under his power could embrace them within the civil-service rules at once. I can not say whether that be so. If he has, the responsibility is put upon him. If he has not, he is not to blame.

Taking this bill in connection with the annual and permanent appropriations to be made during this session, it occurs to me that there is some confusion in the statement of the President's message in regard to the surplus revenues. He says that the revenues for the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June next will be three hundred and fifty-six millions of dollars, while the expenditures covering the same period will be two hundred and sixty-six millions, leaving a surplus revenue of ninety millions of dollars. But it should be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that he does not take into this account the sinking fund, which is quite as much as any other item a requisite of law, protected by permanent appropriations and amounting to forty-eight millions of dollars. This item is included in the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, who thus reduces the surplus to forty-two millions of dollars.

It should be remembered further, that this does not include the deficit on postal revenues, which last year was seven millions of dollars, and which, if it be the same this year, would further reduce the surplus to something like thirty-five millions of dollars. Nor does it take into account those possible extraordinary expenditures which are likely to occur. I suggest this to show that the question of the surplus revenue is not upon us at this moment as it will be after we have paid off those obligations of the Government which fall due during the next year. After that time, undoubtedly, there is to be a surplus revenue, towards the reduction of which it will become the necessity and duty of Congress to legislate. I do not propose to enter upon the question of the two methods of that reduction. Everybody agrees upon the necessity of the reduction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RYAN. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has twenty-eight minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. RYAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, the institutions now known collectively as the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers have been in existence for twenty years. At the present time their capacity is inadequate to afford relief to the many disabled veteran soldiers who are by law entitled to their benefits. The evidence is cumulative upon this point, the managers of all the branches reporting that the buildings under their charge are crowded, while many apply in vain for admission.

In the annual report of General William B. Franklin, president of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, it is stated that a portion of the inmates were, during the preceding autumn and summer months, housed in temporary shelters. He also says in the same report that there are now more than one thousand men who have applied for admission to the home who are fully entitled under the law to enter it. They could not be admitted because there were no places for them and because there was not money enough appropriated for their support. He advocated the establishment of another branch of the home at once.

Five branches of the home, namely, the Central, Northwestern, Eastern, Southern, and Western, are now maintained; but these can not accommodate all, and it is claimed that none should contain more than fifteen hundred soldiers, that being the maximum number which can be properly controlled and cared for in such an institution. By the act of March 21, 1865, it is provided that all inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be subject to the rules and articles of war in the same manner as if they were in the Army of the United States. Each branch is organized with a governor and official staff, and all are upon a semi-military footing.

The entire number of the inmates of the home in 1885 was 14,174, of whom there were—native born, 5,186; foreign born, 8,988. At first view the great disparity between the native and foreign born inmates is surprising. I know of no statistics showing the number of foreign-born volunteer soldiers who served in the war for the Union, but from my own observation I do not believe that it exceeded 10 per cent. of the whole. But in the various branches of the home there are 63 per cent. of foreigners and but 36 per cent. of native-born Americans. The question naturally arises, why are there so many foreigners and so few Americans in this home?

It certainly was not the purpose of the founders of the home, nor of its managers, to prefer foreign-born volunteer soldiers to those who are native. Probably no discrimination has been made in favor of the foreigners, and some other cause must be sought to account for their numerical excess. The true reason is that the American soldier is bound to his home by family ties, and is unwilling to sever the associations of a lifetime to secure a bare subsistence. He does not want to be separated from his family, and it is cruel to banish him from his friends in order to enable him to obtain the bounty of the nation which he helped to preserve. He should be permitted to receive at his own home as much money as it would cost to maintain him at the soldiers' home. This was the intention of Congress when the bill establishing the asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers was passed.

The tenth section of the act of March 21, 1866, provides "that the managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers are authorized to aid persons who are entitled to its benefits by out-door relief, in such manner and to such extent as they may deem proper, but such relief shall not exceed the average cost of maintaining an inmate of the home." (Revised Statutes, 4833.) The estimated cost of maintaining an inmate of the home for the next fiscal year is $138.77. The amount provided in this bill for out-door relief and incidental expenses is $15,000.

It is evident that after the incidental expenses are taken off but little of the $15,000 will be left for out-door relief.

We are then confronted with this condition of things: There are one thousand men knocking at the doors of the home; they are qualified for admission; but there is no room for them, nor appropriation to pay for their maintenance. There are other thousands entitled to admission under the law, who have served as soldiers, been honorably discharged, who are now disabled, and, by reason of disability, are incapable of making a living.

The act of July 5, 1884, provides that—all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, who served in the war of the rebellion, and the volunteer soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and of the Mexican war, who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living, shall be admitted into the home for disabled volunteer soldiers.

This law is sweeping in its character, and is intended to benefit all veteran volunteer soldiers who are incapable of earning a living. Its benefits are restricted to a few because the capacity of the existing soldiers' homes is inadequate to accommodate more than a small portion of those who have a right to the advantages of its provisions. If 8,988 foreigners are properly admitted to the homes, the number of Americans who have similar rights is much greater. I am not hostile to the gallant foreigners who joined our armies and helped fight our battles, and I would deprive them of no rights under the law. But it is quite impossible to give shelter at the homes to all who are authorized to receive aid. Those who can not now be admitted to the home should receive out-door relief; and I give notice that at the proper time I shall move an amendment to this bill increasing the appropriation for out-door relief to $2,000,000.

That provision of the original law authorizing out-door relief has become a dead letter, and it is our duty to infuse new life into it. It never was more needed than now.

The Commissioner of Pensions informs us that more than 9,000 old soldiers are in the almshouses of the country. There is not a village nor a township in all the loyal States that has not within its borders some poor volunteer soldier who is disabled, and by reason of this disability, is incapable of earning a living. His friends may maintain him, or perhaps the poor authorities give him relief.

The Pension Office is powerless to aid him, because he can not furnish the measure of proof required to show that his disability was contracted in the military service. Such men are entitled under the law to receive outdoor relief from the board of managers of the Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and in my judgment it is the duty of this House to make such an appropriation as will enable the managers of the Home to furnish this outdoor relief. This relief is not only required by the disabled volunteer soldiers of the war, but the time is opportune for it.

The Treasury is full to overflowing, and we do not know what to do with the excessive revenues of the Government. Let us give a part, authorized to be given under existing law, to our disabled soldiers. And let us give them this help at their own homes. The report for 1885 shows that of the 14,174 inmates of the Soldiers' Home there were married or having wives living or minor children or both 5,320; single, 8,851.

If we increase the appropriation for outdoor relief, many of the married men now in the Home can return to their families and be as well supported as they now are, while others who are homeless and friendless can take their places in the Home. Other men of family can be relieved at their homes, and the money thus expended will bring comfort to the soldier and his loved ones as well. It will be distributed through a thousand channels, and with advantage everywhere. Family ties will be restored, and the American will receive his due share.

Is it not due to those who fought our battles for us and are now disabled to give them every comfort in their declining years? Is not the society of one's wife and children the greatest of all comforts? Would it not be exceeding cruelty to an officer or soldier who might have a wife and children to take him away from them, and while he was supported with comfort in a home, leave them to starve? Most soldiers would prefer to stay and starve with their families rather than leave them under such circumstances.

Beside this, the inmates of the soldiers' home live in an unnatural way. Deprived of the society of their wives, children, or friends, they are freed from all social restraints, and many of them fall into habits that are bad. Drunkenness is said to be a vice with many, and the house next the home is almost always a saloon.

In the report of the governor of the Central Home for 1884 he states that it is a matter of sincere regret to the respectable citizens of Dayton and vicinity, quite as much as to the authorities of the home, that the first and only building erected on the beautiful avenue, then lately finished, should be a saloon, so placed as to make it easy of access at all times to the men of the home, who after being made drunk can be conveniently hidden in the woods around it. He adds:

The saloon interests in this vicinity have such great political weight that the well disposed, conservative citizens seem powerless to oppose them.

And in the same report the governor of the home states:

The freedom to go and come at will gave men the opportunity to drink more or less every day, which, after a little time, became an established habit; and if they did not succeed in getting a pass they would jump the fence and come home drunk. Many men of this class, having lost their self-respect, have become drunkards.

If this is the experience of the officials of one of the best managed of the homes it is evident that the plan of out-door relief should be tried and no more homes should be built until this experiment has been fully tested. The restraining influence of home and family and friends would doubtless have saved some of those who have "become drunkards," and the gallant men who stood between their country and destruction would not have fallen victims to a more insidious foe.

We have a precedent for the system of out-door relief that I advocate in the practice of the Soldiers' Home at Washington. This home reports that 231 soldiers are allowed to make their residence elsewhere, and receive out-door relief of $8 per month.

The soldiers in the Washington Home belonged to the regular Army exclusively; but I ask can any reason be given why the same privileges should be denied the volunteer soldiers? Many Americans would be relieved who will not submit to banishment from their homes; and no harm would result if they would be permitted to remain there. The American is ambitious. He hopes to accomplish something even if disabled, and he well knows that there might properly be written over the portals of the soldiers' homes: "He who enters here leaves hope behind."

In the interest of many thousand disabled American soldiers who will brave hunger and want rather than be separated from their families and friends; in the interest of the family relation which God has instituted and which should not be disturbed; in the interest of social order, and in the interest of the nation that it may not appear ungrateful to the brave men who maintained its integrity and carried its flag to victory, I ask that this amendment may be adopted.

Mr. RYAN. How much of my time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Nine minutes.

Mr. RYAN. I do not think any one on this side of the House cares to occupy that time.

Mr. RANDALL. I only want to say a word just now in reply to the gentleman [Mr. ATKINSON] who has just taken his seat. As to the soldiers' volunteer homes, this bill provides for an increased membership of 1,200, according, as I understand it, with the recommendation of the board of managers. It gives every dollar to the maintenance of these soldiers that was asked for. The amount has only been reduced in one particular; that is as to construction; that item we have placed, as I think we did last year, under "repairs," and we have given the amount for repairs that we gave last year.

Now, if these homes are not large enough, or if the managers do not see fit to properly administer the law as to admissions, the Committee on Appropriations has nothing whatever to do with it. The remedy is in another committee of this House—that is, in the Military Committee. If they see fit to increase the number of homes or increase the capacity of the present homes they will, no doubt, make that recommendation to the House. But I merely arose on account of what might have been an inference from the remarks of the gentleman as though there had been, in this recommendation from the Committee on Appropriations, some neglect of the soldiers. There has been none. Every dollar required, as far as I know, has been given.

Mr. ATKINSON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINSON. Does not the existing law authorize the board of managers of the soldiers' homes to give out-door relief?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is perhaps more familiar with that clause of the law than I am and can state its exact purport. I have not read it for some time, but I presume the gentleman is correct, although I do not want to state it from my own recollection.

Mr. ATKINSON. The fact is as I have stated, and I desire to say that I do not censure the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that; but I did not want any inference to be drawn from the remarks of the gentleman such as I have indicated.

Mr. ATKINSON. But the estimate, as submitted by the managers of the home, was only for $15,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Just there let me say, in reply to the gentleman, there is no estimate at all——

Mr. ATKINSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is an estimate for $15,000, and the amount is found on lines 1727 and 1728 of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. That is in the bill.

Mr. ATKINSON. It is only $15,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all they asked for.

Mr. ATKINSON. And I propose now to increase it. For the reason that the estimate was only $15,000 I do not censure the Appropriations Committee. I admit that they did all they were asked to do.

Mr. RANDALL. Congress at its last session provided, on the recommendation of the Military Committee, for an increase of the capacity of these homes, and appropriated $150,000 for that object. Within a year, also, Congress has provided a new home in the State of Kansas, and there has been a reception into the home of 900 soldiers.

Mr. ATKINSON. That is very true, but it will be impossible to build enough homes within the next ten years to accommodate the old soldiers who are now in the alms-houses and receiving aid as paupers.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wanted to say in reply to the gentleman that I was not willing to allow even an inference to go abroad that there had been any stinting whatever on the part of the Committee on Appropriations in relation to this matter.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have disclaimed any intention to make an assault on the Committee on Appropriations for the reason that they appropriated all that is asked for.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I ask that we proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule, and that the first paragraph be read.

The CHAIRMAN. If no one desires to be heard further in the general debate the Clerk will read the first paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the objects hereinafter expressed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, namely:

UNDER THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Public buildings:

For post-office and court-house at Baltimore, Md.: For continuation of building, $100,000.

Mr. McCOMAS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10 strike out "$100,000," and insert "$287,000."

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the attention of the House to this amendment. This is the first of a series of appropriations for public buildings in this bill. The limit of the cost of the Baltimore post-office and court-house building exceeds over two and one-half million dollars, and the Committee on Appropriations this year doled out $100,000 on a building, the total cost of which may be two and one-half millions. The work of construction would last for about a generation at that rate of progress. This is a large building, as the amount indicates, and the work of construction ought not to be indefinitely prolonged.

One hundred thousand dollars additional to continue the building of a structure for which Congress has allotted two millions and a half! I ask the House to consider whether, when the expenditure has been long ago decided upon, this doling out of appropriations is not a piece of extravagance. Against the bills to undertake the erection of many of these buildings I have contended and voted; but when a building has once been determined upon, it is then proper, as has been said by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], to complete the building within a reasonable time. I have observed this building; I have seen its proportions rising near the city hall in Baltimore; I knew when I came by on the railroad to attend this session of Congress that the stone work was done, that the masonry was finished, and I heard that the building was ready to receive the roof. I inquired at the office of the Supervising Architect, and I found that the contract had been made for the roofing of the building. There is on hand, not subject to existing contracts, only $192,000. To that sum the Supervising Architect asked the committee to add $300,000. In the pamphlet which the chairman of my committee [Mr. RANDALL] has used as a part of his report there is urgency of expression. In respect to this building the Supervising Architect says that it is necessary, in order to make the contracts for the furring, the lathing, the plastering, the joinery, the marble mantels, and the heating apparatus, to have this money in the present appropriation bill, for otherwise he must wait eighteen months for the money.

Now, under this reform Administration, we certainly ought to have a man for Supervising Architect of the Treasury who knows when a building is nearly completed and what money is necessary in order to its completion; and when, in addition to this statement, you have the testimony of my colleague from Baltimore—I live a hundred miles away from the building—I have no doubt that the House ought to adopt the amendment which I have offered. There the building stands, ready to receive the roof; and this money is required for stairways, for elevators, for plastering, for furring, &c., inside of eighteen months, and here we have the money.

I have made a computation, and I find that for the items of stairways, elevators, mantels, heating, flooring and joiner work, there will be required $379,000; far more than the entire sum which the committee have allotted for this building. Now, I appeal to the committee to say whether this method of making appropriations is not extravagant. You can see for yourselves, gentlemen, that when the architect tells you that a certain sum can be expended and ought to be contracted for within ten months and expended within the next eighteen months, before another appropriation can be made, he ought to have it, unless there be suspicion or mismanagement. In the interval labor which is now unemployed may find employment; materials which are now cheap may rise in value; the architect can, with a saving to the Government, make these contracts within that time. I ask that this $287,000 be allotted for this work; and if so, I am assured by the architect of the Treasury that the building will still be completed more than $300,000 within the limits.

Mr. FINDLAY. I thank my colleague [Mr. McCOMAS] for the amendment which he has offered, and I trust that it will be adopted. I propose to add, and can add in the short space of time allotted to me, but very little to what he has said, and so appropriately said, upon the subject; but allow me to say that the original appropriation for this building and for the site was $2,564,500, and after including in it the estimate made by the Architect of $300,000, we would have reached only the sum of $2,081,000, being short by some $464,000 of the original amount appropriated for the site and the building. The masonry is complete, and the building is ready for the roof to be put on.

For ten years we have been trying to get this building. There is no public building in the city of Baltimore except a small United States court-house. The buildings used there as public buildings are private buildings cut down, modified, and changed, so as to afford only the most contracted, insufficient, and illiberal accommodation for the public service. For ten years we have been trying to get a public building which would accommodate the post-office, the custom-house, and the United States courts under the same roof. Now we have reached a point where we want $300,000, or $287,000, as proposed by the amendment of my colleague [Mr. McCOMAS], to complete this building. Is there any trouble about getting the money? If there was a question about raising the money, then there might be some doubt as to the propriety of making the appropriation. But the money is on hand. The Treasury is not only full, but overflowing. There is more money there than you know what to do with.

Now, then, what is the sense of stopping the erection of a great public work simply for the purpose of making a sham show of economy? None in the world, sir. What sensible man, if he were putting up a private dwelling for himself and had ample means for the completion of it this year, felt that he was cramped and contracted in his present dwelling, he and all his family being anxious to get into more spacious quarters, would hesitate to complete the building this year rather than wait until next year? That is precisely the case here. I speak from knowledge when I say that the public service is suffering for the want of this building. I speak from knowledge when I say that in no great city in this country are the accommodations for similar public service so meager and contracted as they now are in the great city of Baltimore with its 400,000 inhabitants.

We simply ask this sum of $287,000 to finish the work; and if $300,000, as estimated by the architect, were appropriated, we should still be $500,000, or nearly that sum, within the limit originally proposed. That is to say, we are going to buy the site and erect this public building for nearly half a million dollars less than the amount originally estimated. There is nothing extravagant in this; there is absolute economy—economy that might well be imitated—economy that might well be encouraged in this case.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, as it is proper that I should have an opportunity to reply to the two speeches which have been made on the other side of this question, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

In the first place, it is not clear to my mind from the reading of the law touching the limit of appropriation for this building, that the figure given by the architect conforms to the limit intended by the law. In support of this view, I wish to say that all the plans of this building, including the approaches, have been made upon an estimate which supposed the limit to be $2,081,000. Here are the laws, which the gentlemen from Maryland on both sides of the House can examine; I have not time to refer to them in detail.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. FINDLAY. Suppose the limit to have been $2,081,000; if we allow the $300,000 now estimated for, do we not simply bring the appropriation up to the limit?

Mr. RANDALL. I will come to that point in a moment. What is the exact condition of affairs in reference to this public building? I have no hostility to the public building in Baltimore. The gentleman knows that I participated in the advocacy of such a building—the RECORD shows it. But there is the sum of $219,000 already appropriated for this building and up to November 15 unexpended, although it is dedicated, it is true, to the payment of contracts already made. On the same date there was the sum of $220,000, against which there was no indebtedness contracted, making $439,000 available during the next eighteen months for this building. We propose to give $100,000 more, making $539,000. This, it seems to me, is quite liberal, and such action has not the least semblance of "sham economy." After examination it seems to me this amount is sufficient for the next eighteen months; and when gentlemen predict that this building will be finished and ready for occupancy at the expiration of that time, they have a great deal more confidence on that point than I have.

But what are the items upon which gentlemen base this application for an appropriation of $287,000? I will allude to one of them. It is an item of $40,000 for approaches to that building. Why, sir, everybody knows that the money for the approaches can not be used until the building is actually completed, because any money previously expended for such a purpose would be largely a useless expenditure by reason of the accumulation of rubbish during the construction of the building, and because of the necessary hauling of material. In addition to that, in order to make up this sum of $287,000, there is an item of 10 per cent. for "contingencies;" that is to say, $46,000 additional. Here is a proposed expenditure of $86,000 that we know nothing about. That public building and the city of Baltimore have been treated with liberality by the committee; and when the charge is made that this is not so, there is no foundation for such charge in the action of the committee or in the information by which they were guided.

What confidence can be placed in the recommendations of the Supervising Architect under the existing circumstances? He asks for $300,000, and these gentlemen come here to-day and confess that $287,000, including $40,000 for the approaches, and 10 per cent. for "contingencies" (which is vicious in every particular), will be sufficient. If we are going to increase this appropriation at all, we ought not to grant one dollar of this $86,000. We ought not to invite an expenditure of 10 per cent. by reason of what is termed "contingencies;" nor should any money be expended at this time for approaches. I hope, therefore, that this amendment to appropriate $287,000 will be voted down.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely necessary I should make an explanation of this subject of the approaches, because on that point there is very serious misapprehension. I do not refer to the amount, but to the character of the approaches. This post-office building in the city of Baltimore is being erected on a square now occupied in part by a building used by the city of Baltimore as a portion of its water department and by the building at present used by the United States court. One of the conditions of the original appropriation was that there should be sufficient space left around the new building to give it light and air, as well as ample surrounding ground. In order to accomplish this it is necessary to take down the building occupied by the water department, and also that occupied by the United States court. This estimate of $40,000, I suppose, was made with reference to the preparation of the approaches by taking down those buildings which are absolutely required to be taken down under the original conditions of the law.

Mr. RANDALL. The provision of law to which the gentleman refers applies to all public buildings.

Mr. FINDLAY. In the case of buildings erected in the midst of a vacant space it can not apply in the same manner that it applies in this case, where buildings are to be taken down.

Mr. RANDALL. My answer to that is this: We do not need to touch the buildings proposed to be taken down until this Government building is completed and we enter upon a general plan of approaches all around the building.

Mr. FINDLAY. I want to say that the city of Baltimore gave the building which is occupied by the water department—made it a present to the United States—and the understanding was that building was to come down; in order to make your approaches to this new building, it is absolutely necessary for it to come down.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move to strike out the last word in order to say, Mr. Chairman, that if the distinguished chairman of my committee, who does not come from Baltimore, had studied or looked at the ground—that if he had known the facts and had time for his usual care to examine the estimates of the Supervising Architect he would not have made the mistake he has, and probably the committee would have escaped from doing so.

The chairman of the committee talks of the amount of money on hand, and says, adding $100,000 to $220,000 somehow or other, I can not at this instant understand how, he makes $500,000. That is not the old way of computation.

I have taken the trouble to see how this matter is. I find that for the public building at Louisville, where the limit of the building was $1,141,000, there has been given $200,000 in this bill. I can not say what others did in our committee-room, but I voted for it, as it was right to do so. But what did the committee do? I ask the chairman of the committee. He knows how he was affrighted at the amount of money for a building which had a limit of $1,141,000. I find, taking his mode of computation, there was $740,000 authorized; $236,146.98 balance available November 15, 1886, with an appropriation of $200,000 in this bill; that is, the current appropriation, with the amount on hand, makes for that building in Louisville, Ky., $1,141,001.45, as much as this amendment would give Baltimore the same year. Where is the economic conscience of my distinguished chairman, who was affrighted at the idea of having an equal sum of money in this bill for Baltimore city, on a limit of two and a half millions of dollars, to that given Louisville in this bill on a limit of $1,000,000 provided in the case of Louisville?

That is the fact, Mr. Chairman. It is not my assertion. I find it in the report of Mr. RANDALL. I have a letter from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, bearing date yesterday, which I will not read, but I will insert in my remarks, and there I find the sum on hand at that date was not $220,000. The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, December 13, 1886.

SIR: In accordance with your verbal request, I have the honor to submit herewith a statement showing the necessity for an appropriation of $300,000 for the continuation of work on the post-office building at Baltimore, Md. If an insufficient appropriation is made at this session of Congress, it can hardly be expected that a further appropriation can be obtained until near the close of the next session, or about July, 1888—eighteen months hence. By the statement it will be observed that the estimated amount required is $506,741.40, and that the balance available of funds that can be applied to the payment of indebtedness that may be incurred on this account is $220,283.21, showing a balance required of $286,458.19. The Department has called for, in round numbers, $300,000. Contracts have already been made for two items shown on inclosed list, and the balance available above shown is at this date reduced to $192,078.45. It would seem sufficient to state that within the next eight or ten months contracts can be made for every item on the list, to show the necessity for an appropriation of the full amount asked this session.

At this date the liabilities under existing contracts, or for work authorized, amount to $245,146.03; of this amount $39,876.10 is due as soon as the accounts can be adjusted; $69,358 will be due in two months; $11,755 in about four months; $15,285.93 in about six months; $18,973 in about eight months; and the balance, $89,898 within the next ten months. In regard to the amount shown as liabilities, attention is called to the fact that as soon as a contract is awarded, or an expenditure authorized, the sum involved is immediately charged against the appropriation, and is as much lost thereto as if paid out to the public creditor, as the law does not permit a contract to be made unless there is a balance of appropriation therefor over and above all liabilities.

The present situation, therefore, is as follows:

Balance available for new work	$192,078 45
Amount of appropriation asked	300,000 00
Total	492,078 45
Estimated cost of new work which can be placed under contract within the next ten months	479,741 00

Respectfully yours,

M. E. BELL, Supervising Architect.

Hon. L. E. McCOMAS,
House of Representatives.

Instead of $220,000, the sum on hand was reduced to $192,000. To that the committee's bill adds $200,000. I inquired when the contracts are payable, and I find they are from ten days to two months, and some running for ten months, covering every dollar of that fictitious balance to which the chairman refers, whereby you have, instead of $220,000, but $192,000 to be added to the amount in the bill to continue the work for eighteen months.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that is extravagance. Now, I ask this committee to give instead of $100,000 the sum proposed in my amendment of $287,000, as that is the sum which the Supervising Architect asks Congress to appropriate on this building this year; of actual cash about 10 per cent. of the whole amount for the structure. I ask it for Baltimore, which gave the site for this building; for Baltimore, which would put her dingy custom-house, her crowded post-office, her United States courts into this building; and when that is done it will then do what is not often done, save by at least a quarter of a million falling within the limit——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. The law does not state $2,181,000 shall be exclusive of the site. I do not think the estimates under that show that was the purpose of the act in that particular. It is contrary to the nature of things in that Department there ever was any such action as to save a quarter of a million dollars under the limit.

I wish to say a word in conclusion, and will assert that, so far from the committee having any indisposition to grant what is right or to show to the people of Baltimore liberality, I consider the committee have been remarkably liberal.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is a liberal construction of the action of the committee by its chairman.

Mr. RANDALL. I think my word and figures carry something with them in this House.

Mr. FINDLAY. That may be true; and when we quote facts and figures they ought to have equal weight.

Mr. RANDALL. I think if the gentleman understood them he would be earnestly with the committee.

Mr. FINDLAY. I think I have familiarity with the figures and plans of the appropriations to say that the $2,181,000 is exclusive of the site.

Mr. RANDALL. The law does not say so.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is your construction.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not talking of questions of construction now.

Mr. FINDLAY. I say that going to the estimates here by those charged with the execution of the law they will say it is so, and that, adding the cost of the site to the building to be erected, the original limit was fixed at $2,564,500 as estimated.

Mr. RANDALL. And I say, in answer to that statement, that the plans agreed upon in this very Department sustain me in the assertion that the limit of $2,081,000 was to include the site.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Let me say, in answer to the chairman of my committee, that I made the statement I did on authority of an appendix to his own report on this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The information the gentleman refers to was furnished by the architect's office. It was no part of the report proper or information which the committee laid before the House. It was not prepared by the committee, nor was it relied upon by them. I should be sorry, and I say it with due respect, to rely upon all the figures that come from that office.

Mr. FINDLAY. Upon what theory do you appropriate $100,000 here?

Mr. RANDALL. Because I consider the fact that $219,000 is not yet expended, but contracted for, and $220,000 that has not yet been touched, but which will be under contract in time, and $100,000 additional, making an aggregate of $539,000 or thereabout for the next eighteen months, which the committee regarded as ample.

I ask a vote upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendments as having been withdrawn, and the question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

The question was taken, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 86.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. MCCOMAS and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 96.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I will ask a vote in the House on that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Concord, N. H.: For approaches and heating apparatus complete, $15,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in lines 11 and 12, the words "fifteen thousand" and insert "twenty thousand."

Mr. GALLINGER. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations of this House is almost infallible; and yet I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury has recommended $22,000 for the purpose of building approaches and putting in heating apparatus for this building. It is my opinion, and it seems to me it ought to be the opinion of the committee, that the Supervising Architect, being himself an expert in matters of this kind, is better qualified to judge as to the amount of money which will be required to complete a building of this character than any committee of the House.

If but $15,000 is appropriated I have full reason to believe that at the next session of Congress we will be asked to make additional appropriations to complete what should be completed this year.

I trust the committee will vote this trifling additional amount of $5,000, so that we will not be again asked at the next session of Congress to make a further appropriation to complete this necessary work.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. GALLINGER, and there were—ayes 54, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For custom-house at Galveston, Tex.: For continuation of the building under the present limit, $50,000.

Mr. CRAIN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "fifty thousand," in line 24, and insert "sixty-five thousand."

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose in offering that amendment to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations. I have considered the amount recommended to be appropriated by the committee, and find that the chairman, in making his report, lost sight of the fact that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury had failed to recommend the appropriation of the entire balance which, under the law passed at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, would have been available for the completion of the public building at Galveston.

The Supervising Architect sent a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, which was by him submitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and by accident referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in which he stated that there had been a clerical error committed in his office, whereby the amount submitted to be appropriated was represented as $125,000 instead of $155,000. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to-day reported that letter to the House, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, where it properly belongs. The sundry civil bill, however, had been reported to the House, and consequently it was impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to take action on that letter of the Supervising Architect and the accompanying communication from the Secretary of the Treasury.

In considering the appropriation recommended by the Committee on Appropriations it is apparent that the amount which was supposed to be $125,000 was the amount considered by that committee, and that $50,000, or two-fifths of the entire amount, was suggested to the House as a proper sum to be placed in the bill for the completion of the building. As there was consequently a mistake of $30,000 made in the manner suggested in my opening remarks, I am satisfied the Committee on Appropriations, had it known of that clerical mistake made by the Supervising Architect with reference to this city of Galveston within my district, would have inserted two-fifths of the $155,000 instead of two-fifths of the $125,000; and, such being the case, I am satisfied the chairman of the committee will not antagonize the extra $15,000 I ask.

Mr. RANDALL. The original limit was fixed by the last Congress, and at the last session it was increased to $250,000, exclusive of the site, which would cost about $30,000, making the limit now created by law $280,000. There is available $87,000 or thereabouts. The excavation for foundation has been completed and the concrete partially laid for the building as originally contemplated by plans approved under the limit first placed. But since then the new set of plans have been agreed upon, or are about to be agreed upon, and the committee gave the $50,000 on the basis of the $125,000 estimate. I think the gentleman from Texas, having stated the cause of the error, or rather where the error was, will now be content with the amount given, which makes $137,000 for that building for the coming year.

Mr. CRAIN. I will state, with the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the plans are all prepared and the bids will be asked for, and advertisements inserted in the papers within the next thirty days. So I am informed. I put it on the same ratio of estimates, and ask only $15,000 more.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee made an equal division, believing that equal division would supply all the money that could possibly be required for that public building until another appropriation bill could be passed. Now the gentleman asks for a correction of the error upon which we based that division. Do I understand him to say that?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, sir. You based your appropriation on the belief that we were only entitled to $125,000, while the Supervising Architect admits he made a mistake.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not the error of the committee, but of the Architect.

Mr. CRAIN. I am aware of that.

Mr. RANDALL. I accept the amendment for myself, not for the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For post-office and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla.: For procuring site and commencing the erection of building under present limit, $50,000.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 29, "$50,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$70,000."

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The object of making this motion is not to consume the time of the House; but being familiar with the prices of real estate in the city of Jacksonville, it is my opinion that the sum of $50,000 appropriated by this bill is not sufficient to make a beginning of the erection of that public building, including the purchase and site. The real estate necessary for the purpose in an eligible locality in that city will cost the sum of $50,000, and probably more. It is true that the limit in the bill which passed during the first session of this Congress is $150,000. It is hoped that when the matter shall be properly considered by this House that limit will be increased, for the reason that when a piece of real estate eligibly located shall have been purchased and a building erected thereupon which will accommodate the officers of the United States Government, that amount of money, $150,000, will not buy the site and complete the building.

There is no disposition to antagonize the Committee on Appropriations, because I believe that those gentlemen have digested these matters that have been submitted to them as well as it was possible for them to do without the information which they could get from different members who might have appeared before the committee. The time was also so short that members could not appear before that committee and have the hearing which it is proper they should have had before this bill was formulated; and I ask the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to consent to the adoption by this House of an amendment increasing the amount to either $65,000 or $70,000. I think if he would accept the proposition of even $65,000 that would purchase the site and start the erection of the building.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill authorizing the construction of this building was passed at the last Congress. The limit in that bill was $150,000; but no money was given at all, and no site has been purchased.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to interrupt him to state the reason why no money was appropriated by that bill? It was a Senate bill, which came into this House; and I thought it was better and that I could get the matter in shape sooner by allowing the Senate bill to go through than by pressing the passage of the bill I had introduced in this House, and which made an appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. Still, the fact remains that in that bill no money was appropriated for this public building at Jacksonville, Fla.; and hence no site has been purchased.

Now, the practice of the committee has been to give in such cases about one-third of the amount for the purchase of the site. Hence, we give in this bill for the purchase of the site $50,000, which is one-third of the limit. Now the gentleman from Florida states that that is not sufficient, but that Congress must give more money than is fixed by the act for the completion of the purchase of a site and the erection of a building.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. No, sir; I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania mistakes what I said. I said I did not believe that the amount in the bill which passed at the last session of this Congress was sufficient to erect such a building as would be adequate to accommodate the officers of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. That is all I intimated that the gentleman said; and that indicates you mean, if you can, to induce Congress to break that limit which the Committee on Appropriations had not the power to do.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That is most unquestionably my object; but even if the committee should be ultimately confined to the limit of $150,000, an eligible site can not be purchased, and the building can not be commenced for less than, say, $65,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Florida is a better authority than I am as to the value of property in Jacksonville, but I still say that the practice of Congress in such cases has been, acting on the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, to allow about one-third of the total amount for the purchase of the site, and that rule has been adhered to in this case.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I understand that.

Mr. RANDALL. Therefore there is no occasion whatever now to give anything for the construction of the building, as the gentleman concedes. If I understand him, he wants an increased amount for the purchase of the site.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. In order to make myself thoroughly understood by the chairman of the committee, I will make this statement: That even if this building in the city of Jacksonville is to be confined to the limit of $150,000 the desire is to purchase the site and commence the erection of the building without delay, and even if in the end we are not to have more than $150,000 altogether, yet, in my opinion, in order to purchase an eligible site and begin the building the amount which I ask, $65,000 or $70,000, is necessary to be appropriated at this session. Fifty thousand dollars would not buy the site and commence the erection of the building, and if they are to have such a building there at all it certainly seems reasonable and proper that it should be erected in an eligible locality, where it will accommodate the greatest number of people who have business with the officers of the Government whose quarters will be in the building. The object is not to get an amount of money appropriated for the sake of getting an appropriation, but it is to have a sufficient amount to purchase a suitable site and commence the construction of the building. I repeat, even if we are to be confined to the limit of $150,000, let it be that way, but let the site be purchased without delay and the building commenced; let that be done, even if we are to have an inferior building.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question at this time once for all. My question is whether, in any of these appropriations for public buildings, the committee exceeds, in any case, the limits fixed by the law authorizing the building?

Mr. RANDALL. Not to my knowledge in any instance, and I think I can safely answer no.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I did not ask the committee to exceed the limit authorized by the law.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I did not intimate that the gentleman did.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 27, noes 46.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that a quorum has not voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The House again divided.

Mr. DOUGHERTY (before the announcement of the vote). Mr. Chairman, I am willing to withdraw the point of "no quorum," and to let the result be announced.

Mr. RANDALL. You did not withdraw it soon enough. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then I will stay here with the gentleman and continue the count.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the vote at present is ayes 69, noes 56. Is the point of no quorum insisted upon?

Mr. RANDALL. I did not make the point.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall ask a vote on it in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAYBURY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"After line 29 insert: 'For new post-office and custom-house at Detroit, Mich.; for securing site and commencing the erection of building, $25,000.'"

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment can not go in in that shape because it is subject to a point of order. I think that what the gentleman wants is an appropriation of $25,000 to continue the building already authorized by law.

Mr. MAYBURY. That is what I desire, and if the amendment in its present form does not cover it I will make any change which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations suggests.

Mr. RANDALL. The word "new" should be stricken out.

Mr. MAYBURY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I consent to have that stricken out. I inserted it merely to avoid the confounding of this building with the old post-office at Detroit.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to reserve the point of order.

Mr. MAYBURY. I would state, Mr. Chairman, that no appropriation appears in this bill for continuing the work on the building at Detroit, and I presume that the action of the committee in regard to the matter has been guided by the fact that there seems to be $238,000 still available.

From the appropriations already made there would be $238,000 subject to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury; but he has already made arrangements for the purchase of a site for the building, and has made an offer of $230,000 to the owners of the property. Public-spirited citizens of Detroit are now collecting a fund to supplement the offer of the Government, in order that the site selected may be purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury; and I have no doubt that within the next thirty days that site will be purchased. The Government will then find itself, unless this amendment be adopted, with less than $8,000 with which to clear the ground and commence the erection of the building. I believe that every member of the House must see that such a sum would be grossly inadequate for the commencement of a work of this magnitude.

I simply ask that $25,000 additional be appropriated, so that when this site is purchased, as it certainly will be, the Government will have about $30,000 on hand with which to clear the ground and commence the foundations of the building. This is all that my amendment contemplates, and I trust it will meet the concurrence of the chairman of the Commtttee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, if I remember aright, and no doubt the gentleman from Michigan will correct me if I do not accurately state the facts, there was taken from the original appropriation of $500,000 for this building, $80,000 for the purchase of the site first selected. But some of the citizens of Detroit did not like that site and determined that another should be chosen. By reason of their efforts, and perhaps under the authority of Congress, another site was selected. In the mean time excavations have been made on the ground originally chosen; so that the Government, after the expenditure of this $230,000 additional for the second site, is likely to have in its possession two sites in different sections of the city for this one building.

Mr. MAYBURY. I wish to make a further explanation. The statements of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] are correct so far as they go.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not got through. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYBURY. I thought you had.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to see some provision made for the sale of the original site, so that the money thus realized might be used upon the building where it is now to be erected. It is a case where the committee made no appropriation, because, in fact, no site had been secured; that was the reason. The gentleman from Michigan can now proceed with his statement.

Mr. MAYBURY. Mr. Chairman, I think I can make this matter plain to the House. The Secretary of the Treasury appointed a commission to examine the question of a site for this building, and a unanimous report was made in favor of the new site. A bill passed this House providing a limit of appropriation for the erection of the new building and the purchase of the new site, and especially providing that the old site should be sold and the money paid back into the Treasury of the United States. That provision is a part of the text of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Has that been done?

Mr. MAYBURY. It has not been done, because the old building stands upon the border of the new site which has been purchased; and the Secretary of the Treasury deems it best to wait and sell together the old building and the additional ground; he believes, and in this I fully agree with him, that in this way a better sale can be made. He has to-day an offer, which is at any moment open to his acceptance, that will repay to the Treasury every dollar paid for the new ground. The law to which I have referred provides that the money which may be realized from the old building and from the additional site shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States; so that there can be no loss.

Mr. RANDALL. And the moment that is done there will be funds with which to proceed.

Mr. MAYBURY. My friend forgets that the old building can not be vacated until the new building is almost completed, and its completion may be a matter of years. The Government can not undertake to sell the old building until it is ready to go into the new.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that this amendment be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Still the fact stands uncontroverted that there is, as yet, no site in possession of the Government.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MAYBURY, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Pittsburgh, Pa.: For continuation of building, $50,000.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office at Troy, N. Y.: For continuation of building under present limit, $100,000.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Chairman, this is recommended by the Treasury Department——

Mr. RANDALL. If that amendment is going to pass I should like to have the word "completion" inserted.

Mr. BURLEIGH. All right.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the gentleman use the word "completion," because the appropriation of $100,000 will bring this building up to the limit already fixed by law. Without the word "completion," the gentleman's amendment would be liable to a point of order as changing existing law.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I accept the modification which the gentleman proposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York to modify his amendment by striking out the word "continuation" and inserting "completion."

Mr. BURLEIGH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss his amendment?

Mr. BURLEIGH. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend in lines 47 and 48, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "York," in line 47, and insert "for completing the building under the present limit, $100,000."

Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit in relation to this amendment that the committee evidently were under some misunderstanding as to the true situation in Rochester. The limit was amended during the session last winter, fixing it at $500,000. Of that amount there was appropriated so that the aggregate appropriation towards the completion of the building now made over $400,000. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury in his letter recommends the appropriation of the balance of the limit in order that this building shall be completed.

He informs me it is his purpose to contract for the completion of the building within the next year and a half. The committee, in its appropriation, cut down the amount recommended from $100,000 to $50,000. If it should prevail, as recommended by the committee, it would necessitate a suspension of work on this building, and the contracts necessary could not be made, because, as I understand it, the money must be made available in order that contracts may be made.

Now there is available of the limit about $200,000. The Supervising Architect is about to let the contract for stone and marble work, and is contemplating soon to let the contract for finishing the building. That will necessitate having available the remaining $100,000 of limit.

If this be not done, it will result in just this: that a year from now the building would have to be fenced in, when $400,000 have been expended thereon, and the various departments now provided for in rented quarters, the post-office, the custom-house, the internal-revenue office, the United States marshal, and the United States courts, all are accommodated in buildings outside, nearly all of them, except the court held in our court-house—all provided for in rented quarters, involving annually an expenditure of a great many thousands of dollars—I think $15,000—for rent of various buildings; whereas if the $100,000 remaining is appropriated we will have the building completed in a year and a half, as I am assured by the Supervising Architect. The contract is now being let for the stone and marble work. It did seem to me if the committee had fully understood that fact they would not have cut down the amount asked for by the Department.

All interests in Rochester are clamoring for the completion of this building. It is needed for the accommodation of Government officers in our city, and I hope the chairman of the committee will consent to my amendment being adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee made diligent inquiry as to this matter. The gentleman himself speaks with no certainty about the completion of the building within a year and a half, nor can anybody else with any degree of certainty.

There is $20,000, or was on the 15th of November, unexpended on account of contracts made. There was $204,000 not entered upon, or not involved by any action of anybody at all, which, with the $50,000 given, would make in all $274,000 for that Rochester building for the time between now and when we meet again here to make appropriations.

Mr. BAKER. If my friend will allow me, I will say that the Supervising Architect assures me he will have this building completed in a year and a half; that is, if the additional $100,000 is appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the Supervising Architect, under pressure, may say that, but he will not in his sober senses tell me that building will be finished in the time specified.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask if this is not true, that unless you give this $100,000 it will be impossible for the Architect to enter into contracts for the completion of the building?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want him to enter into contracts for the whole work, but only as the work can be proceeded with.

Mr. BAKER. The Supervising Architect assures me he must have this appropriation to continue this work.

Mr. RANDALL. He can not have it so far as my vote is concerned.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For custom-house and post-office at Saint Joseph, Mo.: For completion of building under present limit, $110,000.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 51 insert "for marine hospital, Chicago, Ill.: For approaches and breakwater, $25,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve whatever question of order may lie against this amendment until I have heard its object.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I know of no place in this bill for the incorporation of an amendment of this character relating to the marine hospital, except this.

The substance of this amendment is incorporated in the Book of Estimates submitted to Congress. There is an estimate of $200,000 for general repairs, and that the Committee on Appropriations has agreed to. But there are several estimates that were referred to this committee on the subject now under consideration, which it seems to have disregarded or rejected.

Mr. RYAN. Rejected.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. This estimate for the marine hospital is found on page 158 of the book of estimates. I know something of the situation of affairs there. This hospital building, costing several hundred thousand dollars, is situated on the lake shore, just north of Chicago. It is so near the edge of the water that the building has been imperiled by the encroachments of the lake upon the land.

Two years ago I asked for an appropriation of, I think, about $8,000 for the building of a breakwater. That amount was granted and the breakwater was built as well as it could be built for that small amount of money. One of the storms, to which that coast is liable, broke it through, as I know from personal knowledge, last summer, and the result is that if something is not soon done the water will still further encroach upon the land and endanger the very foundation of the building itself.

I ought to be more familiar with the letter accompanying the estimate; but the bill came up in such a way as to surprise me. I noticed that this item was not embraced in the general appropriation for repairs, and that being the case, I have been compelled to present it to the committee and to the House as well as I can in this manner.

I am certain, Mr. Chairman, that this recommendation is founded upon the strongest grounds of economy. I know if that work is not completed, there will be these gradual encroachments of the lake, and a larger sum must be spent next year or the year after to save the very foundation of the building, and for that reason I am convinced that the expenditure of a proper sum of money, and I believe this to be a proper sum, is in the direct line of economy.

As to the item called "approaches," I do not profess to have such intimate knowledge. I presume the appropriation for this purpose is to construct roads from the public streets to that building; but I do know personally that all the grounds belonging to the United States there are simply nothing more than barren wastes of lake sand, which blows around in vast clouds over the fences and on the property of the neighbors; and hence, in its present condition, this Government property is not only unsightly but is a positive nuisance to that locality. It is a town which is rapidly being beautified, that is to say, all of it outside of the property which belongs to the United States. That, as I have said, is a waste of lake-shore sand, and I think it is time, at least, that the United States should not be a nuisance to the thrifty, enterprising people of that town.

Mr. RANDALL. No information whatever covering this estimate came to the Committee on Appropriations. The committee, however, applied to the architect for such information as was in his possession. He stated that the estimates had not come through his department, but came from the marine hospital service; and we developed the fact from the officer in charge that the Government of the United States had been greatly defrauded by the contractor who drove the piles for the protection of the hospital; and that, instead of complying with the contract and driving suitable piles, they are but 8 feet long, and of course when the water washed against them in the storm it washed them out. Further, we were advised that the Government of the United States—the contractor being dead—was seeking to recover the money improperly, to use a mild term, because I always like to speak well of the dead, taken from the Government; and we were left in such a condition of doubt as to the fraud perpetrated by somebody and the suit existing by the Government that we left the matter out altogether. That is the exact condition as far as I recollect it. In other words, it seems to me that the Government of the United States ought to compel the sureties of that contractor who drove the piles to a proper execution of the work.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Admit all that; will you have the other piles washed out by the next storm? Would you have all the work destroyed?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it is in great danger. It is on the west side of the lake, I believe, about 6 miles up; and, as I understand it, a great part of this amount is intended for ornamentation merely.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I think $10,000 was for the breakwater and $15,000 for the approaches. I want to be frank with the committee. I know personally only about the breakwater.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that, but your amendment embraces a release on the part of the Government of these sureties on the bond of the contractor.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not understand that.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the effect of it. If the breakwater alone was provided for in the amendment, I do not know if I should individually resist it, although I am instructed by the committee to oppose amendments.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word. I will not say a single word against the facts or suspicions alleged by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. They come to me from officers of the Government.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I will admit for the sake of argument—although I do not know such to be the fact—that these piles were insufficiently driven; if so, I suppose it was because the appropriation was small.

Mr. RANDALL. And the piles were small.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I suppose it was because they did not expect to get more. I do not blame the gentleman from Pennsylvania; but admitting everything he has said, here is a matter of urgent necessity.

If any one chooses to strike out the appropriation for approaches I have nothing to say, because I know nothing of that. I would not deceive the House in a matter of an appropriation especially, as I could not. But with regard to the $10,000 for the breakwater I am sure it is in the interest of economy. I can not see, and I am surprised, that such a statement should have come from the gentleman from Pennsylvania that an appropriation to repair damages would release the contractor whose negligence has given rise to the necessity for the appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it would be ultimately a means of releasing the contractor. I think there is no occasion at present for the appropriation of $15,000 for the approaches. If the gentleman will confine his amendment to the breakwater I shall not oppose it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have stated what I know that it is all a waste of sand and a nuisance to the entire neighborhood. Perhaps we can not mend that, but so long as the United States owns a building there, I insist, nothing that has been said would justify the keeping of that hospital in such a condition as to be a nuisance to the neighborhood.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask a division of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 51 insert as follows: For marine hospital, Chicago, Ill.: For approaches and breakwater, $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is at a loss to know how that can be divided.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to apply $10,000 for the breakwater and leave out the $15,000 for approaches.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move that amendment himself.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to strike out the words "approaches and," and to reduce the appropriation to $10,000.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 87, noes 68.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 51 insert: For court-house and post-office at Williamsport, Pa.: For the completion of building under present limit, $125,000.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I desire only to say that the reason offered by the committee for not including this appropriation in the bill reported was that the entire ground intended to be used for the site had not been purchased. The delay, however, is easily explainable, and I believe when the committee understand that the ground is very soon to be acquired, and that the whole appropriation should be made available, or, at least, that it will be needed before another appropriation can be had—I believe the committee under those circumstances will not hesitate to grant the appropriation at the present time.

A portion of the ground intended to be used for this building had to be condemned. A delay in this condemnation has grown out of the suspension of the district attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania; and while the proceedings are nearly completed, at the present time there has been a delay on this account. The new district attorney for that district has been recently appointed, and in a very brief time the whole ground will be acquired.

The architect tells me that the whole amount will be needed to complete this building before an opportunity to appropriate money will be had after the present session, and the fact that there have been so many delays in the construction of this building should, it seems to me, influence the committee somewhat.

I believe that there is no excuse offered by the committee, except that a small portion of this amount has not been acquired. But, as I have said, the architect asks the whole amount now. I visited the Attorney-General, and he tells me that in a very short time the proceeding to condemn will be completed, and it is admitted the whole sum authorized will then be needed. I hope the committee will not hesitate to make the whole amount available now.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations has acted in relation to this matter exactly as they have acted as to buildings in other States under like circumstances. The facts are, a site was procured which was deemed too small, and then, by legislation, they were permitted to increase the area of that site. Meanwhile, that portion of the site has not been acquired by the Government, and no work has been done. That is the reason why the committee left this out of the bill.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I have explained that.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman explained, the site is going to be procured.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The obtaining of the ground is authorized by law, and the condemnation has once been had; but on account of the delay in procuring the appropriation a rule was procured to set aside the proceedings, which was made absolute, and proceedings had to be commenced de novo.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not any difficulty as to the appropriation, for, if I remember right, the original plot cost only $20,000 and there was $100,000 appropriated. Now, I do not know what this additional ground which is to be attached to the original plot which cost $20,000 is going to cost, but it is not likely that, under condemnation proceedings, the amount will be greater than the cost of the original site, which, as I have said, was $20,000.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I do not see how that makes any difference.

Mr. RANDALL. So that there is actually $78,000 not yet entered upon.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is very true, but the architect informs me that the whole amount which has been authorized by law can be expended, or at least that contracts covering the whole amount can with great propriety be made within the next eighteen months.

Mr. RANDALL. So far as I have any information, there has not yet been a single contract made there for either excavation or construction.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is true; but the building is to be only a two-hundred-and-twenty-five-thousand dollar building; its construction has been delayed now, for one reason or another, for five years, and it seems to me very unreasonable that it should be subjected to further postponement on account of the delay in completing the condemnation proceedings, but which will very soon be consummated.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no doubt that when you do get the site, when the Government actually has the title to the property, the Committee on Appropriations will be quite liberal with you.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I have already explained the reasons for the delay in obtaining the site. The Attorney-General tells me that it will be but a short time before the title is acquired, so that there will be no question so far as that is concerned.

The question was taken on the amendment, and there were—ayes 61, noes 76.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will order tellers; and will appoint the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 89.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Do I understand that that vote makes a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know what the gentleman understands. The Chair was informed that there was a quorum and, therefore, announced the decision.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I have not withdrawn the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote as announced makes 162, which the Chair understands to be a quorum.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that one hundred and sixty-two is not a quorum of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. There are three vacancies in the House; so that one hundred and sixty-two makes a quorum. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Treasury Building at Washington, D. C.: For annual repairs to Treasury Building, $8,000.

Mr. LONG. I am instructed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 54 insert "for urgent and necessary repairs to the central and western portions of the Smithsonian Institution Building, $15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHT-HOUSES, BEACONS, AND FOG-SIGNALS.

Gould Island Light-Station, Rhode Island: For establishing complete a light and fog signal at Gould Island, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, $10,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in after line 59.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 59 insert: "Supply-steamer: For the construction of a steamer for the transportation of oil and other supplies to the light-houses on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, $147,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire merely to say that by the act of July 28, 1886——

Mr. RANDALL. As the discussion of this question may occupy some time, I will move that the committee rise, if the gentleman from Maine will give way.

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of an act (S. 2938) regulating the use of avenues, streets, alleys, and reservations in the city of Washington; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced non-concurrence in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and had appointed Mr. HOAR, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. PUGH as managers of said conference on its part.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment. In reference to the bill (H. R. 9111) which was up last Saturday, I have consented to an amendment which removes all objection. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now taken up and passed.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9111) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on the public lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That is the pending motion, if the gentleman demands the regular order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do.

Mr. MCRAE. If the gentleman will hear the amendment it will be found that it removes all objection.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD additional remarks on the bill (H. R. 2881) granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of farmers of the town of Cambridge, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill establishing agricultural experiment stations; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of James H. Mandeville, of this town, a member of the bar, which sets forth that in respect of the Las Pocitas land grant matter in California the Land Department has done great injustice to his clients and a large number of pre-emptors by assigning the land to the Central Pacific Railroad Company when it belonged to these pre-emptors, and asking for certain relief, together with sundry papers, being maps and opinions of the Commissioner, &c. I move that the petition be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of Thomas F. Barker and other citizens of Hinsdale, Mass., praying for the passage of the agricultural experiment station bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. FRYE. I present a memorial of the Bath (Me.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the enactment of a law for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry. The memorial is from an important board of trade and is brief. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Respectfully memorialize and represent your petitioner, the Bath Board of Trade, whose membership includes the representative business men of our city, that we view with alarm the possibility of the passage by your honorable body of the (so-called) Dunn bill, providing for the admission of foreign-built ships to an American register. Keenly alive to the wants and necessities of our merchant marine, we have struggled for years to maintain its prestige, hoping for such legislative relief as would enable us to meet a bold and aggressive foreign competition. From the foundation of our Government it has been the distinctive American policy to encourage the building and sailing of ships by American citizens. To protect and strengthen this important service, and the many interests dependent thereon, Congress has in the past granted with generosity much needed legislation. Now at the moment when we can discern some ray of light we are met with a proposition which, if it ever ripens into law, will completely and forever paralyze an important industry whose prosperity is synonymous with the desired material prosperity of our whole land. The far-reaching results of such unwise and cruel legislation are fearful to contemplate. The immense capital invested in our merchant marine might partially save itself when the death blow is struck, but the immense labor interest involved will be crushed beyond all hope of recovery. The traditional policy of our Government has always encouraged the building of ships. Under its benignant influence a vast army of skilled mechanics and artisans have grown up, a clean, bright, and intelligent factor in our body-politic.

Foreign competition and aggression now reach out a grasping hand and would rob our labor of its long established source of maintenance; and more, it would use the law-making power of an American Congress to crush and forever annihilate an important branch of American labor. To what depths of weakness and imbecility have we sunk when we surrender to England our last bulwark of national hope and national defense, and cowardly permit her cheap materials and cheaper labor to masquerade under the Stars and Stripes, doing the little carrying trade that still remains to us. We hope, urge, and pray that our Congress will not adopt a policy so short-sighted and pernicious that a great industry that has founded and maintained so many happy homes, the cornerstones of our Republic, the abode of honest and well-regulated labor, shall not look in vain to its own legislation for protection against foreign aggression, that we may still be permitted to float an American flag over an American bottom, constructed by American capital, skill, and labor.

FRANCIS W. WEEKS,
Secretary Bath Board of Trade, Bath, Me.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the affidavits of Logan J. McWhorter, A. J. Adams, and Joshua W. Brown, to accompany the bill (S. 1321) granting arrears of pension to Richard H. McWhorter. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions, where the bill is pending.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent at this time to submit a written report to accompany the bill (S. 729) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter, reported at the last session of Congress, by order of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5878) to amend the act entitled "An act to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail-messengers in the postal service, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9183) for the relief of James R. Marrs, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3909) for the relief of Harry Fisk, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MILLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2989) to extend the term of the patent granted to Walter Youmans on the 12th day of November, 1872, for fifteen years; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 2990) to muster Edward G. Pendleton as lieutenant of infantry into the service of the United States, and to pay him for his services from August 31, 1861, to July 10, 1864, inclusive; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2991) to appropriate $100,000 to deepen and widen the inner and outer bars of Pensacola Bay, so as to afford easy and safe entrance for the largest sized vessels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2992) to make Tampa, Florida, a port of entry; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CALL. In introducing this bill I merely desire to ask immediate consideration of it by the Committee on Commerce, and to state that there is now a large foreign commerce carried on at Tampa, which imperatively requires that it should be made a port of entry without delay. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 2993) to quiet the title to certain land in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 2994) to repeal chapter 27 of acts of 1883, relating to civil service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2995) for the relief of Lazarus Spence; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2996) granting a pension to J. Claude White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 88) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. DOLPH, it was—

Ordered, That Alexander McNary have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate, for the purpose of being referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. WALTHALL, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the board of supervisors of Harrison County, Mississippi, for the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, and that the memorial be withdrawn for reference to the Secretary of the Treasury.

MISSOURI RIVER APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 512) known as the civil-tenure bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before that is done I should like to offer a resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I yield, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas in the appropriation in river and harbor bill of 1886 for the Missouri River it was required that work should be continued at Omaha, Plattsmouth, Eastport, and Brownsville, in Nebraska and Iowa:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate in what manner the Missouri River Commission apportioned said money so appropriated, and whether any portion was ordered to continue the work at the points above mentioned as provided in said river and harbor bill, and if the Secretary of War approved the refusal of the board so to continue work at the above points.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, there was appropriated in the bill for the improvement of certain rivers and harbors to which the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska refers $300,000, to be expended not only at the points named in the Senator's resolution, but also at certain other points in Kansas, including Atchison, where I reside, Fort Leavenworth, and perhaps one other point. I have been informed that the entire amount of $300,000 has been by order of the Secretary of War directed to be expended at two points in Missouri, to wit, $75,000 at the city of Saint Joseph and $225,000 at Kansas City. I am not positively informed that this is correct, but I have received information which leads me to believe that the entire amount of $300,000, which was specifically directed by the act of Congress to be apportioned among certain points named in Kansas, Nebraska, and Missouri, has been so disposed of by order of the Secretary of War. If that is the case, it is a direct violation not only of the intent and understanding of those who voted for that appropriation, but of the direct letter of the law itself.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. He speaks of the expenditure at Saint Jo and Kansas City, and also says that Atchison was named. Now, is not the expenditure on the Missouri River at Saint Jo as much for the benefit of Kansas as the expenditure at Atchison would be; and is not also the expenditure at Kansas City as much for Kansas as for Missouri? The river is the dividing line, and is not either side of the river as much benefited as the other?

Mr. INGALLS. Take the case of Fort Leavenworth, for instance, where the danger that threatens is not to the navigation of the stream, but the destruction of a bridge erected at that point by authority of Congress, and which is liable to be thrown inland in consequence of the depredations of this stream. That being the particular emergency which was sought to be guarded against by those who voted that appropriation, in reply to the Senator from Missouri I will ask what good or advantage or benefit will it be to expend $75,000 at Saint Joseph, 50 or 60 miles above that point, to prevent the depredation I have complained of at Fort Leavenworth?

Mr. President, either the Senator from Missouri does not understand the objects and purposes for which this appropriation was made, or his question is intended to divert public attention from the action of the Secretary of War that I have reason to believe has already been taken.

It appears to me that the Secretary of War has inverted the statute so far as its practical operations were concerned and holds that it rested with him only to sanction the distribution of this money as designated by the Missouri River Commission, instead of holding, as he ought, that he has the primal power in the matter and should make the assignment, and that the Missouri River Commission should furnish the plans and estimates for any assignment that may be made by him.

I wish to have the resolution amended so that it may include the other points named in the act, in order that the attention of the Secretary of War may be attracted to the very point in controversy, and that we may learn whether $300,000 having been appropriated for this purpose the whole amount, contrary to the design of Congress, is to be expended at two points named in my previous observations.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas is under an entire misapprehension as to the provisions of the act. I am a member of the Committee on Commerce, and paid particular attention to this section in the river and harbor bill. The position came originally from the colleague of the Senator from Kansas, which was mandatory upon the Missouri River Commission to expend so much money at the points named specifying particularly the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation and the town of Atchison. The Commerce Committee declined to make that provision mandatory, and, on the other hand, against my objection, I may say, without violating any parliamentary rule as to what took place in committee, made the following provision, which is now the law:

Improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City: Continuing improvement, including necessary work at Omaha, Atchison, Saint Joseph, Fort Leavenworth Reservation, Arrow Rock, Kansas City, Plattsmouth, Brownsville, and Nebraska City, $375,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with plans and estimates to be furnished by the Missouri River Commission.

It will be noticed from the language of this provision that it is entirely within the discretion of the War Department, according to plans and estimates to be furnished by the Missouri River Commission, as to what is necessary for the completion of these works. There is nothing mandatory in the section at all. It says that $375,000 shall be appropriated to "improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City: Continuing improvement;" that is, the improvement of the whole river.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the section?

Mr. VEST. It is on page 19 of the pamphlet copy of the river and harbor act.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the section?

Mr. VEST. There seems to be but one section for that matter. It is on page 19.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, there are six sections in the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It is found in the section containing the items of appropriations.

Mr. VEST. The portion of the act to which I refer is not divided into sections, but paragraphs. I am quoting from the pamphlet copy which just says "Be it enacted," &c., and then puts in the different items of appropriation. It is not sectionized at all.

As I was proceeding to say, it will be seen that it is within the discretion of the War Department—of the Bureau of Engineers—to determine whether this work is necessary or not, and that is the law as it stands now upon the statute-book. They have first to determine whether the necessary work exists at these points, and in the second place, the Missouri River Commission is to furnish the plans and estimates.

I have intended to visit the Bureau of Engineers and ascertain the truth as to how these appropriations were being expended. All I have seen has been in the newspapers; and whether the assertion of the Senator from Kansas as to the whole amount being expended at Kansas City and at another point in Missouri is true I am not able now to state. I do know that the work at Kansas City if left in its present condition will result in the destruction of the bridge, a most important one at that point, and will entirely ruin the harbor at that city, now rapidly improving.

As a matter of course I do not want and I do not expect that injustice shall be done to other points upon the Missouri River. I live at Kansas City, and I undertake to say for those people and the people of the entire State of Missouri that we want no unjust discrimination. We want the whole river improved, and we recognize the fact that when the river is improved at any portion of it it inures to the benefit of the people of Kansas City and of the people of the entire State.

Mr. INGALLS. There has been, as I understand it, not less than $300,000 heretofore expended at Kansas City. The Senator from Missouri speaks well of the great importance of that point and of the necessity of the expenditure of money there. But in addition to what I have already said about Fort Leavenworth I may refer to the needs of the river at Atchison. There is a bridge there which cost a million dollars, which affords facilities for transit to eight different railroads, and which is of immense consequence to the business and convenience of a great many hundred thousand people. I have been advised, and I believe, that unless something is done to prevent the encroachments of the river upon the Missouri shore upon which the eastern end of that bridge abuts, within twelve months from this time it will be cut off so that a portion of the stream at least will pass by the east end of the bridge and leave it entirely worthless.

One hundred and twenty thousand dollars has already been expended at that point for this very purpose. In order to complete the work it is necessary to expend a small amount more. There are other members of this body who know about this matter, and some who do not live in either Missouri or Kansas. I submit that the action of the Secretary of War, if, as I am advised, he has directed an expenditure of the appropriation exclusively at those two points, is in violation absolutely of the intent of Congress when the money was appropriated, for I know that the towns of Atchison and Fort Leavenworth were inserted by the Senate on my motion on vote.

It is, in my judgment, proper that the resolution should be so amended as to call the attention of the Secretary of War to all the points named in the act, so that we may know definitely what has been done.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the clerk to insert in the resolution the places designated by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. The points are Atchison, Saint Joseph, Fort Leavenworth reservation, Arrow Rock, and Kansas City.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest, in lieu of the phraseology proposed by the Senator from Kansas, that the resolution be amended so as to direct the Secretary of War to furnish to the Senate in detail the manner of expending the appropriation, so that we may know not only the places named, but all the points on the Missouri River at which money has been expended.

Mr. MCMILLAN. On the upper part of the river the money is not expended under the direction of the Missouri River Commission.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to call attention to the phraseology of the preamble, which sets out whereas certain money was required to be expended at the points named. If I understood the language read by the Senator from Missouri there was no such provision in the act. Why should we pass a preamble to a resolution asserting a fact which is not sustained by the act itself?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will explain that to the Senator.

Mr. INGALLS. Let me read the language of the paragraph.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. The language is:

Improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City: Continuing improvement, including necessary work at Omaha, Atchison, Saint Joseph, Fort Leavenworth Reservation, Arrow Rock, Kansas City, Plattsmouth, Brownsville, and Nebraska City, $375,000.

I ask the Senator from Delaware if any law of interpretation under the language of that statute, when those places are specially mentioned and the work declared to be necessary, would justify the Secretary of War or the Missouri River Commission in expending the $375,000 entirely at one single point named in the paragraph of the act?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will answer the Senator from Kansas that I understand the appropriation was for the whole river.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator does not understand anything about it, because the next paragraph makes an appropriation for the whole river, and this is for specific places on the river.

Mr. SAULSBURY. From the mouth of the river up to a certain other point.

Mr. INGALLS. Oh no, no.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. INGALLS. The next paragraph is, "Improving the Missouri River from Sioux City to Fort Benton," and so on.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me——

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I understand the language it applies to all points from the mouth up to Sioux City.

Mr. INGALLS. All the points named.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It applies to the whole river. The appropriation was for the whole river, and the Secretary of War could have expended it at any of the points on the river which the Missouri River Commission designated according to the terms of the act. I say that the Secretary of War, in my opinion, was bound up by the recommendations of the Missouri River Commission. He must expend the money in accordance with the plans and recommendations of that commission, and it was not optional with him.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Delaware if the Missouri River Commission is not bound by this statute?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not hold with the Senator from Kansas that the Secretary of War was bound under the terms of the act to expend a single dollar at Atchison or Leavenworth or at any particular point on the river unless it fell within the recommendations and specifications of the commission?

Mr. INGALLS. What I ask the Senator from Delaware is whether the Missouri River Commission under the terms of this statute are not required to make their estimates and plans for the necessary work at the points named?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not believe they were required to make any recommendation to expend the money at those points any more than at any other points; and I have no doubt that the Secretary of War has exercised——

Mr. INGALLS. Then let me ask the Senator why these towns were specifically named in the act by Congress?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It includes those points as well as other points on the river, but it does not mean to include those points to the exclusion of other points on the river.

Mr. INGALLS. They were put in for recreation, I presume.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is a very easy matter to find fault with the Secretary of War; but I have no doubt he has exercised a very wise discretion in the expenditure of the appropriations made by Congress for that river, as at all other points. He has no special interest in one point on the river more than another; and I do not think it is fair, upon the simple presentation of a resolution of inquiry, to rise here and denounce the action of the Secretary of War in this manner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Delaware will allow me to say that he is entirely mistaken as to the purport, intent, and motive of the resolution. It is not to cast any reflection upon the Secretary of War in the least, because when the Secretary of War answers the resolution, if the Bureau of Engineers report properly, he will no doubt say that he was required to do what he did; that he only had the power of acquiescence; that it belonged to the Missouri River Commission entirely to carry out the provision of the law or to nullify it, and that he was powerless in the matter. That, I understand, is the position which will be taken by the Secretary of War; and there, in my judgment, he is in error.

The Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Delaware will remember that in a previous Congress, when the river and harbor bill was under consideration, an effort was made to accomplish what has been placed in this act. It was done by the Senator from Kansas upon my left [Mr. PLUMB] insisting by amendments that certain points in Kansas should be incorporated in the bill and by myself insisting that points in Nebraska and Iowa should be placed in the bill, but the Committee on Commerce opposed it at that time, and they refused to allow any amendments of this nature to be incorporated in the bill. The result was that the discussion was continued so long upon those amendments that the river and harbor bill failed at that time. I say the river and harbor bill failed at that session because the points now designated in the act were not incorporated in that measure.

At the last session of Congress there was a provision made to include these same points. As far as the Nebraska points are concerned, I introduced an amendment, and had it referred to the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Commerce approved two of the points, Omaha and Nebraska City, and they reported the bill including those two points. When the bill was up for consideration in the Senate I proposed an amendment as to the two additional points in my original amendment, and it was adopted by the Senate, and the points in Kansas and Saint Joseph, in Missouri, were also inserted, but particularly the points in Kansas were incorporated in the bill.

With the statement of fact that at a previous session the river and harbor bill failed in the Senate because of the unwillingness of the Committee on Commerce to allow these very amendments, and that at the last session, when the bill was passed, it included some of these points with the concurrence of the committee and all of them by the action of the Senate, there is no discretion further than as to the amount of necessary repairs. The language of the statute is imperative; it is an appropriation for the Missouri River; and that there shall be no mistake, to meet what caused the defeat of the river and harbor bill at a previous session, Congress expressly designated that work should be continued at these points, and made appropriation for continuing work there. The only matter of discretion with the commission was as to the amount of necessary work; but that they had authority to array themselves against Congress is a position which certainly can not be sustained.

It was first made known by the public prints that the Missouri River Commission had resolved to expend all the money (with the exception of a little at Saint Joseph) at Kansas City or between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, when this matter had caused the collision in the previous session of Congress, but Congress having in the succeeding session determined this very question. Probably nearly the only act ever done by the Missouri River Commission was to determine that whatever money should be appropriated by Congress for the Missouri River should be expended between Kansas City and the mouth of the river. That was done before the previous session of Congress, and hence it was that when it was determined in advance that whatever money was appropriated for the Missouri River should be expended only between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, it made it necessary that the Senator from Kansas on my left and myself and some other Senators should determine that question. Therefore, as I said, when the Committee on Commerce refused to allow the amendment it was the cause of the defeat of the bill at that session.

I desire my friend from Missouri to bear in mind that fact. There was a difference of opinion between the commission and certain members of Congress, and hence the refusal to pass the bill at that session, or certainly at least because of an unwillingness to yield this money to the entire control of the Missouri River Commission the bill failed at the previous session.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. After this provision was enacted, referring to the law as it now stands, did the Senator support the river and harbor bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I voted for it, I think.

Mr. VEST. Did not the Senator oppose it in debate here on the floor of the Senate as it was reported from the committee?

Mr. VAN WYCK. In many things I did object to it, and I suppose I opposed the whole bill.

Mr. VEST. I think the RECORD will show that both the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] opposed the bill persistently.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I voted for the bill with alacrity.

Mr. VEST. Then the Senator spoke one way and voted the other, for I very well recollect a most eloquent speech that he delivered here against the whole bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I opposed certain features in the bill with a good deal of vigor, but when it was subsequently reduced, on the motion of the chairman of the committee, 25 per cent. I gave it my cordial adhesion.

Mr. VEST. Exactly. As the bill came from the Committee on Commerce it appropriated $500,000 for the Missouri River, which I contended in committee and in the Senate was a ridiculously low appropriation for that long river, the longest on the continent. But the Senator from Kansas says now that with all his zeal for scattering these appropriations up and down the river, from its mouth to Sioux City, he voted for the bill only when that appropriation was reduced to $375,000; and so the Senator from Nebraska voted for that decrease against my protest in behalf of the Missouri River and all the towns along it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think I may state to my friend that I voted for the bill. Generally the river and harbor bill is so full of abominations that a man must necessarily oppose it to some extent, and he is justified almost in voting against it entirely; but my impression is that the RECORD will show that finally I voted for this bill. I will say to my friend, however, that at a previous session the river and harbor bill was defeated because the commission had declared in advance that any and all moneys appropriated by Congress for that river should be expended between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, and because the representatives of the Missouri River on this floor were determined that that should not be done if they could prevent it—that other portions of the river should be protected equally with that between Kansas City and the mouth. It was that which caused the defeat of the river and harbor bill at the previous session. That was an issue clean cut, and everybody understood it. The Engineer Department understood it; the Missouri River Commission understood it; the Committee on Commerce of this body must have understood it, for it was a clean-cut matter of difference between the river commission and Congress as to the disposition of the money to be expended on the Missouri River.

Mr. VEST. Now, as the Senator goes along it is just as well to have matters put right. I can not permit the statement he has just made to go, because I know personally that it is not in accordance with the real state of the case that occurred here when that river and harbor bill failed. I may appeal, I think, to the almost unanimous memory of this Senate, certainly of the Committee on Commerce. The river and harbor bill which failed antecedent to the passage of the bill we are now considering, came over from the House of Representatives to the Senate within three days of the end of the session. It was simply physically impossible for us to consider it in that time; but we took it up in the Committee on Commerce, and we found that we should be compelled to sit up the entire night and then to come in without opportunity for debate in order to present it to the Senate as the very last measure for consideration. We knew that under the circumstances it would be impossible to pass any bill. One objection would have destroyed it. Every one of my colleagues on that committee knows this to be the fact.

As to this issue between the Missouri River Commission and the Senate, or the commission and the House, I never heard of it, and I undertake to say it was not presented before that committee at all.

But again, if the Senator will permit me a word further, I will not interrupt him again. He says now this issue was made sharply and distinctly between the Missouri River Commission and the friends of these different ports or places that were left outside of the appropriation in the last river and harbor bill as it came here. What was the fact at the last session of Congress? The House of Representatives struck out the Missouri River Commission. They took all power from that commission. The bill came from the House to the Senate in that condition. Then the issue was made whether the Missouri River Commission should still remain in existence or not, and upon that question the Senate sustained the commission. These are the facts, and by this bill, which has become a law, the Missouri River Commission is left intact, with the same power it had under the act which originally created it.

That does not comport with the statement of the Senator from Nebraska. It shows that the Senate determined, with all the antecedent facts before them, to keep the commission in existence, and they did so.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, what may have been the understanding in the committee-room I know not; certainly the secret was not an open one that it would be impossible to pass the bill. Of course we are at a loss to know, or even to conjecture, what may have produced that impression. I merely spoke of the fact that has passed into history, and not of the implied or secret understanding of the Committee on Commerce on that matter.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to make a statement?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is correct in his statement, and a written report was submitted by the Committee on Commerce, stating that the time was not sufficient to permit the consideration of the bill and that the matter could not be presented in time for consideration by the Senate. There is no doubt about that, and we had no discussion at all in the Senate, or elsewhere, about any of the items.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That may be. I have no sort of doubt that the committee came here with an apology as to the late day in which that bill was presented. That is undoubtedly correct. We all know that.

Mr. MCMILLAN. We did not present any apology.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Presented an apology to the country by the report which he says they made. They were apologizing to the country to show that the delay or neglect was not with them, but was with the other House. That that bill came here only a few days before the end of the session is true. They did seek to pass that bill. Did not the Senator present the bill to the Senate and seek to pass it? I ask the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MCMILLAN. No; we reported that we could not consider it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Did you not actually seek to pass the bill by the Senate without regard to the report? What does the chairman say?

Mr. MCMILLAN. We made a report that we could not consider it, and left the whole matter to the Senate without recommendation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Did not the committee present the bill here and seek to pass it, I ask the chairman?

Mr. MCMILLAN. No, if I understand the question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I will say to the Senator that I have arrayed against him several pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which I suppose he will acknowledge is history—several pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which show that the committee stood here seeking to pass that river and harbor bill which they now say they knew they never could pass as they had only three days in which to consider it.

I know the time was short, and that was the only reason why we defeated the proposition of the Missouri River Commission. We knew it; we knew it was an open secret when the committee of this House allied themselves with the Missouri River Commission and insisted that that money when it was appropriated should only be spent between Kansas City and the mouth of the river; and we antagonized the bill which was here pressed. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] had it in charge and he pressed it with all the zeal and all the ability and all the eloquence which he can and does command.

Mr. CONGER. The utterances of the Senator from Nebraska pass into history, and it becomes an important fact that they are of record. It therefore may be proper for me to make a statement in regard to that matter.

The statement of the Senator from Missouri was a correct one and the only correct one. The river and harbor bill which I was very anxious, as other Senators were, to have considered and to have passed, came from the House of Representatives to the Committee on Commerce and was printed for the use of the Senate committee only two days, I think, before the adjournment of Congress at the session before last, and there was no possibility of examining that bill as it ought to have been examined and reporting it to the Senate. The committee met and discussed the question and came to the conclusion that they could not, in justice to themselves and to the country, report that bill favorably to the Senate with the short time for examination which they had. That fact and that statement was reported, if I remember aright, by the chairman in writing. It is part of the RECORD and it is reported there, and our whole discussion, as I recollect, was an assent to the propriety of that report. The Senator from Nebraska has confounded other bills and other times with the bill of the session of two years ago. That is my recollection of it and I do not want it to go to the country in any other shape. It is also the recollection of every member of the committee, I will venture to say, who will speak upon the subject.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have no doubt the committee is confused about the date of these different bills.

Mr. CONGER. No, Mr. President, the committee is not confused, and it does not intend to be confused, as far as I am concerned, by the wild statements of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly we are getting into the RECORD now, whether we got there two years ago or not. I will suggest to the gentlemen of this committee it would have been better to have stated that at the outset and withdrawn the bill when they were satisfied they could not pass it; but the bill was certainly antagonized for the reason I have stated.

I aver that there was an understanding about it, because I myself, and my friend from Kansas, on my left, dissented from the proposition of the Missouri River Commission. They had in advance determined that whatever money was appropriated by Congress for the benefit of the Missouri River, should be expended between Kansas City and the mouth of the river. With that declaration in advance, of course the States lying along that river which were deeply interested in the protection of its commerce, necessarily came to the support of the interests which they represented, and therefore it was that we were brought squarely in conflict with the Committee on Commerce, because without intending it, their action sustained the Missouri River Commission. The river commission boldly said to us in Congress, "Gentlemen, you may appropriate what you please, but we will spend it between Kansas City and the mouth of the river," and they came here with that declaration, and when the committee proposed the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars without qualifying the manner of its distribution, it left it in the hands of the Missouri River Commission; and hence it was that the Senator from Kansas and myself antagonized that proposition, and we had amendment after amendment, several amendments, on that question, and I had reports for years from the Engineer Department of this Government showing the necessity of the expenditure of the money at the points indicated, which would be wiped out and ignored by the action of the Missouri River Commission. We discussed here long into night, until midnight and probably beyond it, these very questions, and it was only because of the shortness of the time that we were enabled to defeat that river and harbor bill. I suggest to the gentlemen of the committee that they will find it interesting reading to refer back to the RECORD and see the history which they made, and which the Senate made on that occasion.

The refusal of the committee on that occasion to allow amendments such as they did allow in the bill of last session defeated the river and harbor bill of two years ago. That was the fact which I stated, and I will say to my friend from Missouri that I am not only sustained by current history, but by the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That is the history to start with. There was the position of the commission. Here, by the way, if this committee will allow me, I will refer to the fact that the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] also antagonized that bill. He desired some amendments, just what I do not know, which helped of course to defeat it in the last hours of the session. But the bill was seriously antagonized by these amendments. The Senator from New York, the Senator from Kansas, and the Senator from Nebraska, were all united in defeating that bill, which now the members of the committee very innocently say they knew they could not pass and did not have any idea that they could pass it when they presented it for the action of the Senate.

Having some knowledge, as they evidently had, as to the necessity of expenditures at these different river points because the other bill had failed, the very question came up last session on this bill clean cut, as I say, the question whether the commission should control the disposition of all this money appropriated, or whether Congress should interpose and make some suggestion about it; and hence it was before that bill was reported the amendment which I have spoken of, including two points in Nebraska, was presented for the consideration of the committee, and they included them. When the bill was considered in the Senate the other two points were inserted, and the points suggested by the Senator from Kansas were also then inserted.

What then? The appropriation bill is passed, and the next thing we hear is that this Missouri River Commission, in the plenitude of their power, had met together, after the appropriation bill was passed, and resolved to do what they had resolved to do two years ago—that all the money substantially should be expended between Kansas City and the mouth of the river. This was a startling assumption of power on their part. I took the liberty to write to the Secretary of War, and I think from what I saw in the papers the Senator from Kansas on my left [Mr. PLUMB] did the same thing, calling the attention of the Secretary to the fact that Congress had said something about the disposition of this money.

A few days ago I dropped into the Engineer Department and I said: "Why is this?" "The Missouri River Commission has recommended it," I was told. "On what ground?" I inquired. "Well, they thought if the money was expended at those points it would be thrown away." "Well," I said, "the chances are that the whole of it if thrown into the Missouri River between Kansas City and the mouth will be thrown away also." What right had they to sit and speculate as to whether the money would be thrown away, when it was appropriated for the improvement of the river, Congress even designating the points at which the money should be expended? Then it was suggested that this was to be expended like money appropriated to be used under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission. But there is a vast difference between the authority given to the Mississippi River Commission and to the Missouri River Commission. However absolute the authority of the former may be, and was intended to be by Congress, such great powers were not given to the Missouri River Commission, nor were they intended to be. The Missouri River Commission is under the control and direction of the Secretary of War, and his attention probably not being called to that fact, he felt it to be his duty to approve in form its action whether he really in his own judgment approved of it or not, and to give the approval of his office to whatever the commission might suggest or recommend.

If this order is carried out, it will be an ignoring of the direction of Congress and a denial of its authority. The engineers are directed to continue the work. That direction is as emphatic as is the appropriation of the money for the improvement of the river. It is for continuing the work at the points designated, for the necessary improvements there, and the only jurisdiction of the commission is to say how far it may be necessary to go, and how much money it is needul to expend in doing what Congress has directed to be done.

Mr. President, I have offered this resolution, not in any spirit of captiousness or fault-finding with the Secretary of War, but to test the question whether a commission or any other department of this Government, after Congress, having the law-making power, has appropriated money and designated the manner of its expenditure, shall have it in its discretion to thus arbitrarily repeal an act of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I rise to make a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator from Illinois want to call up his report now?

Mr. CULLOM. Not to call it up at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the conference report.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, during the last days of the last session of Congress a conference was appointed by the two Houses upon the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce. The conferees on the part of the Senate have instructed me to make a report, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows——

Mr. CULLOM. The conferees report an amendment to the Senate bill in the nature of a substitute, and, as the Senate will remember, the bill is a pretty long one, and as it is not my purpose to ask the Senate to vote upon it to-day, because I think it is due to the Senate that every member should have an opportunity of seeing what it is, I do not know that it is necessary to have it read. I ask, therefore, that the report be printed and laid upon the table for action hereafter.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would like to suggest to the chairman of the committee that as this is an important bill, and contains important provisions affecting vast material interests which have never been considered by the Senate, a day certain be fixed for its consideration after the holiday recess.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not call it up before the holidays.

Mr. CULLOM. It is my purpose to ask that the report be printed, as it is in the nature of a new bill, laid upon the table, and then to call it up on Monday or Tuesday of next week. It may be possible, if it is desired on the part of the Senate to discuss it at length, that it may go over the holidays; I do not know how that may be. I hope not, but I am perfectly willing to give fair opportunity for discussion, as the Senate has a right to it whether I were willing or not, but I hope no Senator will insist upon a motion to postpone until after the holidays.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will allow me to make a suggestion to him. This is a matter in which my constituency as that of every other Senator—there is nothing peculiar in my condition—has a very deep interest indeed, and it is a bill containing, as I understand, a new scheme in part, which demands not only profound study on the part of the legislators who are to vote upon it, but also demands that the business interests of the country should have an opportunity to see it and to make their communications to their representatives here, because everybody knows that this is peculiarly one of those cases in which the suggestions that will be made by practical business men will be extremely instructive to legislators. Next week is a time when the holidays are likely to begin, and a day or two before those holidays is always a bad time for the consideration of important measures. I hope the Senator will now, in order to save any trouble, get the Senate to agree that this measure may be assigned for the second day after the holidays. Then we shall be sure of what is going to happen.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that Congress is going to have any holidays, so far as an adjournment is considered. All I desire now is to have this report laid upon the table and printed. It is within the power of the Senate to postpone the consideration of it, if it desires to do so, until the first part of next week, when I shall seek to call it up. I think that the probability is that, if there is a desire for discussion, it may then go over further, but I would prefer not to agree to that at this time. I desire to add to my motion that the report be printed; also that the Senate bill, as it passed the Senate, shall be printed with the amendment proposed by the conference committee to the Senate bill in italics, so that every Senator can see exactly what changes are proposed in the Senate bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to my colleague on the committee that he give notice at this time, the bill being printed as it will be under the order of the Senate made this morning, that on Monday next he will call up the report. Of course a majority of the Senate will determine then whether it will consider it or not; but I think that will give ample time to every Senator to examine the report, examine the bill, and be prepared to act upon it as well then as at any later day.

Mr. CULLOM. That is my purpose.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, as this report——

Mr. CULLOM. My present motion is that this report be printed and that the Senate bill as passed by the Senate be also printed again, with the amendments proposed in italics, so that every Senator can see exactly the changes made in the Senate bill. I desire that motion to be acted upon by the Senate, after which I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate simply to make a statement of fact as to the changes in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will have to make his statement before that action is taken, or otherwise, the report being laid on the table, it would not be debatable.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Illinois respecting the printing of this bill and report.

I think the Senate is entitled to each successive step respecting this important matter, and that the first thing to be printed is the Senate bill, and that then the amendment the other House made, a single amendment to that bill, should be printed, and then the Senate bill should be printed with each and every amendment proposed by the conference committee, these amendments being in capital letters, so that we may not make a mistake in respect to what the conference committee propose. In that way we shall have the text of the original bill, the amendment of the House in italics, and the Senate bill with the amendments proposed by the conference committee in capital letters. Then let us also have the substitute by itself, so that we may know exactly how the bill will read if passed as reported by the conference committee.

Mr. CULLOM. In answer to the Senator's suggestion I will say that there is very little in the proposed bill that is the language of any part of the House bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not able to see myself that we should get very much information by printing in any particular form the Senate bill as it passed the Senate, and then the House bill as it passed the House, or the substitute for the Senate bill now reported. My judgment is that Senators will be able to know all about the changes that occur by printing the Senate bill as it passed and then the proposed amendments of the conference committee in italics.

I suggest to the Senator that printing in capital letters, as I understand from some gentlemen who know something about printing, would probably be a difficult matter to do. Hence I think it is not necessary to have it printed in capitals because italics will answer just as well.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I do not care about that; I presume capital letters are scarce; but I think in connection with this bill we want the House measure printed in some form.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. That may be done by way of a supplement if you please.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not want so much printed that you will never find out what is before you.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. CULLOM. Before action on my motion, I desire to make a statement of the changes in the bill. The following is a statement of the changes in the bill as passed by the Senate which have been agreed to and are recommended by the committee of conference:

Section 1 is amended by inserting the words "or the District of Columbia" after the words "United States" where they occur in lines 8 and 9, to make it plain that the act will apply to transportation between the States and Territories and the District of Columbia, as well as between the States and Territories.

I am making this statement that Senators may from the RECORD immediately get an idea of the changes that are proposed; and hence I ask their attention.

The term "railroad" is defined in this section, beginning with line 24, as including "all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad;" and to these words the following have been added: "And also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease."

Sections 2, 3, and 4 of the Senate bill, prohibiting discriminations, contained provisions in relation to the recovery of damages. These have been stricken out of said sections, and have been grouped together in one section, which is made section 8 of the committee bill. Except as to this rearrangement, substantially the only change made has been the addition of the provision of the House bill that "a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee" shall be allowed by the court in every case of the recovery of damages. The parts of said sections which are stricken out in consequence of the rearrangement referred to are all of section 2 after the word "unlawful," in line 13, all of section 3 after the word "business," in line 18, and lines 23 to 27, both inclusive, in section 4. No other change is made in section 2.

Section 3 is also amended by striking out the words "and proper," in line 12, and substituting therefor the words "proper and equal," "so as to require railroads to afford "equal" as well as "reasonable and proper" facilities to connecting roads for the interchange of traffic. Also, by striking out the words "but no such common carrier shall be required to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business," and by substituting therefor the following: "And shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines; but this shall not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business."

Section 4 of the Senate bill is amended by striking out the words "and from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival," in lines 7 and 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the shorter being included within the longer distance;" also, by inserting after the words "in special cases," in line 13, the words "after investigation by the commission."

This section is further amended by striking out the following words in relation to the power of the commission to suspend the operation of the section, beginning in line 16:

Make general rules exempting such designated common carrier in such special cases from the operation of this section of this act; and when such exceptions shall have been made and published, they shall, until changed by the commission or by law, have like force and effect as though the same had been specified in this section.

And by substituting therefor the following words:

Prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

Section 19, requiring an immediate investigation by the commission of the necessity of legislation upon the subject of pooling, has been stricken out, and section 5 of the committee bill contains the provision of the House bill prohibiting pooling, with some modifications of the language.

Section 5 of the Senate bill has been replaced by section 6 of the committee bill, which combines most of the provisions of the Senate and House bills upon the subject of publicity of rates. Section 5 made it the duty of the commission to secure publicity of rates as far as might be found practicable; not only the rates between points on each railroad, but rates over connecting lines as well. The new section requires each railroad to make public the rates between points upon its own line, and in addition the commission is directed to secure publicity of rates over connecting lines so far as may be found practicable.

Section 9 of the committee bill is an addition to the Senate bill, and provides that persons claiming to be damaged by the violation of the act by any common carrier may either make complaint to the commission as provided in the Senate bill, or may institute suits for the recovery of damages in their own behalf in the district or circuit courts of the United States.

For section 7 of the Senate bill, providing for the criminal penalty, section 10 of the committee bill has been substituted, which, though in different terms, is substantially the same in effect.

Section 8 of the Senate bill has been changed so as to provide that the terms of the commissioners first appointed shall run for two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from January 1, 1887, without regard to the time of their appointment.

Section 9 of the Senate bill is amended by adding to the provisions for compelling officers of railroads to testify, when summoned by the commission, the following:

The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

Section 15 of the Senate bill is amended by making the words "all necessary traveling expenses," in line 16, read as follows: "all necessary expenses for transportation."

Nine sections of the Senate bill have not been changed in any respect, except as to the numbering, namely: Sections 6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, and 18.

Section 20 of the Senate bill has been amended by inserting the following after the word "religion" in line 8:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their officers and employés, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employés.

Also, by striking out all after line 9, and substituting therefor the following:

Existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies: Provided, That no pending legislation shall in any way be affected by this act.

The following has been added as a new section:

SEC. 24. That the provisions of sections 11 and 18 of this act, relating to the appointment and organization of the commission herein provided for, shall take effect immediately, and the remaining provisions of this act shall take effect sixty days after its passage.

This statement I have deemed it proper to make to go into the RECORD, so that if Senators desire to look at it, so as to ascertain what changes have been made from the Senate bill, it may be some help to them in determining what they are. I yield now to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, as the report of the conference committee was not fully read, even the concluding formal part of it being omitted in the reading, the Senate was not informed by the reading of the report that I did not concur by my signature in the conclusions at which the conferees arrived. It is therefore, perhaps, proper that I should say at this time that I was unable to bring my mind to the signature of this report, and it is also perhaps fair that I should state, to some extent, the ground upon which I withheld my signature.

I think I should, though with great reluctance, have consented to all the provisions and recommendations of the report but one. I should have had great reluctance in subscribing to the recommendation for the change of the Senate provision relating to short hauls and long hauls; but if it had been necessary to get an agreement I think I would not have withheld my assent to that change. But I was unable to agree to the surrender of the provision in the Senate bill directing the commission, when it should be appointed, to make an immediate investigation of what is known as pooling between railroads and to report their conclusions and recommendations thereupon to Congress, and substitute therefor the absolute prohibition under penalties of a thousand dollars a day for non-compliance, with the provision which was contained in the House bill or the House amendment to the Senate bill.

I do not at this time deem it necessary to give at length the reasons which made it impossible for me to assent to this recommendation of the committee of conference. If the matter should be discussed, as I suppose it will be in the future, I should hope to be able to satisfy the Senate that those reasons were weighty, and that they were such as fully justified me in the somewhat unusual course of withholding my signature to the report of the conference committee.

I will say now, however, that I think the public prejudice, if there be one, existing against pooling by railroads is largely the result of ignorance on the part of the public as to what railroad pools really are. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests "want of information." I do not know that the public is ever ignorant, but I do believe that there exists a very great deal of misapprehension in the public mind as to the nature, the effect, the result upon the general welfare of the country of pooling contracts between railroads; and I believe, as I thought the Senate believed, that the bill as it was passed by the Senate was calculated to cure whatever evils had grown out of the system of railroad pooling, so that before the report of the commission which was provided for in the Senate bill upon this subject should be made, the people would have become convinced that the evils which they supposed to result from the pooling of freights by railroads were either imaginary or had been cured by the operation of the bill which was passed by the Senate.

I was not unmindful of the fact that all interstate commerce, so far as relates to freight, is to-day transacted under pooling arrangements by the railroads, and that an absolute prohibition of pooling was to break up at once, or, as the bill now reads, within sixty days after its passage, every arrangement by which the interstate commerce business of this country is at present conducted. It seemed to me, with my knowledge of the history of the management of railroads, and with my knowledge of legislation upon this subject, that the result would be an immediate rate-war by all the railroads of the United States. At least that was my apprehension, and I believed that the evils and consequences which would result from that would be very much greater in their injurious effects upon the public, upon the prosperity of the country, than any evils which now exist by reason of what are known as pooling contracts.

I do not desire to say more at this time.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I did not expect to say anything on the general subject of the bill, and I shall only add a word to what has been stated.

I think that my colleague on the committee is probably laboring under undue fear of the consequences of the passage of this bill on account of the prohibition of pooling. One of the purposes of the bill itself by requiring publicity of rates and preventing change of rates to a higher schedule, except on ten days' notice, is to bring about that stability of rates which the railroad companies themselves are appealing to us to have brought about, because under the system of pooling they have not been able to bring it about.

So, in my judgment, the apprehension of the Senator from Connecticut that it is going to be injurious to the business of the country will prove to be unfounded; at least I hope and I believe so. I think every Senator will bear me out in saying that I have not been disposed to consent to anything going into this bill that was unreasonable, at least in my own judgment. As I said a moment ago, I would not have consented to the provision of the bill prohibiting pooling if I believed that it would bring upon the country that sort of trouble which the Senator from Connecticut indicates that he apprehends. Every one knows that the railroad companies themselves have finally become reconciled to some national legislation, because they have not been able to protect themselves, one from another, and I think that the provisions of this bill in relation to publicity, and the other provisions to guard against various wrong-doings on their part, will have very great force and effect in bringing about that sort of stability which it has been the ostensible purpose at least of pooling to secure. I hope, myself, that when this bill comes up for consideration we shall have fair consideration of it, fair discussion of it, and I believe that the Senate, if it is going to agree to any bill at all on this subject, ought to take the conference report.

Every one knows that this question has been bandied about here from one Congress to another for many years, and Congress has never yet done anything on the subject. The Supreme Court of the United States, within the last two or three months, has made a decision which throws upon Congress the unquestionable duty of legislation regulating interstate commerce if we believe it ought to have any regulation. While the bill is not exactly as I wanted it, while it is not exactly the bill of the Senate, yet except as to the provision in regard to pooling it is practically the Senate bill, and I hope that Senators when the time comes for its consideration will allow the report to be concurred in.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I wish to express my surprise that the chairman of the committee should refuse to accede to what seems to me the reasonable request of Senators, that this bill may go over and be set down for a day certain after the coming recess.

The proposition of the chairman of the committee is this, that this bill shall be printed, which will take at least until Friday, and then he proposes to call it up on Monday, which will give Senators one day to understand the elaborate and complex provisions of a bill affecting every person in the United States. It will give us twenty-four hours to consider the bill.

I do not propose at this time to discuss the bill, but I will say that so far as I understand the report its essential provisions are such as the Senate has refused to accede to, or they are propositions which have never been discussed in the Senate at all. That being true, it seems to me that in fairness to all the interests concerned the chairman of the committee should assent to having the bill set down for a day certain after the recess. As the Senator from Massachusetts has very well suggested there are a great many important interests to be considered; the representatives of those interests should have a right to see this bill in print more than twenty-four hours, as well as the members of Congress, before we are called upon to vote on it.

Of course, I have no control over the action of the chairman of the committee, but it seems to me that he should not show what it seems to me is undue haste in a matter of this importance.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to offer a resolution asking for papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This question has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope it will be disposed of before other business is received.

Mr. SABIN. I desire to supplement the request and the statements of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Rhode Island in reference to this bill, and I appeal to the chairman of the committee to consent to the setting of a day after the recess, and that that day shall not be fixed sooner than at least four or five days or a week after the proposed recess of Congress. It will be impossible for me to be present here on Monday next, the day which he suggests, or to be present from that day until after the recess; and I presume there is not a constituency in this country that has more vital interests at stake in the provisions of this bill than the constituency in Minnesota which I have the honor in part to represent. I have already been flooded with telegrams from shippers and carriers asking for copies of the report of the conference committee. I expect to see a number of those interested parties upon my visit to my home during the recess, and I wish to confer with them in reference to the provisions agreed on by the conference committee. There probably has not been a bill before Congress for many years that has elicited a warmer and deeper interest from the business interests of the country than the bill which it is proposed to consider at the time that may, be fixed.

I appeal again to the chairman to fix a day, and make it at least a week after the reassembling of Congress on the expiration of the proposed holiday recess, which I presume will be taken.

Mr. CULLOM. There is only one motion before the Senate, Mr. President, and that is to lay on the table and print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the report of the committee of conference be printed with the bill of the Senate, the amendment of the House, and the amendments now reported by the conference committee, in the order named, and that the report lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What number of copies will be printed under the general motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move now that 5,000 copies of the bill as reported from the conference committee be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would also suggest that the bill as reported be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to print the extra copies will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the bill as amended be printed in to-morrow morning's RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the bill as amended be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to the bill of the Senate, with the following amendment thereto, in the nature of a substitute, and that the Senate agree to the same:

AMENDMENT.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used, under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers or property, or to the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property, wholly within one State, and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any State or Territory as aforesaid.

The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, or for the receiving, delivery, storage, or handling of such property, shall be reasonable and just, and every unjust, unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 2. That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines; but this shall not be construed as requiring any such common carrier to give the use of its tracks or terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid, each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense.

SEC. 6. That every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall print and keep for public inspection schedules showing the rates and fares and charges for the transportation of passengers and property which any such common carrier has established and which are in force at the time upon its railroad, as defined by the first section of this act. The schedules printed as aforesaid by any such common carrier shall plainly state the places upon its railroad between which property and passengers will be carried, and shall contain the classification of freight in force upon such railroad, and shall also state separately the terminal charges and any rules or regulations which in any wise change, affect, or determine any part of the aggregate of such aforesaid rates and fares and charges. Such schedules shall be plainly printed in large type, of at least the size of ordinary pica, and copies for the use of the public shall be kept in every depot or station upon any such railroad, in such places and in such form that they can be conveniently inspected.

Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act receiving freight in the United States to be carried through a foreign country to any place in the United States shall also in like manner print and keep for public inspection, at every depot where such freight is received for shipment, schedules showing the through rates established and charged by such common carrier to all points in the United States beyond the foreign country to which it accepts freight for shipment; and any freight shipped from the United States through a foreign country into the United States, the through rate on which shall not have been made public as required by this act, shall, before it is admitted into the United States from said foreign country, be subject to customs duties as if said freight were of foreign production; and any law in conflict with this section is hereby repealed.

No advance shall be made in the rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published as aforesaid by any common carrier in compliance with the requirements of this section, except after ten days' public notice, which shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the schedule then in force, and the time when the increased rates, fares, or charges will go into effect; and the proposed changes shall be shown by printing new schedules, or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept for public inspection. Reductions in such published rates, fares, or charges may be made without previous public notice; but whenever any such reduction is made, notice of the same shall immediately be publicly posted and the changes made shall immediately be made public by printing new schedules, or shall immediately be plainly indicated upon the schedules at the time in force and kept for public inspection.

And when any such common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, and charges, in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers or property, or for any services in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule of rates, fares, and charges as may at the time be in force.

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall file with the commission hereinafter provided for copies of its schedules of rates, fares, and charges which have been established and published in compliance with the requirements of this section, and shall promptly notify said commission of all changes made in the same. Every such common carrier shall also file with said commission copies of all contracts, agreements, or arrangements with other common carriers in relation to any traffic affected by the provisions of this act to which it may be a party. And in cases where passengers and freight pass over continuous lines or routes operated by more than one common carrier, and the several common carriers operating such lines or routes establish joint tariffs of rates or fares or charges for such continuous lines or routes, copies of such joint tariffs shall also, in like manner, be filed with said commission. Such joint rates, fares, and charges on such continuous lines so filed as aforesaid shall be made public by such common carriers when directed by said commission, in so far as may, in the judgment of the commission, be deemed practicable; and said commission shall from time to time prescribe the measure of publicity which shall be given to such rates, fares, and charges, or to such part of them as it may deem it practicable for such common carriers to publish, and the places in which they shall be published; but no common carrier party to any such joint tariff shall be liable for the failure of any other common carrier party thereto to observe and adhere to the rates, fares, or charges thus made and published.

If any such common carrier shall neglect or refuse to file or publish its schedules or tariffs of rates, fares, and charges as provided in this section, or any part of the same, such common carrier shall, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed, be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any circuit court of the United States in the judicial district wherein the principal office of said common carrier is situated or wherein such offense may be committed, and if such common carrier be a foreign corporation, in the judicial circuit wherein such common carrier accepts traffic and has an agent to perform such service, to compel compliance with the aforesaid provisions of this section; and such writ shall issue in the name of the people of the United States, at the relation of the commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act; and failure to comply with its requirements shall be punishable as and for a contempt; and the said commissioners, as complainants, may also apply, in any such circuit court of the United States, for a writ of injunction against such common carrier, to restrain such common carrier from receiving or transporting property among the several States and Territories of the United States, or between the United States and adjacent foreign countries, or between ports of transshipment and of entry and the several States and Territories of the United States, as mentioned in the first section of this act, until such common carrier shall have complied with the aforesaid provisions of this section of this act.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, expressed or implied, to prevent, by change of time schedule, carriage in different cars, or by other means or devices, the carriage of freights from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination; and no break of bulk, stoppage, or interruption made by such common carrier shall prevent the carriage of freights from being and being treated as one continuous carriage from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such break, stoppage, or interruption was made in good faith for some necessary purpose, and without any intent to avoid or unnecessarily interrupt such continuous carriage or to evade any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That in case any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall do, cause to be done, or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, such common carrier shall be liable to the person or persons injured thereby for the full amount of damages sustained in consequence of any such violation of the provisions of this act, together with a reasonable counsel or attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court in every case of recovery, which attorney's fee shall be taxed and collected as part of the costs in the case.

SEC. 9. That any person or persons claiming to be damaged by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act may either make complaint to the commission as hereinafter provided for, or may bring suit in his or their own behalf for the recovery of the damages for which such common carrier may be liable under the provisions of this act, in any district or circuit court of the United States of competent jurisdiction; but such person or persons shall not have the right to pursue both of said remedies, and must in each case elect which one of the two methods of procedure herein provided for he or they will adopt. In any such action brought for the recovery of damages the court before which the same shall be pending may compel any director, officer, receiver, trustee, or agent of the corporation or company defendant in such suit to attend, appear, and testify in such case, and may compel the production of the books and papers of such corporation or company party to any such suit; the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 10. That any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 for each offense.

SEC. 11. That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the interstate commerce commission, which shall be composed of five commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The commissioners first appointed under this act shall continue in office for the term of two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from the 1st day of January, A. D. 1887, the term of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Not more than three of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. No person in the employ of, or holding any official relation to, any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or owning stock or bonds thereof, or who is in any way pecuniarily interested therein, shall enter upon the duties of or hold such office. Said commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. No vacancy in the commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

SEC. 12. That the commission hereby created shall have authority to inquire into the management of the business of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, and shall keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and shall have the right to obtain from such common carriers full and complete information necessary to enable the commission to perform the duties and carry out the objects for which it was created; and for the purposes of this act the commission shall have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation, and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such common carrier or other person to appear before said commission (and produce books and papers if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 13. That any person, firm, corporation, or association, or any mercantile, agricultural, or manufacturing society, or any body politic or municipal organization, complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act in contravention of the provisions thereof, may apply to said commission by petition, which shall briefly state the facts; whereupon a statement of the charges thus made shall be forwarded by the commission to such common carrier, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission. If such common carrier, within the time specified, shall make reparation for the injury alleged to have been done, said carrier shall be relieved of liability to the complainant only for the particular violation of law thus complained of. If such carrier shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified, or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the matters complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper.

Said commission shall in like manner investigate any complaint forwarded by the railroad commissioner or railroad commission of any State or Territory, at the request of such commissioner or commission, and may institute any inquiry on its own motion in the same manner and to the same effect as though complaint had been made.

No complaint shall at any time be dismissed because of the absence of direct damage to the complainant.

SEC. 14. That whenever an investigation shall be made by said commission, it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which shall include the findings of fact upon which the conclusions of the commission are based, together with its recommendation as to what reparation, if any, should be made by the common carrier to any party or parties who may be found to have been injured; and such findings so made shall thereafter, in all judicial proceedings, be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found.

All reports of investigations made by the commission shall be entered of record, and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the party who may have complained, and to any common carrier that may have been complained of.

SEC. 15. That if in any case in which an investigation shall be made by said commission it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the commission, either by the testimony of witnesses or other evidence, that anything has been done or omitted to be done in violation of the provisions of this act, or of any law cognizable by said commission, by any common carrier, or that any injury or damage has been sustained by the party or parties complaining, or by other parties aggrieved in consequence of any such violation, it shall be the duty of the commission to forthwith cause a copy of its report in respect thereto to be delivered to such common carrier, together with a notice to said common carrier to cease and desist from such violation, or to make reparation for the injury so found to have been done, or both, within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission; and if, within the time specified, it shall be made to appear to the commission that such common carrier has ceased from such violation of law, and has made reparation for the injury found to have been done, in compliance with the report and notice of the commission, or to the satisfaction of the party complaining, a statement to that effect shall be entered of record by the commission, and the said common carrier shall thereupon be relieved from further liability or penalty for such particular violation of law.

SEC. 16. That whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the commission in this act named, it shall be the duty of the commission, and lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to apply, in a summary way, by petition, to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the common carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be; and the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter, on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable; and such notice may be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents, or servants, in such manner as the court shall direct; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity and without the formal pleadings and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition; and on such hearing the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated; and if it be made to appear to such court, on such hearing or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission, and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment, or any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, against such common carrier, and if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to pay such sum of money not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of $500 for every day after a day to be named in the order that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise; and such moneys shall be payable as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining, or into court to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the Treasury; and payment thereof may, without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution, in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal; but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon; and such court may, in every such matter, order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute the same; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

SEC. 17. That the commission may conduct its proceedings in such manner as will best conduce to the proper dispatch of business and to the ends of justice. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest. Said commission may, from time to time, make or amend such general rules or orders as may be requisite for the order and regulation of proceedings before it, including forms of notices and the service thereof, which shall conform, as nearly as may be, to those in use in the courts of the United States. Any party may appear before said commission and be heard, in person or by attorney. Every vote and official act of the commission shall be entered of record, and its proceedings shall be public upon the request of either party interested. Said commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. Either of the members of the commission may administer oaths and affirmations.

SEC. 18. That each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, payable in the same manner as the salaries of judges of the courts of the United States. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $3,500, payable in like manner. The commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such other employés as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The commission shall be furnished by the Secretary of the Interior with suitable offices and all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States. All of the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners, or by their employés under their orders, in making any investigation in any other places than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid, on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission and the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 19. That the principal office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, where its general sessions shall be held; but whenever the convenience of the public or of the parties may be promoted or delay or expense prevented thereby, the commission may hold special sessions in any part of the United States. It may, by one or more of the commissioners, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its duties, in any part of the United States, into any matter or question of fact pertaining to the business of any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 20. That the commission is hereby authorized to require annual reports from all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act, to fix the time and prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such carriers specific answers to all questions upon which the commission may need information. Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued, the amounts paid therefor, and the manner of payment for the same; the dividends paid, the surplus fund, if any, and the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts, and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the carrier's property, franchises, and equipment; the number of employés, and the salary paid each class; the amounts expended for improvements each year, how expended, and the character of such improvements; the earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss; and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the carrier each year, including an annual balance-sheet. Such reports shall also contain such information in relation to rates or regulations, concerning fares or freights, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts with other common carriers, as the commission may require; and the said commission may, within its discretion, for the purpose of enabling it the better to carry out the purposes of this act, prescribe (if in the opinion of the commission it is practicable to prescribe such uniformity and methods of keeping accounts) a period of time within which all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act shall have, as near as may be, a uniform system of accounts, and the manner in which such accounts shall be kept.

SEC. 21. That the commission shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, make a report to the Secretary of the Interior, which shall be by him transmitted to Congress, and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports issued from the Interior Department. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

SEC. 22. That nothing in this act shall apply to the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion; nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employés, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employés; and nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies: Provided, That no pending litigation shall in any way be affected by this act.

SEC. 23. That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for the use and purposes of this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1888, and the intervening time anterior thereto.

SEC. 24. That the provisions of sections 11 and 18 of this act, relating to the appointment and organization of the commission herein provided for, shall take effect immediately, and the remaining provisions of this act shall take effect sixty days after its passage.

S. M. CULLOM,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN H. REAGAN,
CHARLES F. CRISP,
A. J. WEAVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the report of the committee of conference on the interstate commerce bill now lies on the table, and I understand according to the practice of the Senate it is subject to be called up at any time. It is unquestionably the most important subject that has been before this session of Congress, and in its bearings upon commerce hereafter is entitled, I think, to very deliberate and free discussion. I have not had the opportunity of examining the report, but I understand that several of the positions that were taken by the Senate, after protracted debate, have been abandoned by the report of the committee of conference, and I think there ought to be some definite understanding now as to the time when this report is to be called up for consideration. And if I am authorized, or can obtain the floor for that purpose now, I wish to submit a motion that the consideration of this report be postponed until the second Monday in January next, which will be a few days after the ordinary reassembling of Congress for the customary holiday recess.

Mr. CULLOM. I gave notice that I would not call up the report during this week, and not until Monday or Tuesday of next week. In the mean time it will be printed, so that every Senator will have an opportunity to see what it is. If, when the time comes for calling it up, it is the judgment of the Senate that it can not be considered before the holidays, or only in part, so far as I am concerned I shall not be disposed to undertake to crowd the measure through the Senate before giving the Senate ample time for proper consideration. But it seems to me that the Senator's motion could be made on Tuesday of next week, when I shall hope to call the report up, if it shall be determined in the mean time to call it up on that day. It may be that the circumstances of the Senate will be such that I shall determine not to call it up until after the holidays, but I prefer now to give notice to the Senate that on Tuesday next at 2 o'clock I will call it up for consideration. When that time comes, if the Senator insists or thinks it ought to be postponed he can make his motion at that time. I think that would be the better course.

Mr. INGALLS. I presume that we all know now as well as we shall on Tuesday next that this bill and the report of the committee of conference will not be finally acted upon before the 1st of January.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know whether that is so or not. Nobody knows.

Mr. INGALLS. My impression is that we do know that the questions nvolved are of such magnitude and importance that the action of the committee of conference, if I am correctly informed, has been so in opposition to the expressed determination of the Senate upon some very important points involved in this subject, that with the waning numbers that are liable to occur from this time onward there is no human likelihood or probability that this matter will be considered before the 1st day of January.

The Senator from Illinois says it is not certain that we shall have a holiday recess. Of course it is not, but it is more than probable; and it is certain that, whether there is one or not, the members of this body will in large numbers depart during that festal season. On Tuesday next it is more than likely that I shall be absent myself. I know others intend to be; and therefore I say it is wise and just and proper, and in accordance with justice, that this great measure should not be left hanging up in the atmosphere in this way; that we should all be enabled to see definitely that nothing will be done about it until after there has been time for debate and consideration, which will not occur before the first day of January.

I wish, therefore, the Senator from Illinois—and I can not conceive his reason to be contrary—would consent, for the convenience of us all, for the advantage of debate which will occur in the public prints and elsewhere that we may be enlightened and illuminated, to allow this thing to pass over, as I think the concurrence of a majority of his associates would suggest.

Mr. CULLOM. One word further, Mr. President. As I said a while ago, this subject has been before Congress now for a great many years, and session after session we have failed to pass any law relative to the question until the country has got to believe that we do not intend to pass any law on the subject. This session, as the Senator knows, is a short one. It is only necessary to defeat a measure to postpone its consideration a few times and the session is gone by. I am perfectly willing to consent to any understanding or agreement that will not jeopardize the passage of the bill. After a decision of the Supreme Court has been made throwing upon us the onus of regulating interstate commerce, if we pretend to be in favor of any regulation we cannot afford to allow this session to go by without passing some proper bill, and I say simply that I desire to call the bill up on next Tuesday for consideration. I do not expect that we are going to pass it in a day; but unless we begin its consideration nobody can tell whether we shall ever pass it or not. If the bill is allowed to come up on next Tuesday, let Senators who desire to talk upon it talk, and if we have a recess that comes in before the proper consideration of the bill is disposed of we can take the recess and the bill will go over until after the holidays have passed by. But unless we do press the bill forward with a view to getting it through this branch of Congress and allowing the other branch to have an opportunity to consider it as well—and if we disagree to it we have got to have another conference and perhaps a further one—the result will be, if we do not go on with it as rapidly as possible, that we shall not reach a conclusion at all by which we shall get any legislation.

So I trust any motion which is made now to set the report down for the second Monday or whatever day the Senator names in January will be voted upon with the understanding that I shall call it up on next Tuesday, and if the Senate is prepared to go on and consider it we can do so at that time.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not postpone the consideration of this bill until after the holidays. The country certainly demands the passage of this bill or something akin to it, and it will not be passed if we postpone it until after the holidays, when there will be not over two months of practical working time.

The bill is certainly one of the most important that could be presented to Congress and one of the most necessary to be passed, and passed without delay. I am not prepared to say that I approve the provisions of the conference report, and some time is needed to consider it, but certainly not longer than the Senator from Illinois proposes before a commencement of the consideration of this bill shall be had. I hope, therefore, that the Senator from Illinois will insist on taking up this bill and commencing the consideration of it at the earliest possible day.

Mr. SABIN. Mr. President, I am unqualifiedly in favor of pressing this bill or some other bill, having in view the objects which it is intended to cover by the measure now before the Senate. It may be that on consideration and examination I shall be unqualifiedly in favor of this bill as agreed upon by the conference committee. But I do not believe that the interests of this great country will suffer by a ten days' postponement of this bill as much as they will suffer by a hasty and ill-advised consideration of it.

I can not see why the chairman of the committee should insist upon calling the bill up on next Tuesday, when certainly it is obvious to me, as it must be to every member of the Senate, that it is going to elicit a very warm and protracted discussion, and for myself I wish very much to be present when that discussion commences, and to be here during its continuance.

If there is any prospect of the bill being called up on Tuesday next, I desire and propose to be here, but it would be a matter of very great inconvenience to myself, and I think it would be to many other members of the Senate. I do not believe that the bill will be hastened or that the objects for which it is intended will be served by pressing the consideration of it at this time. I certainly wish that the motion of the Senator from Kansas may be adopted at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Kansas as making any motion, but as making a suggestion. Does the Senator make a motion?

Mr. INGALLS. I submitted to the Chair the parliamentary question whether in the present state of the bill I could make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the Senate may proceed now to consider the bill. It is on the Calendar, having been simply laid on the table, and is open to a motion.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the action of the Senate to be to lay the bill on the table by motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is laid on the table, but a motion to proceed to its present consideration the Chair thinks is in order at this time, it being between 1 and 2 o'clock.

Mr. INGALLS. I think on deliberation I will let my motion lie over until Tuesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order.

Mr. HOAR. Before this matter passes——

Mr. PLUMB. I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has the floor on the resolution offered this morning.

Mr. HOAR. I ask what number of copies is it proposed to print?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Five thousand extra copies; and that resolution has gone to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Henry Martin.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 9.) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CALDWELL, Mr. EDEN, and Mr. COOPER the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 7648) for the relief of the estate of the late John How, Indian agent, and his sureties.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not surprised that the Chair in the lapse of time from the moment I yielded the floor to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] should have forgotten that I was entitled to be recognized; nor do I desire at this time to say very much about the matter that has been discussed so widely by my colleague and the Senator from Nebraska. The resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, I believe, is the business before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PLUMB. I had something to do with the bill that was finally passed. The House of Representatives had failed to insert in it any appropriation for the continuation of the Missouri River improvement. I was in favor of discontinuing the Missouri River Commission and so voted, but the Committee on Commerce having restored the provision, I sought to have it so amended that there might be an appropriation of money made for the improvement of the river at Fort Leavenworth, where the Government had large interests, and also where there are large private interests, as well as at Kansas City or elsewhere on that stream. I made a suggestion to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in fact I offered an amendment, I think, carrying out my idea, which was presented to the Committee on Commerce. The committee did not report the amendment exactly as I sent it down, but made a proposition which I thought would not accomplish the purpose, and so a modification was agreed upon here. Subsequently, on motion of my colleague [Mr. INGALLS], Atchison was added, and on motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] certain towns in Nebraska were added also, and so a large number of places were put upon the bill as the places for which the money appropriated for the Missouri River should be spent.

I thought and still think that the amendment as agreed upon gave to the Secretary of War the authority to determine as to how the money should be spent, and that he was only required to consult with the Missouri River Commission in regard to the plan. He took a different view of the law. I wrote him on the subject last fall, and a few days ago I went to see him about it. He stated to me the embarrassment which he was under in the construction to be put upon the law, and, while finally apparently yielding to the view which I took of the provision, said that he indorsed what the Missouri River Commission recommended, which, of course, put him in the attitude of doing that which I thought he ought to do, and that was assuming the responsibility for expending the money. But he said to me: "Here, as I have $375,000 to spend, and six or seven or eight places are named on the river at which the money shall be spent, the Missouri River Commission said to me, what I on investigation believed to be true, that if I spent some of the money at each one of these places the money so spent would be thrown away and no useful purpose would be accomplished, no improvement would be completed or so nearly completed as that it would stand the spring floods, which would come down, as in other seasons, and take away imperfectly constructed works, which would result in a useless expenditure of a portion of the money."

He said the commission had stated to him that by spending $225,000 at Kansas City that improvement would be made permanent and final; and that by spending $75,000 at Saint Joseph a similar result would be obtained there; and that he had adopted that plan for the expenditure of the money and still adhered to its propriety. As I understand, there are $75,000 of the money yet unallotted, and which can be expended at Leavenworth or any other place that the Secretary of War may determine.

There is great force in what the Secretary says about the impropriety and impolicy of spending money where no good result will be accomplished; and if it be true, as he says, that to spend the money at each one of the places named in the bill would result simply in throwing money uselessly into the river, then I think he is justified in spending it in the way decided on, though there seems to be an express condition that he shall expend some of it at each one of these places.

I do not know whether that is correct or not. I myself would take some exception to the location of at least a portion of the money. I think myself that some better distribution of it could have been made. But the Secretary has directed the expenditure of the money upon what he believed to be evidence on the part of those spending it that the best results would be obtained for the expenditure. I have no doubt that if he has made a mistake, as I rather think he has, he has at all events made it in the right direction; that is to say, in the direction of what he believes to be a saving of the public money.

My own view, however, about the improvement of the Missouri River was that we ought to quit spending money on it at large, casting a little in here and a little there to be washed out by the ensuing flood; and, instead of that, limit ourselves to the protection of private property at important places like Kansas City, Leavenworth, Saint Joseph, Atchison, and so on, until such time as Congress should, if it ever shall, appropriate money enough to carry on a continuous improvement of the river designed seriously to make it suitable for navigation. It was with a view to stop this scattering expenditure that I moved that a portion of the money should be spent at Leavenworth, practically for the protection of the public property there and for the protection of private interests which are threatened by the mutations of the river.

Now, if it be true that to take this pitiable sum of $375,000 and distribute it at half a dozen different points along the river would result neither in the preservation of public property or of private property, nor in the improvement of the navigation of the river, if it would be a simply useless expenditure of money, as he says he thinks it would be, he is justified in what he has done. I can not myself agree that he has made the best distribution of the money he did distribute. I think he might have spent money which it is his proposition to spend at Saint Joseph and at another place with a great deal better result to the public interests, and I think he might have taken the other $75,000 and put it at Atchison, Leavenworth, or some other of the points named, usefully; but still, on the theory on which he operated, undoubtedly he was justified.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, since making the remark which I did in regard to the river and harbor bill of two years ago and the discussions about it, I have sent for the RECORD of the session when the bill alluded to by the Senator from Nebraska was before the Senate, and I ask his attention for a moment.

The bill to which the Senator from Nebraska referred was not a bill making specific appropriations for rivers and harbors in detail. My remarks were in reference to such a bill, although I mistook the time; it was on a former occasion when the House bill making appropriations in detail, the usual river and harbor bill, failed to reach the Senate in time for consideration.

At the session two years ago the House sent us a river and harbor bill appropriating $5,000,000 in gross to be applied according to the provisions of the previous bill. The Senate Committee on Commerce increased that amount to $10,000,000, and in the last hours of the session the bill was considered and the amendments offered by the Senator from Nebraska were offered to that bill. I had mistaken the bill, and was speaking myself of a bill which had come in here making specific appropriations. Therefore I desire to state, with great respect, that the Senator from Nebraska, as I find by the RECORD, offered his amendments to the five million bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The Chair will receive it.

ARTHUR KILL BRIDGE.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to furnish the Senate with a copy of the report of a board of engineers, United States Army, and accompanying documents, made by said board on the location and construction of the proposed bridge over the Arthur Kill between New Jersey and Staten Island.

As I want to look at the papers, I request immediate consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ACCIDENT ON LIBRARY SITE.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee for providing additional accommodations for the Library be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the circumstances under which the accident occurred in removing the buildings on the lands condemned for the use of the Library, by which it is reported several persons have lost their lives and others been seriously injured, and what, if any, provision should be made by Congress for the families of such deceased and injured persons.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the occasion for the introduction of the resolution? Will the Senator from Delaware explain?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand that, a while ago, in removing some houses from land taken for the public library building the walls fell, and it is stated that several persons have lost their lives and that others have been seriously injured. The object of the resolution is to ascertain if any provision should be made by Congress for the families of such deceased and injured persons.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator has no definite information about the facts yet?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am advised that the accident has occurred, and I offer the resolution for inquiry.

Mr. INGALLS. It had better lie on the table until we ascertain the facts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the resolution be read again, so that we may know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution will go over under the rules and be printed.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I have just been informed that no lives were lost, and that this work was done under contract with parties to take down the buildings and remove them.

Mr. VOORHEES. As the Senator from Vermont has observed, I understand the work of taking down these walls is let by contract, and in doing so a wall was left standing without any support on either side, which I happened to observe a day or two ago with a good deal of apprehension, which I expressed at the time. It has fallen, and I have been out into the grounds to ascertain the extent of the injury. I heard that three persons had been taken out badly injured; and whether or not there are others under the ruins who have been killed I think is a matter of uncertainty at this time. I think that is about the state of the case.

TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT REPEAL.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to be permitted to make a statement to the Senate.

I had proposed to ask the Senate to take up in the morning hour, immediately after the routine business, the bill in regard to the tenure-of-office act; but I learned that it was convenient to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] not to have that measure taken up at this time, because he desired to make an investigation which he had not quite completed. Accordingly, I did not interpose in the debate that was going on by unanimous consent. Now the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, and I desire to ask that that measure may go over until to-morrow with the same rights that it has to-day; that is, as the unfinished business, with the understanding that I do not expect to interfere with the rights of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of civil officers, and the Senator from Massachusetts asks that it may go over informally until to-morrow, holding its place. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

Mr. PLATT. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the first special order, which is the regular order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT, January 29, 1886.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. There is some morning business that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] wish to present. I yield for that.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAHONE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 910) for the enlargement, improvement, and completion of the public buildings now being erected at Harrisonburg, Va., to report it back adversely and to ask that it be indefinitely postponed, a bill having already passed the Senate covering the same subject.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MAHONE. I am also directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1573) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Reading, Pa., to ask the same disposition for the same reason.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the following bills, reported them adversely and moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 563) authorizing the partition of certain land in Louisville, Ky., belonging jointly to John Echols and the Government of the United States;

A bill (S. 1374) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Rochester, N. Y.;

A bill (S. 1535) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of La Fayette, Ind.;

A bill (S. 2664) appropriating money for the completion of the public building at Greensborough, N. C.;

A bill (S. 1427) to provide for the erection of a public building in Springfield, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 1736) to provide for an addition to the United States building at Jackson, Miss.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 44) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms which have been occupied by the United States courts to the city of Jackson, Miss., reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish the Senator would allow the joint resolution in reference to the public building at Jackson to go on the Calendar. I wish to examine the matter.

Mr. MAHONE. I believe I made a mistake about that. What is it?

The Chief Clerk read the title of the joint resolution (S. R. 44).

Mr. MAHONE. I asked the indefinite postponement because I have a joint resolution to report favorably covering the same subject.

Mr. GEORGE. Let it go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Mississippi it will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MAHONE. There will be no occasion for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi still make the request?

Mr. GEORGE. No; if there is another joint resolution to be reported on the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 51) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms which have been occupied by the United States courts to the city of Jackson, Miss., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2303) for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2901) to provide for the erection of a public building at Eastport, Me., reported it without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the bill reported to provide for the erection of a public building at Eastport, Me.

Mr. MAHONE. I reported it with an amendment to strike out the preamble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair handed the Senator from Virginia a bill to take its place.

Mr. MAHONE. Then I withdraw that report for the present. I see I sent up the wrong bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Virginia to please withhold that report for to-day. There are some facts I want to submit in respect to that matter.

Mr. MAHONE. All right; I withdraw the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report is withdrawn.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. DAWES to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing for an appropriation for the erection and completion of a post-office building at New Bedford, Mass., reported it favorably, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Mr. MAHONE. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds instruct me to report back the bill (S. 263) providing for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mass., returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, and to move that the Senate disagree to the amendment and ask for the appointment of a committee of conference on that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the presiding officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MAHONE, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. CAMDEN were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT SCOTT, KANS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to take from the table the bill providing for the erection of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans., and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the table the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans., returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, and have it referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. That order will be made if there be no objection.

PAPERS IN STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up Order of Busines No. 1825 on the Calendar and pass it at once. I will state to the Senate the nature of it.

During the examination before the mixed commission with Mexico a foreign subject, an Englishman resident in Mexico, presented his papers and claim. The commission of course rejected it as coming from a foreigner and not within the comprehension of the treaty. The papers were lodged in the State Department, and it is necessary that a joint resolution should authorize the return of them to the executrix of this foreign subject. The resolution passed the House, and was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations here toward the end of the last session. It is of importance to private interests that these papers should be restored to their owners, and I ask that that resolution may now be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 118) relative to certain papers in the State Department by error.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It is a direction to the Secretary of State to deliver to the person justly entitled to the possession thereof the papers in the claim of the late John Potts, a British subject residing in Mexico, presented to the United States and Mexican Claims Commission through the agency of a Mr. MacManus, also a resident of Mexico, said papers containing certain original documents issued by the Mexican Government on the collectors of customs at sundry ports for the payment of moneys to John Potts, and which moneys he had loaned to the Mexican Government, the papers having been deposited in the State Department by error.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 7648) for the relief of the estate of the late John How, Indian agent, and his sureties, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Senate to proceed with the regular order.

Mr. BECK. The bill (S. 2578) being a bill to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States, was made a special order for last Monday, and I suppose it is in order now. I know of nothing to prevent its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has just decided by a vote to proceed to the consideration of a prior special order, the resolution relative to executive sessions.

Mr. BECK. I desire to give a notice—as the Senate is thin now—so that gentlemen who may desire to take part in discussing this bill may be here, that I will call it up to-morrow at 2 o'clock and ask the Senate to consider it or make some disposition of it. I do not want to take it up when the Senate is thin; I do not want to take advantage of anybody; but I do not wish the bill to lose its place. I simply want some day to be fixed when we can do something with it.

Mr. HOAR. I am the author of one of the proposed bills on that matter, and I wish to say that I think the Senate is quite full to-day. Gentlemen have gone out for a few moments at this time, as they usually do, but almost all the Senators are here, and I understand that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] does not expect to debate, but only to have a vote on his resolution. The Senate by unanimous consent has just set a matter which is under my charge, the bill to repeal the tenure-of-office law, for to-morrow at 2 o'clock, and I hope the Senator from Kentucky will not antagonize that when he has to-day. Why not have his bill come up now?

Mr. BECK. I desire to have it up now.

Mr. HOAR. I hope that will be done after the vote on the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is before the Senate and the question is on agreeing to the resolution which has been read.

Mr. PLATT. There is an amendment pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "considered" it is proposed to insert "and acted upon," and at the end of the resolution to add "and so much of section 2, Rule XXXVI, and section 2, Rule XXXVIII, of the standing rules of the Senate as conflicts with or is inconsistent with the above is to the extent of such inconsistency rescinded."

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That executive nominations shall hereafter be considered and acted upon in open session, except when otherwise ordered by vote of the Senate, and so much of section 2, Rule XXXVI, and section 2, Rule XXXVIII, of the standing rules of the Senate as conflicts with or is inconsistent with the above is to the extent of such inconsistency rescinded.

Mr. PLATT. That amendment is only necessary for formal purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I think there is also pending another amendment, though I am not sure, submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont submitted an amendment which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to strike out the words "executive nominations," and insert in lieu thereof the words "reciprocity treaties, so called."

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment which I have proposed will enable the Senate to consider reciprocity treaties in open session. They certainly ought to be considered in an open session as much as a tariff or a tax bill.

I trust that the amendment will be adopted. I am opposed to going any further in opening the doors of the Senate as to executive matters, but this at least I hope will be adopted.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, there is an old saying about the Greeks bearing gifts. Now, whatever might be my views upon this particular question, as to whether the Senate should consider reciprocity treaties or purely commercial treaties in open session, I hope the amendment will not be adopted at this time, for it comes from an opponent of the proposition which was originally submitted by my resolution, and the effect of the amendment is to kill my resolution, substituting for it the proposition to discuss commercial or reciprocity treaties in open session. I do not think that is a fair way of disposing of the question raised by my resolution.

If this were an independent question I am by no means sure that I should not be in favor of the proposition contained in this amendment. I think I should vote for it as an independent proposition; but when it is brought here, I will not say for the purpose, but with the effect, if adopted, of destroying the proposition which I ask the Senate to act upon, I must vote against it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, is it in order to move to lay the whole subject on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. HOAR. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. PLATT. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the resolution with the pending amendments lie on the table. On that motion the Senator from Connecticut asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. HALE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HALE] is absent paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. COKE] is detained from the Senate by sickness, and is paired generally with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. PLATT. I think from what I know of the views of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Nebraska would do no violence to his pair if he were to vote.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is necessarily absent, and is paired on political questions with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced the absence of his colleague [Mr. HALE], and that he was paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. The Senator from Kentucky has voted but it will make no difference, from the fact that my colleague would vote the same way if he were here.

Mr. BECK. I was not aware of his absence.

Mr. RANSOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have just been advised by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] of my pair with his colleague [Mr. LOGAN], and I withdraw my vote. I should vote "yea" to lay on the table if at liberty, and the Senator from Illinois if present would vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was paired a day or two ago with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. I do not see him here, and I do not know whether he considers the pair still in force or not. I am not aware how the Senator from Colorado would vote on this question if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Allison,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Beck,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Spooner,

So the motion to lay the resolution with the pending amendments on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg leave of the Senate to say that I voted "nay" because I preferred a direct vote on the main question. I am against the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. I desire now to call up the bill (S. 2578).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky calls up the next special order, which is the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grants of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. I rose to address the Chair to record my vote. Has the result been announced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The result has been announced.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that if I had been present I should have recorded my vote in favor of laying the resolution for open sessions on the table.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the bill be read at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney at law, or payment for services of any kind, in opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party or in which its interests may be concerned; or from or against any railroad company which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States, when measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress; or from or against any bank or corporation, or other officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any pecuniary aid from the United States; or from or against any corporation or company, its officer or agent, engaged in the business of interstate commerce by land or water, or in the business of any interstate transportation, or in the transportation of United States mails; or from or against any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country, any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied; or from or against any manufacturer of any article on which an excise tax is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied, by any act of Congress.

SEC. 2. That any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. BECK. I desire to have the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLATT. May the amendment be reported once more? I do not think it is fully understood.

Mr. BECK. Before the vote is taken I desire to say a word.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the amendment be once more reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I am of course obliged to assume that the distinguished Committee on the Judiciary regard this proposition of theirs as wise legislation. It would not be proper for me to assume anything else. When I called up the original bill for consideration the question of reference to the Judiciary Committee was considered, and the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote decided against it. When the question was taken on the final passage of the bill, the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote decided to pass it by 37 yeas to 11 nays, and it was passed. The original bill reads thus:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

When the bill was again before the Senate on a motion to reconsider the vote by which it passed, it was denounced by the leading members of the Committee on the Judiciary as an infringement on the right of the attorneys in this and the other House of Congress. They insisted that it should be referred to them for examination and consideration. They pledged themselves by their action if not by their language to submit a proposition such as they thought Congress ought to pass. The result of their labors is the substitute just read. By it they have not only indorsed all that was contained in my original proposition, but they have added as an extension of it prohibitions against members of either House, which seem to me so absolutely unjust, and absurd that I am curious to know the ground upon which the members of the Judiciary Committee desire to pass their substitute. For example, they insist that no member of Congress shall appear as attorney or agent for "any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country, any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied; or for or against any manufacturer of any article on which an excise tax is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied, by any act of Congress."

That is the solemn proposition submitted by the Judiciary Committee as a wise thing for this Congress to do.

Mr. GEORGE. By a majority of the committee.

Mr. BECK. A majority is the committee. It is no answer to say that they are, by their action, endeavoring to make a bill submitted for their consideration absurd by carrying out such legislation to what they may call its legitimate consequences. If the bill as originally presented and submitted to them was a bill that ought not to pass, then it was their duty as one of the committees of this body to say so and to report against it; they had no right to make it more objectionable, by a substitute, and pretend to desire the passage of the more objectionable proposition. Therefore, I am right in assuming that the bill which they have now presented as a substitute for the bill which I introduce meets the concurrence of the members of the committee, and that they, in the face of the responsibility resting upon them as members of the Judiciary Committee, tell the Senate that in the interest of the American people the substitute they present ought to pass. I shall endeavor to maintain that the bill they present is a burlesque on legislation, and I can not help believing that it is so intended by the chairman and the leading members of the Judiciary Committee. If they desire to contradict my assumption of their purpose, I wish to give them an opportunity; and if that is their purpose, then I insist before the Senate that the committee has come short of its duty to this body in substituting a bill which they intend to be a burlesque, in view of the efforts they made to have the vote of the Senate reconsidered, and this bill referred to them for careful consideration.

It was, in my judgment, their duty, if the bill which I presented and which the Senate had passed was a bad one, to say so and recommend its rejection, or to make it better, if it needed amendment. Instead of that, they have presented a confessedly ridiculous proposition, and carried the prohibitions to a point where nobody can vote for their measure. I venture to assert that even the members of the committee will oppose the measure they submit (and for that reason I called for the yeas and nays), unless they vote for it as a means of killing the original bill. I deny the justice and fairness of that mode of proceeding in view of the debates and proceedings had at the last session.

When the bill was originally presented, after it had been read in the Senate, when every gentleman understood it (for there can be no pretenses as to any ambiguity or doubt about what the original bill meant), the Senate, by a vote of 24 to 21, declined to refer it to its enemies on the Judiciary Committee, and upon the passage of the bill the following vote was cast—yeas 37, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Allison,	Cullom,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Beck,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Blair,	Frye,	Mahone,	Vest,
Brown,	George,	Maxey,	Whitthorne,
Butler,	Hale,	Miller,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chace,	Harris,	Morrill,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Payne,
Coke,	Hawley,	Plumb,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,

NAYS—11.

Bowen,	Edmunds,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sewell,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Riddleberger,	Teller.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

A motion to reconsider that vote followed, and among other things, without taking time now to redebate the question which I debated fully at that time, I desire to call attention to the objections made by some of the leading members of the Judiciary Committee to the bill I presented. On the 23d of June, as shown by the RECORD of last session, page 6044, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] said:

Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I voted for this bill without examining it. Since the motion to reconsider it has been made I have examined it and satisfied myself that it is hasty, inconsiderate, and mischievous legislation. I thoroughly indorse all that was so well said by my friend, the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. I shall vote to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and if that motion is carried I shall vote against the passage of the bill.

That was fair and manly opposition. Yet that distinguished Senator as a member of the Judiciary Committee unites with his colleagues now and says to the Senate that in his opinion as a committeeman the substitute which has just been twice read ought to pass, in which fines and other penalties are not only imposed on members of Congress for acting as attorneys for land grant and subsidized railroads, but it goes to the absurd extent of preventing every man in either House from being attorney or agent for any man who may manufacture any article on which there is a tariff or excise tax; indeed it substantially prohibits members of Congress from practicing law at all.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. I desire to say that I stated my position correctly in the remarks which I made in favor of a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed. I am opposed to all legislation, such as is sought by the bill introduced by the Senator from Kentucky, and I shall vote in favor of substituting the amendment of the Judiciary Committee, if there is to be any legislation on the subject, but when the final vote comes upon the bill as proposed to be amended by the Judiciary Committee, I shall vote against its passage. That is my position. I am opposed to any legislation on the subject. However, I joined in the report of the Judiciary Committee as an amendment, and I shall vote for that amendment in place of the original bill, but on the passage of the bill as amended by the report of the Judiciary Committee, I shall vote against it.

Mr. BECK. That verifies what I said so far as one member of the Judiciary Committee is concerned, that the amendment reported is not offered in good faith, and I insist that it is not fair in a committee occupying the high position the Judiciary Committee does to present any bill or substitute for a bill to the Senate which they oppose merely to avoid the responsibility of a direct vote on the bill they seek to kill.

The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] was equally emphatic in his declarations against and denunciations of the original bill and of all the principles involved in it. I have his speech before me, in which he has said in substance that he regarded the effort to pass such a bill as I had offered and the Senate had approved as a stigma upon the great profession to which he belongs, and of which he is an honorable and an honored member.

Mr. PUGH. I can not feel that it is the purpose of the Senator from Kentucky to say that in voting for the report of the Judiciary Committee I acted or intended to act in bad faith.

Mr. BECK. I do not know what other gentlemen consider bad faith; but I give my opinion as to a report made and submitted to the Senate for its passage to which the gentlemen who submit the report are themselves opposed.

Mr. PUGH. In the utmost sincerity and without any qualification, I say that if there is to be any legislation it ought to be as comprehensive as this bill is intended to be made by the amendment of the Judiciary Committee, and I should really desire that amendment to become the law, because it is comprehensive enough to embrace every class, and to reach every evil, if there be an evil, intended to be corrected by the original bill. If there is to be legislation I shall most sincerely vote for the amendment of the Judiciary Committee in preference to the original bill; but not believing that it is wise or proper to legislate at all on the subject in the way proposed to be done by the original bill or the amendment, I shall vote against the whole measure when the yeas and nays are called on its final passage.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Alabama has stated his reasons and his opinions; I have stated my opinion of such a report with such purposes, and the country can decide who is right and who is wrong.

I repeat that the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] was equally emphatic in his denunciation of the original bill; and without reading his speech I assert that he almost exhausted the English language in his denunciation of what he considered as an effort to cripple or curtail the rights of the members of the great profession of which, as I said, he is an honorable and an honored member. Yet he too unites in a report to the Senate and lays before this body a proposition which by his indorsement he tells Senators they ought to pass—a proposition not only going far beyond anything which was suggested in my bill, but which in fact proposes to prevent every member of the bar in either House from taking a fee to attend to any business for any man engaged in the manufacture of any article that is subject to tariff or internal-revenue taxation, or that may be subject to taxation. In other words, he submits a proposition which absolutely deprives every Senator and Representative who is a member of the bar from practicing his profession at all. I should like him to tell the Senate whether he believes that is good legislation or not. I do not believe he thinks so. I believe that he, too, as the Senator from Alabama has said, reported this substitute not intending to support it so as to make it the law of the land, but to use it as a method of killing a bill which the committee had not the courage to vote down directly and assert before the country that they were opposed to. That is my opinion for what it is worth.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], the chairman of the committee, also made a speech, which I have in the RECORD before me, in which he, too, denounced the bill as presented by me, and as it passed the Senate, and yet he offers this substitute to the Senate for its adoption. My word for it, he, too, will vote against his own bantling after it has accomplished the purpose for which it was intended, which is to defeat a measure they did not dare to vote down directly.

All I ask is that the Judiciary Committee will not trifle with us and seek to defeat the original bill by indirection.

Let the question come on the yeas and nays directly upon the bill the Senate has once passed, and let the thirty-seven gentlemen who (against the eleven nays) voted for its passage tell the country why they have changed their opinions now, if any of them have so changed. I protest against doing by indirection what the committee would not venture to do directly. It is unfair opposition to substitute a bill for which nobody can vote, and thus relieve themselves from the responsibility of facing the fair, direct issue made in the original bill, which never would have been sent to the committee except on the most solemn assurances that it would receive fair treatment and careful consideration.

At the last session I avowed that the reason why I desired the bill to pass was because criminations and recriminations had been indulged in in this Chamber and elsewhere, year after year, on account of the immense power and influence of the great land grant and subsidized railroad corporations. They stand in as different relation to Congressional legislation from the business of an ordinary importer of goods or an ordinary manufacturer of tobacco or producer of whisky or a national bank that has to pay taxes, as it is possible to imagine. They hold empires of our land, in regard to the title and taxation of which we have to deal every session. We have forfeited fifty million acres already, and there are bills pending now for the forfeiture of perhaps fifty million acres more. I deny that any attorney of these roads has a right to sit here with the money of those corporations in his pocket, employed, no matter upon what pretense, and vote upon these great questions. Those roads have by their contracts to lay aside a sinking fund for the purpose of securing us for the money that we have advanced for them. Important measures are pending now, and made special orders, I believe, at this session of Congress for their consideration as to whether we shall extend their privileges and give them time for thirty, forty, sixty, perhaps seventy years longer, or whether we shall hold them to their original contracts; and I insist that no attorney of theirs has a right in either House of Congress to vote upon those questions.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. My understanding is that an attorney at law is an officer of the court in the State where he is admitted. He is also an officer of a United States court if he has been admitted to practice in a United States court. His qualifications to practice law, as I understand, are prescribed by the law of the State and the rules of the courts, in so far as he is an officer of a State court, and by the law and the rules of practice of the United States courts, in so far as he is an officer of a United States court.

What I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky is, under what provision of the Constitution of the United States, under what grant of power, direct or inferential, does Congress get the authority to add to or take from the qualifications of an attorney of a State court to practice law in a State court? That is the first question.

Mr. BECK. Let me answer that one. If the Senator from Oregon will ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, or the distinguished Senator from New York, or the distinguished Senator from Alabama (and the Judiciary Committee is the high authority upon legal questions) where they get authority to prevent any man from practicing law or from acting as the agent of any person, firm, officer, or agent who is engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale of any article whatever on the importation of which any customs duties are now levied, or may at any time hereafter be levied, or for or against any manufacturer of any article on which an excise tax is now levied, or may at any time hereafter be levied, by Congress, perhaps he will get a satisfactory answer from them.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BECK. In one moment. I decline to be interrupted now until I am through with my answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BECK. I have said that any man who would seriously present a bill to prevent any lawyer from doing any of those things would be committing an indecent, improper, and needless outrage upon the profession. I do not propose to do that; but I will tell the Senator where, in my opinion, we get the authority to say that no man shall sit in either House of Congress with the money of a corporation in his pocket when he is voting upon questions involving millions of acres of land or $60,000,000 or $100,000,000 which the United States have loaned to those companies, and the question is how we shall best guard the interest of the people. We have the right to do whatever sound public policy requires; and when any man is acting as the agent of the United States, either as the representative of a State or the people of any district in a State, in dealing with questions involving millions of money and millions of acres of land which those railroads have obtained, some of which at least we say they are holding wrongfully, and we are about to test their right by legislative action, I insist that it is against public policy to allow the agent of the railroads or the attorney of the defendant to have a vote in determining great public questions like these, and that all State constitutions and all State authorities recognize the fact that when a man takes a place as a judge on the bench to do impartial justice between suitors or between the people and corporations he shall cease to be an attorney. He can no longer hold on to the money of his former clients as their lawyer and pretend to be an impartial judge. If he does, he can be impeached under any constitution and laws of any State. It is conduct like that which I propose to prevent—no more, no less. Our powers and duties are as sacred and ought to be as carefully guarded as if we were on the bench.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me now to interrupt him?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not intend that the Senator from Kentucky shall get away from the question by a speech which might seem to some demagogical in its nature. I asked the Senator from Kentucky as a lawyer a plain constitutional question, and that is, where the author of the bill which was originally introduced into this body obtained his power (because he must get the power from the Constitution of the United States either by direct grant or by inference) to prescribe by act of Congress the qualifications of an attorney at law in a State court? The Senator from Kentucky, instead of answering the question, instead of attempting to answer the question, refers me to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this body, and suggests that I ask him or ask the members of the Judiciary Committee for an answer to my question.

I do not desire at this time to ask it of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee or any member of the Judiciary Committee, but inasmuch as the bill originally prescribing qualifications to an attorney of a State court and limiting the powers of an attorney of a State court had been introduced by the Senator from Kentucky, and inasmuch as he had very severely criticised a suggestion I had made by way of amendment to that bill, I thought I had a right to ask him the question.

I repeat now, under what provision of the Constitution of the United States does the Senator from Kentucky get the power to limit or prescribe or qualify the rights, powers, or duties of an attorney at law of a State court? In all candor, I think that is a very serious question. The question is not whether some members of Congress are standing here with hundreds of dollars or even $1,000 of railroad money in their pockets and voting this way, that way, or the other way.

The question I submit now (we will consider other questions later) is as to the power of Congress to do that particular thing, and it will not do for the Senator from Kentucky to say that general policy requires it, or that the good of the country requires it. That is no answer. Whatever we do here we must do either under some specific grant of power from the Constitution or under some grant that comes inferentially from a specific grant.

Now, I ask the Senator from Kentucky in all candor where do we get the power to pass any bill here that will take from me, as an attorney of a State court, rights which I now possess under the laws of the State and under the rules of the court which admitted me to practice in that State? That is the question.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not want to be interrupted again until I finish this answer. The Senator from Oregon introduced an amendment to this bill, which I shall read. He either introduced it in good faith or in bad faith, and he knows which. If introduced in good faith, he had doubtless carefully considered the authority under which he could sustain it and ask the Senate to pass it. If he did not, it is a little too late to ask me such a question now. If he introduced it in bad faith, let him confess it to the country.

Amendment by Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon.

After punishing the offenses that I had prescribed in my bill, he adds:

Or from any bank or other corporation, or officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any pecuniary aid from the United States; or from any corporation or company, its officer or agent, engaged in the business of interstate commerce, by land or water, or in the business of any interstate transportation, or in the transportation of United States mails; or from any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country, any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied by any act of Congress; or from any corporation, company, or person, its officer or agent, engaged in the manufacture, production, consumption, or sale of butter, oleomargarine, tobacco, whisky, or wines, or any other product or article whatsoever in any manner now taxable or subject to taxation by any act of Congress; or of any company, firm, corporation, or person, its officer or agent, engaged in raising milch cows, or beef-cattle, or hogs, or in the manufacture or sale of butter, or of the oleo oil from which is manufactured oleomargarine.

Now, was that offered in good faith or in bad faith?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. BECK. I do.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I disbelieve wholly in the power of Congress to pass any such bill as the Senator from Kentucky introduced. I believe there is no constitutional power to pass any such bill, but I have the right as a member of this body, in view of the fact that the bill introduced by the Senator might pass and might become a law, to offer such amendments as I see proper in order to make it as reasonable as it well could be made, although unconstitutional in the end.

Mr. BECK. Then the answer is that the amendment of the Senator from Oregon was offered in bad faith, and for the purpose of making the measure odious and defeating it. The Senator from Oregon comes in the same category with the distinguished Senators who represent the Judiciary Committee in my opinion in regard to their action. Not one of them wants to pass the bill. Then why not meet the propositions of the original bill squarely, argue it upon its merits as I presented it, let those who oppose it vote against it, and let us all take the responsibility for the legislation, be it good or bad, before the country? That is the manly way to do it; that is the fair way to do it; and it, as I look at things, is the only honest way to do it.

I am not criticising other men's ideas of honesty and fair play. I am giving my own for what they are worth. I do not care at this time to answer any more of the questions of the Senator from Oregon, after reading his own amendment and hearing his own avowal in regard to it, except perhaps I ought to say, with proper respect for him, that it is not only the right but the duty of Congress, as it is of every court, as it is of every body of men, to prescribe rules and regulations which shall secure impartiality in its members; which shall prevent scandal being brought upon it by its being honestly and fairly charged that interested men, pretending to be disinterested, constitute the tribunal which is trying the case; and I say that public policy gives to Congress the right to judge of the qualifications of its own members, and of what rights they shall give up when they see fit to aspire to places in this body, and it seems to me but reasonable to require that they shall not take pay from the people and the land-grant railroads at the same time. They can not serve two masters whose interests are in direct antagonism.

I read from the Revised Statutes, when this subject was up at the last session, provisions showing that the Congress of the United States had passed laws to the effect that members of neither House of Congress shall practice in the Court of Claims. That is a limitation upon the right of the lawyers in both Houses as strong as that I propose. The natural right argued for by the Senator from Oregon would extend to the right of a member of Congress to practice in the Court of Claims. Why was that enactment made? Because the United States is interested. Is not the United States as much interested in obtaining back from these railroads millions and millions of acres of land, if it is held wrongfully, and in securing the $60,000,000 loaned to them, and for which we hold a mortgage on their property, as it is in the little matters that may be involved in a case brought before the Court of Claims?

We have a contract with these land-grant roads that they shall carry our mails upon such terms as Congress may prescribe. Ought not those terms to be prescribed by a body of impartial men and not have the attorneys of those railroads here dictating what the terms shall be? We have power and by law provide in those very charters that our troops and munitions of war shall be transported by these land-grant roads free of charge, and they deny that we have any right except to use the road-bed and put our own cars upon them if we like, and if we demand their cars they can charge for them; they are doing it now. The settlement of that question may come at any time before Congress. We have a right to give our construction as to the true meaning of their obligation to transport our troops and our munitions of war, and we have a right to decide that and all other like questions without having any railroad attorney voting in either House.

I am not seeking to legislate on abstract propositions. There are other provisions under the Thurman act which I might read, showing that there is every reason why the attorneys in land-grant cases should be excluded from our deliberations, but no reason can be given why every one of us should not be an attorney in a private controversy for a man who owns a milch cow or who is engaged in raising hogs or tobacco. Men who can not see the distinction between these two classes of cases are not the men I care to argue with. We have other provisions of law in the Revised Statutes which I read when the debate was last up, punishing with fine and imprisonment—

Every member of Congress or any officer or agent of the Government who, directly or indirectly, takes, receives, or agrees to receive, any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever, from any person for procuring, or aiding to procure, any contract, office, or place, from the Government or any Department thereof, or from any officer of the United States, for any person whatever, or for giving any such contract, office, or place to any person whomsoever, and every person who, directly or indirectly, offers or agrees to give, or gives, or bestows any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever, for the procuring or aiding to procure any such contract, office, or place, and every member of Congress who, directly or indirectly, takes, receives, or agrees to receive any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever after his election as such member, for his attention to, services, action, vote, or decision on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may then be pending, or may by law or under the Constitution be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place as such member of Congress, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Such members of Congress so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than two years and fined not more than $10,000.

Double the amount provided in the bill which I offered is prescribed by law against any member of Congress who will aid the humblest or most deserving constituent he has, no matter how much trouble he may be put to, in obtaining a post-office or a post-office contract, or in obtaining any claim from the Court of Claims, or in any way meddling with matters of that sort. Yet it is contended that limitations may be put upon the common right of the lawyer in regard to practice in the Court of Claims, in regard to all the little matters that his own constituents may need his help in; that is all right; that is law now. But it is argued that we are infringing the constitutional right of members of the bar if we tell them that as we have to deal with railroads which hold empires of our land and millions of dollars of our money, who are under contract to pay it back, who are under contract to carry our mails upon the terms we order, and to transport our munitions of war, and our soldiers free of charge, that they shall not sit or vote in either House of Congress if they insist upon acting as attorneys of those roads.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Kentucky, if he will allow me, but I wish to assure him that I do not want to put it in any personal sense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Massachusetts reported this substitute. He had better speak in his own time, and he will then be able to tell us whether he thinks in good faith that a lawyer who is attorney for a man who owns a milch cow or a pig ought not to be a member of Congress, but that he may be if he is an attorney for the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, or the Central Pacific Railroads. He can do that in his own time.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator does not want to be interrupted.

Mr. BECK. I would rather not. I think the Senator will have enough to do to defend his bill and show wherein it is an improvement on the one I originally offered.

Mr. HOAR. I will take some time when the honorable Senator from Kentucky feels good natured, as I wished to ask him a question.

Mr. BECK. I am in perfect good humor, but I want to get the facts before the Senate. The Revised Statutes again provide:

SEC. 1782. No Senator, Representative, or Delegate, after his election and during his continuance in office, and no head of a Department, or other officer or clerk in the employ of the Government, shall receive or agree to receive any compensation whatever, directly or indirectly, for any services rendered, or to be rendered, to any person, either by himself or another, in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party, or directly or indirectly interested, before any Department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission whatever. Every person offending against this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than two years, and be fined not more than $10,000, and shall, moreover, by conviction therefor, be rendered forever thereafter incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.

Is not that a limitation on the right of a member of Congress? He can not appear for his constituents, the men who have been his clients, in an honest case, and defend them before a court-martial or defend them on a charge or accusation before any of the bureaus of the Government, because if he takes one dollar or accepts a fee for any service he may have rendered, however meritorious the case of his constituent may be, he is to be forever deprived of holding any office of profit, honor, or trust, and to be fined $10,000 and imprisoned for two years.

That is the law now, and yet when I introduced a bill, because, as I said, all sorts of crimination and recrimination had been indulged in for years among the members of both Houses as to the powers and influence and interest these great railroads have in both bodies, I am told that I am seeking to overthrow the Constitution. Why, Mr. President, when the clerks in our Departments are dismissed or resign, those who may be lawyers cannot practice their profession in any of the Departments in which they were engaged for two years after that time. Is not that a limitation upon the natural right of the lawyer, of the man, to make a living? He accepts the office knowing that those limitations are imposed upon him. Worse than that, the Revised Statutes provide as follows:

SEC. 3739. No Member of or Delegate to Congress shall, directly or indirectly, himself, or by any other person in trust for him, or for his use or benefit, or on his account, undertake, execute, hold, or enjoy, in whole or in part, any contract or agreement made or entered into in behalf of the United States, by any officer or person authorized to make contracts on behalf of the United States. Every person who violates this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined $3,000.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 3741. In every such contract or agreement to be made or entered into, or accepted by or on behalf of the United States, there shall be inserted an express condition that no member of Congress shall be admitted to any share or part of such contract or agreement, or to any benefit to arise thereupon.

It is an insult, according to the view of gentlemen on the other side, against every member of Congress and in the face of every contract made to-day in the United States that he shall not have any interest in it. I should like to know, and I hope the Judiciary Committee will tell me, what they find to oppose in the bill which I presented, dealing only with corporations chartered by the United States, not seeking to interfere with those chartered by the States, not seeking to meddle with anything except the great questions that may come before us, when I insist public right, common decency, justice, and the honor of every member of this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol are involved, in having the world understand that a Senator or Representative is not here as the hireling or the retained attorney or the agent of any of the corporations with which we are dealing. In doing that am I insulting this body or any member of it? I had no such purpose and no such thought.

The first honest impulse of the Senate was developed by a vote on the yeas and nays of 37 to 11 that it was a fair and proper thing to do, so that when it was said we were under the influence of railroad corporations or had something to do with them, all of us could say to our maligners, "Go to the courts; they are open to you; you can fine and imprison me if that is the fact; I deny it." Now they can make the charges, and because there is no way of punishing anybody we can all be smirched by the intimations given out, as I read when I spoke before, on leading members of this body that they were dealing with these questions as though they were interested. However, I do not care to go over that again.

I never offered a bill in better faith since I have been a member of this body than I did this bill. I thought it was a bill for which every Senator would be glad to vote and to have it become a law, so as to prevent suggestions that any of us are in the interest or pay of railroad corporations, and I am amazed to find a bill now substituted for it that is going away so far beyond what I supposed any Senator in good faith would want to pass. I can but feel it is offered for the purpose of having it adopted as a substitute and then voted down by the very men who presented it.

All I ask is to have the vote taken as it was before, upon the bill I presented, and let gentlemen who are opposed to it vote against it, and let those who are in favor of it vote for it; but I do not want to have it killed by indirection nor to have it thrown out of this body by any subterfuge or substitute, which the men who offer it avow, as I believe they all will, that they are themselves opposed to.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I voted for the bill presented by the Senator from Kentucky. There is no doubt whatever in my mind that the Congress of the United States, like any other legislative body, has a right to prescribe the qualifications of a person to be admitted as an attorney and counselor-at-law in the courts of the United States. The State Legislatures do prescribe that a man shall have a good moral character and be a man of honorable deportment, and that must appear to the proper court—in my State from the county court—before he is permitted even to be examined for a license.

The Constitution of the United States confers upon each House the right to punish a member for disorderly behavior. Will any man say that the Senate of the United States would not have a right to punish a member whose conduct was regarded by this body as casting an imputation upon the body, whatever might be the character of that conduct? If the Senate regarded the practice of the profession of the law by one of its members in the courts of the country for a corporation created by the laws of the United States as a stain upon the character of that Senator, and thought it would bring him into suspicion before the people as being interested (because the lawyer in the old Senate Chamber and the legislator in this hall would be in an awkward attitude before the people), have we not the right in the protection of ourselves to say that such a man, if that man be a Senator of the United States, shall not be permitted to practice law in any court organized by the laws of the United States when he as a Senator may have to act on the rights of that corporation as a legislator? I think we have a clear right to do that. That is my judgment about it, and I think we ought to do it.

I admit that the bill so far as it attempts to prescribe qualifications for a lawyer in the State courts is beyond the power of this body. We can not prescribe the qualifications of a lawyer who practices in the State courts; but we can prescribe the qualifications of a lawyer who practices in the courts of the United States, and if we see proper to make such a provision we have a perfect right, in my judgment, to do it, and we can punish the man. Whilst the courts might not exclude him, whilst the court might say that this is a qualification placed upon the lawyer after he has obtained vested rights in the court by the issuance of his license, yet the question is not a question for us as to the course of the courts, but it is, "Have we a right to protect ourselves?"

If we regard the bill as a bill for the protection of the integrity of the Senate of the United States, if Congress should regard it as a bill for the protection of the integrity of the members of Congress, they have a perfect right, in my judgment, to pass the bill. About that I have no doubt, and believing that it would relieve this body and be regarded by all as a relief, and place them in a better position before the country to pass the bill, I voted for it.

At almost every session of Congress we have questions arising in this body in which great corporations are directly and immediately concerned. Take, for example, the question of the forfeiture of land grants, and there are many other great questions which spring up. One comes into this body and votes upon such a measure here, either for or against it. His client is immediately interested in the vote which is taken, and it therefore is a protection to that man to provide that no one here shall have any employment which would interfere with his action as a member of this deliberative body.

My colleague [Mr. COKE], who is now confined to his room by sickness, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, and on behalf of the minority, had prepared an amendment covering not only the members of Congress but any civil officer of the United States, limiting the provision to corporations created by the laws of the United States, not having anything to say as to what should be done in the State courts. In my judgment his amendment is directly in the right line, and I ask the Secretary to read it; and, at the proper time, I shall, on his behalf, if he is not able to do it himself, offer it as a substitute for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress, or any civil officer of the United States, to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, or any gratuity whatever, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate for consideration at its former session I expressed my decided opposition to it for many reasons. First, because there is no necessity for such a bill. If the Senator from Kentucky knows of any case in which a Senator has been corruptly influenced, the remedy provided is by expulsion from this body, and it is his duty to appeal to the Senate for the exercise of its judgment upon this subject. That is the tribunal which the Constitution provides for the preservation of the purity of character and the propriety of conduct of members here. It is not a trial under criminal laws by a different tribunal to control the independence of this body, not by submitting the members of the body to an inferior tribunal, to an inferior court, not even the Supreme Court, for accountability for their conduct in this body.

The Senator from Kentucky refers to railroad grants and proceedings for their forfeiture as a reason for passing this bill. I and others who voted against this bill voted for the forfeiture of the Northern Pacific Railroad grant. The Senator from Kentucky voted against it. We were both honest, but how can he assume that Senators are influenced here because of sympathy with railroad corporations and vote in their interest when he finds that he himself, the advocate of this bill, was voting for the confirmation of that vast appropriation of the public domain while those who voted against his bill voted for the forfeiture of that great railroad interest? In my opinion it is not possible to give a vote more in the interest of corporations and more against the interests of the people than the vote to confirm the grant of this vast empire of land in violation of the conditions of the grant, as I and many others think, and yet no one doubts that those who gave this vote are influenced by no other than honest opinions, and we know that they are not railroad attorneys nor interested in railroads.

But this bill is not needed by any existing evil, because if Senators are to be bought they will not be prevented from being bought because they can not be retained openly as attorneys. They will be bought as much with the bill of the Senator from Kentucky and a hundred such bills as they will be bought without it. If the Senate is so corrupt that it can not preserve the purity and character of its members, to whom and to whose public spirit and sense of duty the Constitution has committed the entire supervision of their conduct, it is hopeless to suppose that you can find any other tribunal in the country which can coerce them by the fear of penal conviction and punishment into the performance of their duty. There are a hundred ways in which members of Congress may be bought if they are corrupt—much more effective than by retaining them as attorneys. I venture the assertion that there is no member of this body who would accept employment by a railroad company which had interests before this body for consideration and action. And if they should the Senate would not allow it.

But, Mr. President, the bill is clearly unconstitutional. There is not the shadow of a reason or a plausible ground upon which it can be defended. The Senator from Kentucky goes to the Revised Statutes to find out what the Constitution is and what is its obligation upon us here. Let us go to the Constitution itself and see where he gets the power to enact this bill.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to interrupt him, so that he may argue the question more elaborately?

Mr. CALL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BECK. I only want to present a case to give him a chance. On the 18th day of December, 1812, a good while ago, Congress provided by law, and the President approved it, that—

> It shall not be lawful for any judge appointed under the authority of the United States to exercise the profession or employment of counsel or attorney, or to be engaged in the practice of the law. And any person offending against the prohibition of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor.

Has not Congress the same right to prescribe that its members shall not engage in the profession of law on behalf of corporations with which Congress is dealing?

Mr. CALL. Well, let us see. The bill of the Senator from Kentucky provides:

> That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisonment not more than one year, in the discretion of the court,

The Constitution of the United States provides who shall be a Senator and what his qualifications shall be. The Senator from Kentucky seeks by a statute to add another qualification to a Senator. He proposes to provide that the man who is a Senator with the constitutional qualifications shall be guilty of a misdemeanor if, being a Senator, he does that which he has a lawful right to do, and, being convicted of a misdemeanor, he then becomes subject to expulsion from the Senate. The very qualifications which the Constitution requires of him, and says no other shall be required, are made by the bill of the Senator from Kentucky a cause of disqualification by conviction in a court. The Constitution says that—

> No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

Then thirty years of age, nine years' citizenship of the United States, and inhabitancy of the State from which he shall be chosen constitute the qualifications of a Senator of the United States.

Mr. BECK. Does the Senator from Florida think that I seek to change any of those qualifications?

Mr. CALL. Yes, I do. I think——

Mr. BECK. Allow me to say that I have no idea of changing any qualifications of a Senator at all, but when a Senator with all those qualifications comes here (and the law says now he shall not practice in the Court of Claims, that he shall not take money to obtain offices, that he shall not engage in any contract, that he shall not take a bribe), I propose to say that he shall not be an attorney for a land-grant road; that is all.

Mr. CALL. The Senator unfortunately is not the law, but the bill he has presented provides that if a man nine years a citizen of the United States, thirty years of age, and who is an inhabitant of the State from which he has been chosen, in addition thereto is the attorney of a railroad corporation he shall not be a Senator. That is the effect of the Senator's bill. The Constitution says that if he has these qualifications he has a right to be a Senator. The Constitution says that he shall be subject to expulsion according to the sense of the Senate for his demeanor and conduct here. The bill of the Senator from Kentucky says that although the Senate here has given him an acquittal, although it has conformed its rules to what they regard to be right and allow him to be a railroad attorney if he sees fit, yet the court shall punish him for doing that which he does in conformity with the rules prescribed by the Senate.

The right of expulsion, of course, is in each House. By the Constitution he is amenable to expulsion for what? For any conduct which the Senate may deem a sufficient and proper cause. Now, it is no argument to come and ask for the passage of a law when another body has the constitutional power and authority to do complete and entire justice in the matter. Why refer this question to the courts? Is not this body competent, is not this body of character enough, has not this body the purity of purpose to purge itself of men who are corruptly retained and influenced by corporations? The assumption of the bill is that there is not character enough in these Senators, the representatives of States and the people of the States, to preserve purity and uprightness and disinterestedness in this body.

But that is not all, Mr. President. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] very properly called attention to that feature of the bill of the Senator from Kentucky which provides that a member of Congress shall accept no retainer or employment from any railroad corporation which had a land grant from the United States in any contingency or under any circumstances, whether it had any interest in the legislation of Congress or had none, and which punishes him and makes him a criminal. Where is the authority of this body to do that?

The Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] says that Congress has authority to regulate the practice of the law in the different courts, to prescribe who shall be lawyers admitted to practice. But what of that? This is not a question of practice in the courts; it is a question by which a Senator of the United States is limited in the civil employments in which he has a right to engage. It is a question whether the Senate or Congress have a right to say to me I shall pursue this, that, or the other employment. It is a question whether Congress has a right to say what contracts a Senator may make. If corporations be corruptly influencing his conduct here, the Constitution has made him responsible to you. If they are not, what right has Congress to say what contracts a man shall make?

A citizen of a State is amenable here to the grants of the Constitution, as stated by the Senator from Oregon, with complete ability to do everything not forbidden by the Constitution of the United States; and where comes the authority of this body to say what contract a citizen of a State shall make? If you limit it to a Senator, the Constitution has said what shall be the qualifications of a Senator. If you divorce the senatorial character and make him a citizen, as this bill proposes to do, and prescribe what business relations he shall enter into, there is no part or parcel of the bill that has even a plausible ground of constitutionality.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me again to make a suggestion?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. I made the suggestion before I argued the question. The right of any man to trade, to sell or buy goods is undoubted; yet when General Grant sought to make the greatest merchant in New York his Secretary of the Treasury he was met by the fact that for that particular office a man who was engaged in that sort of business could not act as Secretary of the Treasury, and he had to let him go. That was no infringement of Mr. Stewart's right to have the particular place, but he could not hold that place if engaged in that business. Now all I propose to say is that if a lawyer proposes to be a Senator he shall not be an attorney for a land-grant railroad with whom we have important litigation.

Mr. CALL. Exactly. The law was perfectly competent and altogether proper in regard to the qualifications of the Secretary of the Treasury; but here is the difference: The Senator from Kentucky says, and says truly, he wants to pass a law that a Senator shall be something else besides an inhabitant of a State and a citizen of the United States for nine years and thirty years of age; he wants a law that says he shall not be a Senator if he is an attorney of somebody; and that is precisely the difficulty in the case. The difficulty is that the Senator wants a statute to provide an additional qualification for being a Senator or a Member of Congress, and one for which there is no necessity, except upon the assumption that this body and the other House are too corrupt to purge themselves of men who abuse their public trust.

The office of Secretary of the Treasury of course is a creature of Congress, and so also the office of judge may be regulated, though it is not the creature of Congress, by criminal laws.

Mr. GRAY. So are corporations creatures of law.

Mr. CALL. Certainly corporations are, but corporations are not Senators. That is the difficulty in the case.

Members of this body are both Senators and citizens of States. As Senators, for their official conduct in this body, they are immediately amenable to the Senate alone, and mediately to the people of the several States by whose Legislatures they are chosen. They are not subject for their official conduct to laws which the other House of Congress and the President enact; neither House can confer on the other or on the President any part of the power of expulsion, which is only the power of judging of the propriety of the conduct of a Senator as a Senator, and condemning him for it; a member of Congress as a member of Congress. As Senator he does not and can not practice.

It is as a citizen of a State that he practices law and takes retainers, and makes contracts, and pursues one or another occupation. Now the bill of the Senator from Kentucky and the amended bill of the committee propose to enact a law that a citizen of a State being a Senator shall not make a contract of one kind or another. It assumes authority and power over the citizens of States to declare what contracts they may or may not make, authority and power in Congress to allow some and prohibit others. If Congress has power to declare what contracts the citizens of States may or may not make in one case it has it in all others, for there is no grant concerning it and no limitation or restriction of it. These propositions are too plain for doubt or argument.

I presume the Senator from Kentucky, and all other Senators, will admit that you cannot make a law to indict, convict, and punish a Senator because he entertains one opinion or another, because he advocates this or the other side of any question, because he votes one way or another, because as a Senator he has conducted himself with propriety or impropriety, because he has acted from patriotic or unpatriotic motives, because he has acted from selfish, from corrupt, or incorrupt motives. You can not make a law to indict, convict, and punish a citizen of a State for making contracts lawful in his State, which the State alone can make unlawful, and which no one claims Congress has any right or power to legislate about. But the argument is that although you can not by law punish, regulate, or control a Senator or Member of Congress in his or their official conduct, and although Congress can not by law prescribe the conduct of a citizen or punish him for acts done in pursuance of laws of his State under their rightful power, yet by putting two things together, neither of which you have any power to do, you in some way acquire the power.

But, Mr. President, the whole of this subject is a reflection upon Congress, and that is the point of view in which it has its most serious aspect. It is a declaration by ourselves that we have not the virtue and the courage and the character to perform our constitutional function and duty here of keeping this body pure of corrupt motive and of purging it of men who unworthily perform their functions. That is the declaration of this bill, and, sir, it is not true. Whatever motives may influence men in this body, as they do outside, of sympathy with, of indulgence towards great corporate interests, whatever convictions as to those great corporations there may be, I undertake to say that in this body there has been no considerable influence exerted by a corruptly influenced opinion favorable to corporations.

But, Mr. President, the amendment from the Judiciary Committee is equally objectionable with the original bill. It is equally unconstitutional; it is equally unnecessary; and I shall propose, if it is proper now to do so, to strike out all after the word "Congress" on the eleventh line of the amendment. The difference is simply this: The bill of the Senator from Kentucky proposes to punish with fine and imprisonment "any member of either House of Congress" who accepts "employment as attorney at law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States."

The amendment of the Judiciary Committee proposes to inflict a like punishment—when measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress.

A member of Congress is not punished under the amendment if he accepts a retainer when measures are not pending before Congress affecting that particular corporation. What possible reason can there be for prohibiting a man from practicing law as an attorney for any person because he is a member of either House, when there is no question concerning the person employing him in any respect whatever? I submit, therefore, that to strike out all after that will to those who believe Congress has the power and believe that the two Houses are too corrupt to purge themselves of men who abuse their trust—those who believe those two propositions—that bill would answer all the purposes of the Senator from Kentucky.

For myself, I believe that the proper power is in Congress, in each House of Congress, not by statute, but by expulsion; and whenever we become so degraded that we can not trust ourselves to perform our high constitutional functions, then we can not by statute give power to some other tribunal to punish us for our own failure to perform our duty.

I am prepared to vote for a rule of the Senate prohibiting Senators from acting as attorney of any corporation, or from having important interests before Congress. In my opinion that is the proper and only remedy, and a very complete and efficient one.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suppose there will hardly be a vote on this matter to-night. I desire to say something on the question before a vote is taken.

Mr. MORRILL. I will move an executive session.

Mr. HOAR. I was about first to ask that the unfinished business for to-morrow be laid before the Senate, and then I will move an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business for to-morrow be laid before the Senate. That action will be taken if there be no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of civil officers."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator makes his motion for an executive session, the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for your information a report from the Secretary of State, inclosing the correspondence which has passed between the Department of State and the governments of Switzerland and France on the subject of international copyright since the date of my message of July 9, 1886, on this question.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 15, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message of the President with the accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same subject-matter is before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MANDERSON. Will the Senator allow me to make a report from the Committee on Printing?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with law, the accounts rendered to and settled with the First Comptroller of the Treasury for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, with a recommendation that the document be not printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska, from the Committee on Printing, makes a report recommending that the document referred to by him be not printed. It will be so ordered, unless objection be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 16, at 12 o'clock m.
